I tell my friend that from our stand-point we think the war naturally caused the Government to exercise a great many powers under the strain of necessity which it is not necessary for it to exercise in time of peace; and we feel that the tendency which originated because of the war, because of the extraordinary powers the General Government was then called upon to exercise, is not to consolidate the powers of this Government, but to consolidate the Government itself by weakening and absorbing the just powers of the States. Now I want to ask my friend, while he will never give up and the people of Iowa will never give up the right to go to New York and through New York and through New Orleans to the sea and thence to foreign countries with their produce, and it is of inestimable value to them, will the people of Iowa give up the reserved rights which they retained for the purpose of protecting their own citizens? Will you give up the right of the people of Iowa and Iowa alone to protect her citizens in making those crops that they want to carry to foreign countries, in administering the laws for the protection of personal liberty and personal security and private property?

The delegated powers were vested in the General Government for general purposes. All powers in relation to specific purposes and local purposes were reserved by the States and to the States or the people thereof. Now, I say to my friend we insist on the one hand that while we concede to the General Government all the powers delegated to it by the Constitution and are willing that they should be exercised with all proper vigor, we at the same time wish to secure to the States the right to exercise all their reserved powers without interference on the part of the General Government; and as this power of electing members of Congress is primarily vested by the Constitution in the States and only ultimately in the Federal Government and the contingencies which the framers said should exist before the ultimate power could be exercised do not now exist, we simply say it is better and more constitutional to adhere to the Constitution, regarding it as a primary power in the States which they are both able and willing to exercise, and therefore it ought not to be exercised by the General Government.

I want my friend to know and I want his people to know that the patriotic, the manly, the catholic, the national, the unsectional sentiments which fell from his lips, and which I know animate his bosom, meet with a warm and hearty response in mine and in the bosoms of my people. He and such as he, whether republicans or democrats, we can take to our arms and hearts and call our fellow-citizens forever.

Mr. THURMAN, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) Mr. President, I did not expect to say one word on this bill, but the spirit moves me to say a very few words now. I shall not weary the Senate.

The opposition to this bill proceeds upon a principle that is utterly, absolutely indefensible. It proceeds upon the ground that it is the duty of Congress to make appropriations to execute every law that is upon the statute-book, whether that law be constitutional or not, whether it be politic or not, whether it be just or not, whether it be condemned by the American people or not, yet that it is our duty to make the appropriations to carry it into effect. The principle upon which this bill is opposed would require Congress to make appropriations to carry into effect the alien and sedition law if it were in force now; it would require Congress to make appropriations to carry into effect the fugitive slave law if slavery still existed and that law was in force; it would require Congress to make appropriations to carry the most detrimental or the most unconstitutional law that ever was enacted into effect by appropriation if that law had not been repealed. Sir, such a principle never obtained in this or any other government that had a legislative body that made appropriations. I would like to know how I am bound or how any member of the Senate is bound to regard a law as constitutional because some former Congress enacted that law. Take your election laws that have been spoken about. I never was clearer in my life upon any proposition than that those laws are unconstitutional. I have not the slightest doubt about it; I cannot raise a doubt in my mind as to their unconstitutionality; and am I to be forsworn by voting money to carry them into execution? If I do, I make myself particeps criminis. That is the amount of it, that is the result of it. No, sir. A law is passed; that law is a good law or a bad law; it is an unconstitutional law or it is a constitutional law. A subsequent Congress may be unable to repeal it, but that subsequent Congress has an absolute right to use all the powers the Constitution confers upon it upon the question whether that law shall be executed or not, and if that law cannot be executed without appropriating the people's money to execute it, then a man who believed it unconstitutional and votes to expend the people's money to execute it is a perjured man and nothing less. That is the truth of the matter.

Sir, this is no new question. A treaty is a law. The Constitution of the United States declares that this Constitution and the laws made under it and treaties made in pursuance of it are the supreme law of the land; and yet it is three-quarters of a century ago since the House of Representatives asserted its right, notwithstanding a treaty had been negotiated and signed by the President and ratified by the Senate and confirmed by Great Britain, to refuse to appropriate money to carry that treaty into execution; and the best writers on constitutional law——

Mr. BLAINE. When was that?

Mr. THURMAN. The Jay treaty.

Mr. BLAINE. Did not Congress do it?

Mr. THURMAN. Congress did ultimately do it.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator certainly does not quote that as showing that Congress did not vote the money. Congress did it.

Mr. THURMAN. I say they asserted the right——

Mr. BLAINE. I know a minority asserted the right.

Mr. THURMAN. I will bring in the record if the Senator wants it, and I will show him that the very writers on the Constitution have intimated the right of the House of Representatives to refuse it, and I heard the late Senator from Maine, Mr. Fessenden, in one of the last speeches he ever made in this body declare that that was his judgment upon the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. MAXEY. I will refer the Senator from Ohio to the case of the minister to Portugal in 1867, when the republican party had control of both Houses. That mission was established by law in 1856; and in 1857 by a clause in the law Congress in terms refused to pay that minister his salary so long as a particular person was minister.

Mr. THURMAN. I remember it perfectly well. I know the gentleman who was minister.

Mr. MAXEY. I would call attention to one other law passed at the same session, which was that cadets from States declared to be in rebellion against the Government appointed after the 1st of January, 1867, should not receive pay or subsistence. They were refused the benefit of the appropriation. They were not turned out of the Army. By section 1094 of the Revised Statutes they were made part of the Army; they were not dismissed, but the appropriation act in terms declared that no part of the money should be used for the payment of those cadets. That law was passed in 1867 also.

Mr. THURMAN. I am not vindicating the action of Congress in either of those cases, either in respect to the minister to Portugal or in respect to those cadets; but I do say that nothing is fairer than that if a majority of Congress are opposed to a law and cannot repeal it, yet they are not bound to vote the money of the people, which is in their keeping, to execute that law which they believe to be unconstitutional. Nay, I go further than that and say if they believe the law to be impolitic——

Mr. BLAINE. And therefore the citizen is not bound to obey the law by the same reasoning!

Mr. THURMAN. Well, now, the Senator from Maine would not make his bread at the practice of the law, or he never would ask me such a question as that. [Laughter.] Absolutely he would not make his bread at the practice of the law.

Mr. President, what is this body? Is this Congress bound by a decision of a former Congress as to what is constitutional? Can anybody say that? And if a law is passed that is unconstitutional, are we to stultify ourselves and become participes criminis in the violation of the Constitution by voting the people's money to execute that law? No, sir, nothing of the kind.

But, leaving that, I come to another matter. Here is a new idea started, forsooth, and that is that if an appropriation bill does not appropriate for everything, it ought to be vetoed or it ought to be voted down. Is there in all this bill an appropriation that is objectionable? Is there in all this bill an appropriation of the people's money that is not pursuant to the Constitution? No man will say so. Has there been a motion to strike out an appropriation in the bill, to lessen it? No, sir; the only motion that has been made was to increase one of them. The appropriations are unexceptionable; no man denies it. Who, then, has a right to vote against the bill, much more to veto the bill, because it does not appropriate for something else? Suppose this bill did not appropriate for the Ordnance department at all—certainly it is our duty to appropriate for the Ordnance department, as it is a necessary part of the Army; but suppose the bill made no appropriation for the Ordnance department, we should have to take the responsibility; but would that justify anybody in voting against the bill? Would that justify anybody in vetoing the bill? What right would anybody have to say that in due time according to our judgment we would not appropriate for the Ordnance department?

This bill does not appropriate for troops when they are used as a police force at the polls. Put any construction you please upon that language; I do not care what construction you place upon it; put any construction upon it you please, it is a failure to appropriate for the Army when used for a particular purpose, just precisely as the republicans said they would not appropriate for the Army if it were used out in Kansas many years ago. Suppose you do it, suppose you put that construction upon the bill, it is a simple case of a failure to appropriate, and nothing else; it repeals no law; it leaves the law to stand; it is a simple case of a failure to appropriate, and nothing more or nothing less than that; and no man who says that it is his duty here to support the Government by appropriations, if he is a sane man, can for one moment defend his vote against this bill because it does not appropriate for that specific purpose if the other appropriations in the bill are right. That is what this is.

Mr. President, I grant it is our duty to make appropriations to support the Government. There might be a question whether or not the Army is necessary to support the Government in these piping times of peace. There are people who think that an Army is not necessary at all; I am not one of them. I am not an enemy of the Army; but there are people who think that an Army is not necessary at all, and if they were to bring about the disbandment of the Army by refusing all appropriations for it, all that could be said would be that they had given effect to their opinion by exercising their constitutional right to refuse to appropriate for an institution that is not necessary to carry on the Government. It is a single question of judgment.

There was a time when a large party in this country thought a Navy was not necessary, and now if Congress were to refuse appropriations for a Navy—it would be bad policy I admit; it might be very unjust, I admit, to some people who are in the Navy; but who can say that Congress could not lawfully and constitutionally refuse to appropriate for a Navy if it thought there ought not to be a Navy?

This idea that if all acts that could possibly be conceived had been placed on the statute-book, every succeeding Congress is obliged to vote the people's money, to tax the people and pour out their treasure, to support these unconstitutional or oppressive or impolitic laws—to sustain such a view as that is to deal a harder blow at this Government than ever has been dealt to it yet; it is to utterly destroy the constitutional power of Congress—no, I will not say utterly destroy, because I do not like big words, I do not like exaggeration, but it is to weaken it so that it would hardly be worth having.

Mr. President, I have heard some questions put by my friends, what does this section or that section or the other section of this bill mean? That reminded me of the passage of a certain measure of great moment in this body. I remember when a bill came out of the bowels of a republican caucus, and was laid on our desks in print one morning——

Mr. WITHERS. The republicans do not do that, do they? [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. Oh, yes, it came out of a republican caucus; it came ostensibly from the Committee on Finance, but the democrat on that committee was never summoned to attend the meeting of the committee, if any such meeting ever took place. I have his own word for that, and he was the only democratic member who was on the committee. That bill came into this body, was printed and laid on our tables in the morning, and before the sun set that day, against all our expostulations, against all our entreaties for time to consider it, that bill to resume specie payments in the United States—one of the worst measures, in some respects, in its effect on the people that ever was enacted by Congress—that bill, by party discipline, and without debate on the republican side, was pressed to its passage before the sun set; yes, sir, long before the sun set that day; and when we demanded of the chairman of the Finance Committee "what does this mean in this bill?" when I demanded it, he quietly turned to me—I do not pretend to use his exact words, but perhaps the RECORD will bear me out in them, certainly the amount of it was, "Judge THURMAN, you are better able to judge of that than I am; you are an abler lawyer than I." I demanded the meaning of the bill upon a most important provision in it. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] who was a member of the Finance Committee, but had not been consulted about the bill, demanded "what does that mean?" The chairman of the committee refused to answer. The Senator from Missouri, now the Secretary of the Interior, demanded "what does this language mean?" but no answer was given; no answer ever was given; and without one word of explanation of the meaning of that bill, it was simply said to us, "you can judge as well as we can what that language means," and that bill was forced through this body in that way.

After that, I think I am entitled to say to the gentlemen who assisted in that performance, study the language of this bill for yourselves; it is not language depending upon facts to be ascertained and brought in by a committee; it is language that speaks for itself; it requires no extraneous fact to understand it; interpret that language for yourselves, for statutes are not construed by what was said in the Legislature that passed them.

I have this further to say to my friend from Virginia who has this bill in charge who has been questioned, that since the day has come when the language of Senators and Representatives in Congress is quoted in veto messages of the President in order to interpret the action of Congress by it, quoting what no court would permit to be quoted in construing a statute—since the language uttered in this Chamber and in the other Chamber is quoted to stop the legislation of this country by executive vetoes, let those who are opposed to this bill interpret it for themselves and let the Executive interpret it for himself. I do not think any of you, my friends, have any ambition to appear to figure in an executive message. Let those who are opposed to this bill interpret its language. They speak the English language; they know the English language; nine-tenths of them are lawyers; the President is a lawyer. Let them interpret the bill for themselves. I do not propose to give to the President any more occasion to immortalize me if I could be immortalized by—no, I will not finish that sentence; I will let that alone. "Sober second thought" tells me to stop.

Mr. President, one remark more about this bill. I sat in the chair and I did not want to make myself very conspicuous and I did not want to be jumping up and running out of the chair making speeches and then running back. I sat in the chair and I saw this bill amended in various particulars. It pained me to see it. I do not want to negative one single letter, and I hope it will not be amended in a single letter. I will vote against every amendment without the slightest regard to the merits of the amendment. I say it openly, I do not propose to send this bill back to the other end of the Capitol after last night's experience, if I can help it. I do not propose anything of that sort. I do not propose to prolong this session, already too long prolonged, by delaying the passage of this bill. I will vote against every amendment to this bill no matter what it is, without the least regard to its merits, and vote to pass this bill precisely verbatim et literatim as it came from the House of Representatives. That is what I propose to do. If there were another temper in the city of Washington—I will not say where—if there was that deliberate temper that ought to attend the enactment of all laws, I myself would have an amendment to offer to this bill; I do not know that it would make it any better; I think certainly it would make it no worse; but I will not move it. I will not move to cross one t or dot one i of this bill. I propose to vote for it just as it came from the House.

Mr. BLAINE. I only want a moment or two, Mr. President. The honorable Senator from Ohio is never modest about parading himself as a great lawyer nor in saying discourteous things to other persons who may not be so well skilled in the law as he; but I think it will stand as a very remarkable declaration, whether coming from a great lawyer or from an ignorant lawyer, that a subsequent Congress is under no obligation whatever to regard the enactment of a previous Congress as constitutional so long as it has not been pronounced unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, and that if the Senate is under the control of the democratic party and the House is under the control of the republican party, one body, the Senate, has the right, according to the doctrine laid down by the Senator from Ohio, to stop the appropriation for any object provided for by law if, in the judgment of its majority, that law is not constitutional, although no power has said it was unconstitutional, and it was enacted under all the forms of law.

Let me suppose a case and let me see where the honorable Senator's logic would lead to. Suppose we change by law the mode of collecting customs, and the next House of Representatives coming in believe that mode of collecting customs is unconstitutional, and they do not appropriate any money for it. When the honorable Senator stated his position, I put a question to him drawing his attention to the fact that it implied that if Congress was not bound to obey the laws of the land, neither was an individual. I say that the very moment Congress should refuse to appropriate money for the collection of the customs under a law which one House might deem unconstitutional, the importer could just on the same ground refuse to pay fhe duties.

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. Suppose that the law imposing the duties is unconstiutional.

Mr. BLAINE. Ah! I am not saying that; I am talking about one branch of Congress determining its unconstitutionality. If it is not constitu tional, it is void. But the Senator stands here and says that Congressmay f or itself, without the repeal of a law, this one branch of Congress in opposition to the other branch may refuse to appropriate to carry out a law that is on the statute-book, that has never been repealed, that has never been adjudged unconstitutional; he says that if in the simple personal judgment of the majority that sit in these seats it is unconstitutional, they may refuse to vote the appropriations.

Mr. THURMAN. And they are perjured if they do not.

Mr. BLAINE. Then you perjured yourself three or four times in voting for this very law.

Mr. THURMAN. Never knowingly.

Mr. BLAINE. Knowingly! Ignorance of the law excuses no man, [laughter,] especially a great lawyer, and especially a Senator. You have once, twice, three times, four times, five times voted appropriations for that which you say now perjured yourself.

Mr. THURMAN. TheSenator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no, that will not do.

Mr. THURMAN. I never voted for an appropriation in my life for the Army specifically to be used at the polls, and every use of the Army at the polls was a violation, in my judgment, of the law.

Mr. BLAINE. You voted for appropriations for supervisors and deputy marshals and the Army without any regard to that, right straight along——

Mr. THURMAN. Never.

Mr. BLAINE. And I say that the position the Senator from Ohio has announced here to-day will justify every law-breaker in this country to stand right up and say, "I do not believe this law is constitutional, and my authority is Judge THURMAN; he is a great lawyer, for he says it himself, [laughter,] says it himself in the Senate of the United States, and says that anybody else who pretends to dispute his position is not a man who can possibly get his living in the practice of the law, [laughter,] says it with that kind of senatorial courtesy and dignity that impresses the whole country, and therefore I am going to break this law." That is the doctrine the Senator lays down here to-day, that we are not bound to appropriate money to carry out a law if in our individual judgment that law is not constitutional; and then the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] aids him by bringing up the case of the minister to Portugal, an appropriation for whom the late Mr. Stevens by his great personal influence in the House of Representatives was enabled to keep out. The same republican Congress, or a Congress both branches of which were republican, afterward paid the salary of Mr. Harvey in full, and there never was any doubt in the world that he ought to have drawn it right along. They made haste to let him have it. For one I have it on record that I never voted except to pay it all the time, and whether I approve of a mission or not, whether I think a mission is sound constitutionally or not, if both branches of Congress have passed a law establishing it and the salary is his by law, I am bound by my oath to vote money to pay it, because on the oath of the Senator from Ohio and myself that law of Congress is constitutional which has not been adjudged otherwise, and your individual opinion, great a lawyer as you may be, is no better than that page's, not one bit. The highest official and the humblest citizen of this country alike are governed by the law while it is a law; and the position that the Senator took is simply paradoxical. He says we go on here, Congress after Congress, appropriating for a law that is unconstitutional. If the people want it repealed, it will be repealed. No law can remain on the statute-book over four years in this country against the will of the people; and until the will of the people, exercised through constitutional means of electing Representatives to Congress and Senators by the States and the President through the electors is made manifest, whatever is on the statute-book is law, and the Senator from Ohio is but breathing sedition and violation of plain constitutional duty when he talks as he has this afternoon.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I did, when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] was on the floor, refer to the case of the minister to Portugal. That mission was established in 1856. On the 25th of July, 1866, in the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill the name "Portugal" was dropped out of the list of missions appropriated for in the bill. On the 27th of February, 1867, in the appropriation bill for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government, when it comes to Portugal it says:

Provided, That no money shall be paid to the present minister resident at Portugal out of any fund whatever, and this provision shall continue in force until repealed by Congress.

And in the same act it is said:

And no money hereby or otherwise appropriated shall be paid for the support of an American legation at Rome from and after the 30th day of June, 1867.

Then you will find on the 28th, the very next day, in the bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy, section 4:

That no part of the money appropriated by this or any other act shall be applied to the pay or subsistence of any cadet from any State declared to be in rebellion against the Government of the United States, appointed after the 1st day of January, 1867, until such State shall have been restored to its original relations to the Union.

These cadets were lawfully appointed; the President had a right to appoint ten at large from any portion of the United States that he pleased. When they were appointed they became by operation of law, section 1094 of the Revised Statutes, a part and parcel of the Army, and subject to the rules and articles of war and to punishment for violation thereof. They were not dismissed from the academy; they were not discharged from the academy; they were not tried by court-martial and dismissed for any offense whatever. They were appointed there lawfully, sent there lawfully; but that section declared that they should not be paid, although bound to serve and punishable for neglect of duty. The sins of the fathers were visited on the heads of the sons. Again, I have been taught by republicans to suppose that Charles Sumner was a great constitutional lawyer; and upon the very point to which the Senator from Maine referred in relation to the minister to Portugal I venture to read a very few lines from what that Senator said in this Chamber on the 18th of February, 1867, in the progress of that debate:

The only question before us now is whether we can, so far as this minister is concerned, refuse all appropriations.

That was the direct issue joined.

There I believe the rule is clear and absolutely beyond question. If it were not clear and absolutely beyond question, I think that Congress would be shorn of one of its best powers. It is no answer to say that it is a power that in our history has been rarely exercised, for the occasion for its exercise happily has been very rare; but Congress has exercised it now, and I submit that it is a power beyond question. It was a power, as the Senator from Maine has reminded you, recognized in English history. It was perfectly familiar to the framers of the Constitution of the United States, for it had been proclaimed in a work of authority which had been read at that time by all of our fathers. I hold in my hand the work of Delolme on the British Constitution, from which, with your permission, I will read a few words, for they seem to settle this constitutional question. I read as follows—

And this is from Delolme:

"The King of England, therefore, has the prerogative of commanding armies"—

I am coming down to the point we have here—

"and equipping fleets, but without the concurrence of his Parliament he cannot maintain them."

That is from Delolme. Then Mr. Sumner says:

Just the same as our President has the power of commanding armies and of equipping fleets; but what can he do without the power of Congress? Delolme then goes on:

"He can bestow places and emoluments"—

So can the President—

"but without his Parliament he cannot pay the salaries attending on them."

Is not the position of Congress in this regard at least as high as that of the British Parliament?

Then Delolme says:

"In a word, the royal prerogative, destitute as it is of the power of imposing taxes, is like a vast body which cannot of itself accomplish its motion, or, if you please, it is like a ship completely equipped, but from which the Parliament can at pleasure draw off the water and leave it aground, and also set it afloat again by granting subsidies."

Then Mr. Sumner says:

Now, all that Congress proposes to do at this moment, so far as I understand, is, according to the language of this writer, to draw off the water and leave the ship aground.

Clearly, emphatically, distinctly asserting the power of Congress to refuse to make an appropriation to carry out an existing law, and this too without repeal of the existing law.

Mr. Sumner adds:

Perhaps the time may come when, again adopting the language of this writer, Congress may set the ship afloat again. That time has not yet arrived.

That was in 1867, when the two Houses of Congress were under the control of the republican party. They have set the example; they have enforced it here by one of the strongest constitutional lawyers that the republican party has ever had in this body, and he re-enforced himself by a writer whose authority upon great questions of that kind is regarded by all good constitutional lawyers as of the highest importance.

Then, sir, I have read the law passed by a republican Congress which in terms absolutely, where the mission to Portugal had been established by law, which law Congress did not pretend to repeal, but prohibited any portion of the money appropriated for diplomatic purposes being paid to that minister out of any fund whatever, and that provision was to continue in force until repealed by Congress. I have read also the law passed by a republican Congress declaring that where cadets were at West Point, constitutionally, lawfully appointed, serving the country, not tried by court-martial, not dismissed, but in the full exercise of their privileges and rights as cadets, should be left without pay, and so to remain there without pay until the States which were declared to be in rebellion on the 2d of March, 1867, should be restored to their original relations with the Union. The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge.

Then, so far as the republican party are concerned, they are estopped from denying the position which is laid down in the bill which came from the House to us; their mouths are gagged; and when the Senator from Maine says that there is no authority for it and brands this as he has done this evening, I bring up not only the laws passed by Congress when both Houses were in the possession of the republican party, but their greatest lawyer sustained the absolute propriety of those laws. Now somebody else's ox is gored. We can stand it if you can.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I am very sorry that a remark which I made and which I intended to be jocose, (but somehow or other my jocose remarks do not seem very agreeable in the opinion of some people,) was considered by the Senator from Maine as discourteous to him. I certainly intended nothing of the kind; and if there was any discourtesy in it, I wish to withdraw it. I intended nothing of the kind whatever. I have done all I could to allay passion and ill-feeling and heat in the discussion of this bill. I thought there was too much of it already, and I would not certainly willingly throw another firebrand into a fire that is burning brightly enough already.

The Senator from Maine said that on my theory I had done wrong myself in voting for divers appropriation bills. He is entirely mistaken if he will look at the bills. If there is one single one of them that ever appropriated money specifically to carry out these laws, one single one of them that ever specifically appropriated money for the use of the Army at the polls, I never saw it. I could not vote against an appropriation bill general in its terms, because the President or the Secretary of War might misuse the appropriations. I was bound to presume they would use the appropriations pursuant to the Constitution. I was not bound to suppose that they would misuse them. Therefore I am not conscious of ever having voted for an appropriation bill that contained any appropriation specifically in the bill that made it obnoxious to the Constitution.

As to the matter of supervisors of election, I am quite sure that I never voted for the act putting them upon the permanent appropriation list; but if I had done it inadvertently it would prove nothing except that we do not always pay that attention to appropriation bills which we ought to do. In fact, until the last session I do not recollect, although it may be a defect of memory at present, a case of the yeas and nays being called on an appropriation bill. There may have been such an instance, but I cannot recall it, it made so little impression on me. These bills usually pass as a matter of course. I never shall forget the surprise with which I saw an appropriation bill, making appropriations, according to my recollection, of about $2,000,000, pass this body at the first session that I had a seat here. There were in this Senate at the time that bill passed just four Senators. There was the Senator from Maine, (Mr. Fessenden,) the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who sat, if I recollect aright, where the Senator from New York now sits. There was the Senator from Iowa, (Mr. Harlan,) chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was the Indian appropriation bill. I went over and sat by the side of Mr. Fessenden while the bill was under consideration, and my friend from Minnesota (Mr. Ramsey) sat in his seat over yonder and wrote letters. We four were all.

Mr. CONKLING. He was writing to the Indians no doubt. [Great laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know what he was writing about. There were four of us, and we voted away $2,000,000 of the people's money at that sitting.

Mr. CARPENTER. Five hundred thousand dollars apiece. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. Five hundred thousand dollars apiece. [Laughter.] We did not vote that exactly, for there sat Mr. Fessenden with the bill before him and there sat the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, with a long list of amendments to offer; and when he offered an amendment Mr. Fessenden, if he approved it, would nod, and then it went in; if he shook his head it did not go in, for there could not be a vote; there was no quorum. And so they two with their nods and their shakes shook out of the Treasury $2,000,000. [Laughter.] That is the way appropriation bills too often pass and generally do pass; but now and then when you can get a little bit of Cayenne pepper in a bill in the shape of politics you can have more yeas and nays than ever were called perhaps on the greatest measure that ever passed Congress.

So much for that. Now the Senator from Maine thinks, if I understood his proposition aright, that no citizen has a right to resist an act of Congress, no matter how unconstitutional it may be, until some court has decided it to be unconstitutional, and his logic must require that it shall have been decided to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, because the decision of an inferior court would not bind.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator say as a lawyer that the decision of an inferior court is not conclusive until it has been reversed by the court above?

Mr. THURMAN. The decision of no inferior court can be binding in respect to the constitutionality of an act of Congress if the question can be taken to the Supreme Court. It is the decision of the Supreme Court that is alone absolutely binding. That doctrine will not do at all. Why, bless my soul, that doctrine has been repudiated. Men have been executed in England for violations of law for executing statutes that the English courts held to be violations of the British constitution. It will not do at all. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Maine to a few provisions of the Constitution to see whether or not a man is bound to obey a law until it is declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be unconstitutional. Article 3 of the amendments to the Constitution says:

> No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house, without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Suppose in this year of grace, 1879, Congress should pass a law quartering troops of the United States in the residence of the Senator from Maine, would he be bound to let them come in, would he be bound to wait, to get out of his house, he and his family and his wife and his children, "and his cousins and his uncles and his aunts," [laughter,] all get out of the house, and bring an action and carry it to the Supreme Court of the United States and have it decided there in order to know whether this provision of the Constitution should be obeyed? If he were to slay the soldier that attempted under such an unconstitutional law to come into his house, I appeal to every lawyer in this Senate Chamber if it would not be a clear case of justifiable homicide. There is not one of us but would answer that question in that way.

Furthermore:

> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Now, suppose Congress passes a law in plain violation of that, and authorizes the Army, or the supervisors of election, or anybody else, to go and search the Senator from Maine and take out of his pocket all his correspondence. Must he go to the Supreme Court to find out whether this man has a right to stop him on the street or to go into his house and search his pockets? Must he do that before he resists? Not much, Mr. President. Painful as it would be to him, painful as it is to any man to shed blood, he would not be a man if he did not take blood in defense of his constitutional rights.

It is a perilous thing for a man to resist the execution of an act of Congress on the ground that it is unconstitutional. He takes great responsibility on himself——

Mr. BLAINE. I thought the honorable Senator would review his own argument.

Mr. THURMAN. I am not changing it at all. The Senator ought not to interrupt me in that way. The Senator ought not to sit in his seat and interrupt me right in the midst of a sentence in that way.

I say that it is a perilous thing to do. Why? Because the presumption is that the laws we pass here are constitutional. We know they are not all so, and many a one of them has been declared——

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question on my feet?

Mr. THURMAN. I will finish this sentence first and then I will. Many and many a law we have passed has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. Still it is a perilous thing for a man to attempt to resist a law of Congress on the ground that it is unconstitutional. It may be that the decision will be against him, and he stakes perhaps everything upon the decision that may be made about that law.

Mr. BLAINE. Now——

Mr. THURMAN. Wait till I am through. But some of the greatest historic characters in this world have staked everything upon that issue. It was precisely that that has made the name of John Hampden immortal as long as liberty shall have a dwelling-place on this globe. Now I will hear the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. I was going to ask the honorable Senator this: I suppose there is nothing more repugnant to the Anglo-Saxon sense of liberty than unreasonable search, but by that I understand the honorable Senator's construction to be that every man is to be the judge of what is an unreasonable search.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not say anything——

Mr. BLAINE. I thought the honorable Senator said, if an unreasonable search was made, the man ought to resist unto blood, and could be the judge. Now I am prepared to discuss that particular clause of the Constitution with the honorable Senator a little.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator must not misrepresent me. I know the Senator's skill at that. He puts words into my mouth when I never said anything of the kind. If that is the kind of criticism the Senator is going to make, I must ask him to resume his seat.

Mr. BLAINE. I will take the liberty of following the Senator, then.

Mr. THURMAN. I never said that a man was to be the judge of last resort. I was not speaking the language of the resolutions of 1798 with the interpretation placed on them by my predecessor in this Senate, and who was also my predecessor in the chair that I now am locum tenens of, and who said he stood by the resolutions of 1798, and that he would never surrender the proper interpretation of them, that a State was the judge for itself in the last resort, both of the grievance and of the mode and measure of redress. I am not saying that everybody is to be the judge in his own cause. The first principle of law I learned was against that. But I do say that if a man, however humble he may be, shall take that responsibility and shall resist the execution of the law, and it shall turn out that he is right, as the Supreme Court shall decide he is right, that man is a village Hampden, though he be the humblest man who lives on the face of this Republic. This is not preaching a disregard of the law at all; this is plain, simple doctrine, that the Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof are the supreme law of the land, but that a law that is in violation of the Constitution is null and void.

Mr. President, let us go back to the other question about which the Senator from Maine thinks that I have preached bad doctrine. I allude to the decision of the House of Representatives upon Jay's treaty. The Senator said I was wrong.

Mr. BLAINE. Historically wrong.

Mr. THURMAN. Let us see whether I am historically wrong. I know that ultimately the money was voted after a long time, but let us see what kind of a resolution the House of Representatives passed on that subject. On the 7th day of April, 1796, they passed this resolution:

> Resolved, That it being declared by the second section of the second article of the Constitution "that the President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur," the House of Representatives do not claim any agency in making treaties; but that when a treaty stipulates regulations on any of the subjects submitted by the Constitution to the power of Congress, it must depend for its execution as to such stipulations on the law or laws to be passed by Congress; and it is the constitutional right and duty of the House of Representatives in all such cases to deliberate on the expediency or inexpediency of carrying such treaty into effect, and to determine and act thereon as in their judgment may be most conducive to the public good.

Mark it, a treaty is declared by the Constitution itself to be the supreme law of the land; yet this resolution passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 57 to 35. Let me read a few of the names of the men who voted for the resolution. They will not be strange names to you, Senators. Their names will live perhaps longer than those of any of us; they are not strange names at all. Among those who voted for the resolution I have read were Albert Gallatin, William B. Giles, Nicholas Gilman, Edward Livingston, Nathaniel Macon, James Madison, Frederick A. Muhlenberg, the first Speaker of the House of Representatives, I believe; John Nicholas; you know who he was; a better lawyer never practiced at any court in this land; Joseph B. Varnum, Abraham Venable. Those are not obscure names. Those are names that will go down in American history as long as the history of America is read. They voted by nearly two to one that the House of Representatives would not appropriate money to carry out a treaty which the Constitution declared was the supreme law of the land, unless in the judgment of the House of Representatives it was expedient so to do. They did not say the treaty was unconstitutional, but upon the bare question of expediency they said it was for the House to decide. They did not say that both the House and Senate must concur in refusing the appropriation; they said it was for the House to decide for itself, just as it would be for the Senate to decide for itself whether it would be expedient to make a treaty.

Mr. President, nobody who will calmly consider this matter can doubt upon it at all. Here is Congress clothed with the power of appropriating the people's money, the sole power in the Government that can appropriate the people's money; clothed with the power of taking money from the people and of saying to what uses the money thus taken from the people shall be applied. Here is Congress that has that power. To say that Congress must, under all circumstances, without regard to expediency, without regard to the constitutionality of previous laws, take money from the people and spend that money in the execution of every enactment on the statute-book, however unconstitutional or however improvident that law may be, is, I will not say an absurd proposition, for I do not want to use offensive words, but is an utterly untenable proposition. Suppose in the great struggle that this country went through in the war, when it needed every dollar to maintain its troops in the field, that then there had been some law that required an expenditure of five, or ten, or fifteen, or twenty million dollars (and I do not know but there was) upon some other matters that might be postponed——

Mr. BLAINE. A postponement is very different.

Mr. THURMAN. How very different?

Mr. BLAINE. Entirely different.

Mr. THURMAN. Very different! I know what the Senator will say. He will say that was a case of war, and that salus populi suprema est lex.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator permit me an interruption there?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. He says to postpone is the same thing as to refuse. I may owe the Senator a thousand dollars; I may go to him and say, "This is a just debt; I am not able to pay it; I pray you extend it two years." That is a very different thing from going and saying that although I owe you the money I will not pay you a dollar of it.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like the consent of the Senator from Ohio to ask the Senator from Maine a question.

Mr. THURMAN. I would rather answer the question he has asked me first.

Mr. McDONALD. It is in your line.

Mr. THURMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. McDONALD. I ask the Senator if he voted for the bill to pay the five and a half million dollars award under the Washington treaty?

Mr. BLAINE. I rather think that in an incautious moment, after making all the stand I could, I voted for it; but I have been very sorry for it ever since, because I believe, as I originally took the ground, that that treaty had not been complied with. It was not refusing to pay the money in pursuance of a treaty that was the supreme law of the land, but I based my opposition to it on the ground that that award had not been made in pursuance of law, an entirely different ground of opposition, the honorable Senator will observe.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. Before the Senator goes on, will he allow me to say one word?

Mr. McDONALD. Then the Senator from Maine decided for himself that that law was not binding?

Mr. BECK. One word, Mr. President. On the 20th day of April, 1871, while the Senator from Maine was Speaker of the House of Representatives, and questions relative to Indian treaties were up, I moved in the House an exact copy of the resolution passed in 1796 just read by the Senator from Ohio, which was voted for by the gentlemen named by him; and McPherson in his Manual states the exact truth when he says that that resolution passed the House without a division, no man, not even the Senator from Maine, voting against it.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not expect that.

Mr. BECK. Not one voted against it.

Mr. THURMAN. Now, in regard to what the Senator says as to there being a distinction between the case I supposed and the other case respecting the word "postpone," I think I did not use any word "postpone." It is a simple case in which you have failed to appropriate. That is all there is of it. That brings me to another observation, and with that I close for I have spoken too long, both for my own health and for the time of the Senate.

Mr. CARPENTER. Before the Senator closes I want to ask him a question——

Mr. THURMAN. I will hear it.

Mr. CARPENTER. Because I am always surprised and am always grieved when I find the Senator from Ohio getting wrong on a question of law; he is so usually and so generally right. Do I understand him to say that where both Houses of Congress have passed and the President has approved a law which requires the payment of money, and the act is conceded to be constitutional, one House of Congress would be justified in refusing to obey that law and not making the annual appropriation simply because they wished the law had not been passed?

Mr. THURMAN. When the Senator takes his seat I will answer his question. In the first place, the Senator has no right to say anything about supposing I say this. Take the case of a law, as the Senator supposes, which passed both Houses of Congress and was approved by the President, as many an unconstitutional law has been passed——

Mr. CARPENTER. But I say one that is conceded to be constitutional.

Mr. THURMAN. Now the Senator says a constitutional law; and he asks may Congress refuse to appropriate to execute that law. To be sure they may.

Mr. CARPENTER. May rightfully, I mean.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, they may rightfully. They may do it wrongfully or they may do it rightfully. If the circumstances are such as justify them in foro conscientiæ, as justify them in the sight of the people, in the judgment of all good men they would be justified. Certainly they may refuse to do it. Suppose there is no money in the Treasury. Suppose they would have to borrow money and increase the bonded debt in order to survey Goose Creek somewhere up in the country where there was no water eight months in the year in order to make slack-water navigation on Goose Creek.

Mr. BLAINE. How could there be a law requiring that to be done annually?

Mr. THURMAN. We pass a river and harbor act every year.

Mr. BLAINE. But we do not pass a law saying we shall pass it. That is not a law requiring an annual appropriation. That is in the discretion of Congress each recurring year. The Senator does not pretend to say there is a law on the statute-book requiring an annual appropriation for Goose Creek, or any other creek?

Mr. THURMAN. But we pass a law for surveying this, that, and the other, and we appropriate afterward for the improvement of the streams that have been surveyed.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President——

Mr. THURMAN. Let me get through. The Senator has the good sense to put the case of a constitutional law. I say that for any good and sufficient cause Congress may refuse to appropriate money for the execution of that law, at this session, at the next session, or the next after that, and what is a good and sufficient reason is a question with the discretion and judgment of Congress; no other body has any power over it. It is within the discretion of Congress; it is submitted to the judgment of Congress. Certainly it is not pretended that one Congress can bind another forever. How can you do that? You cannot do it at all. It may be that Congress would refuse an appropriation without just cause. Then it would incur the condemnation of the people, because we all assume, you know, that the people always decide right. It has been said about the English laws that they are assumed to be the perfection of human wisdom, while in point of fact they are not, nevertheless the presumption obtains. So we all presume as a matter juris et de jure that the people always decide right. Therefore if we should without sufficient cause refuse to appropriate money to execute a law standing on the statute-book, the presumption is that the people would resent it; if we had sufficient cause the presumption is the people would say we were right. Now, I will hear the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator consents to be interrupted for a moment, and I will interrupt him but a moment. I understand him to lay down the rule of law that a private citizen may judge for himself and at his peril upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress; if he thinks it unconstitutional he may refuse obedience to it, taking the consequences if the courts shall differ with him upon the question of the constitutionality of the act. Now, I want to ask the Senator if the rule in conscience and morals is not precisely the same with the legislator. Take this case: Congress has by law promised every Supreme Court judge seventy years of age and ten years in service that if he will retire and let a younger man take his place the United States will pay him $10,000 a year annually. Upon that proposition by Congress a judge retires. Now I want to ask the learned Senator if he maintains in conscience and morals applied to a legislator, that if he believed it was bad policy to pass that law pensioning retired judges, he is excusable and can be approved and applauded for voting against a bill making the appropriation?

Mr. THURMAN. I will answer the question. If I understood the last question, the Senator is assuming the law to be unconstitutional.

Mr. CARPENTER. No.

Mr. THURMAN. I believe it to be a constitutional law?

Mr. CARPENTER. No; you believe it to be constitutional, but not liking the principle of pensioning retired judges. It is a simple question.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator might as well ask me on the question of voting to repudiate the public debt.

Mr. BLAINE. To put the question a little more edged——

Mr. CARPENTER. Let me hear an answer.

Mr. THURMAN. I cannot answer two catechists at the same time

Mr. BLAINE. I will withdraw.

Mr. CARPENTER. I have put the question. I hope the Senator from Ohio will answer.

Mr. THURMAN. I will when the Senator takes his seat.

Mr. CARPENTER. I hope the Senator does not fear being bulldozed.

Mr. THURMAN. He does. The Senator from Wisconsin looks too aggressive. [Laughter.] Mr. President, to refuse to vote the salary to those judges who have retired on the faith of our act of Congress that they should be paid, if we have the money to pay them would be a simple case of dishonesty.

Mr. BLAINE. Now, one moment——

Mr. THURMAN. Does not the Senator think he had better let me answer the question?

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator has answered, and I want him to answer a little more——

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator seriously in his conscience thinks he ought to interrupt me I will sit down

Mr. BLAINE. I simply want to put the question with the edge on it. Suppose in your individual conscience in private you believed that the pensioning of the judges was unconstitutional. I want the edge put in the question. Suppose in your private conscience you believed that the act passed pensioning judges who had served ten years was unconstitutional? That is what I want to put to the honorable Senator.

Mr. THURMAN. Sit down, and I will answer that. If I believed that; and there was an appropriation needed to pay——

Mr. BLAINE. As an individual, merely as an individual.

Mr. THURMAN. All my thoughts are individual thoughts. I have no senatorial thoughts and individual thoughts; I am only made with one mind, such as it is. I say to the Senator that if I thought the law was unconstitutional I would not vote a dollar, not one, because I have sworn to obey the Constitution of the United States. When the Supreme Court should decide that the law was constitutional, I might give way my judgment, although let me tell the Senator that the chairman under whom I served nine years in this body, the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] (and there is no abler lawyer on this floor,) has again and again announced in the Senate the old Jackson doctrine that the decisions of the Supreme Court itself did not bind him when he was voting.

Mr. BLAINE. In a question that affected his individual conscience to do some act.

Mr. THURMAN. No, on a question of the Constitution.

Mr. BLAINE. Then I understand the honorable Senator to take this ground: after twenty years, though this has been adjudged upon an appeal before the Supreme Court to be a constitutional law, if an accidental majority in the Senate should believe it to be an unconstitutional law they would be justified in breaking the faith of the Government with its retired public servants. That is the whole ground.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator said nothing of the sort; not a thing of the kind did the Senator from Ohio say; and that little stump speech will not have the slightest effect in the world when it is read in to-morrow's RECORD—not the least bit in the wide world.

Mr. BLAINE. That will depend on the answer of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think it will, but on the presumption I stated awhile ago, that the people decide right. Now, I have one word more——

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator does not answer the question.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not answer the question! I said that I have bowed to more than one decision of the Supreme Court of the United States where they thought one way and I thought another. I govern my action by them, and yet the Senator must recollect that when we come here to decide what shall be the law of the land——

Mr. BLAINE. In the making of a law of course.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes; the making of a law involves the construction of the Constitution of the United States. There was precious little respect paid to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Dred. Scott case by the men who made the laws for many years afterward. Precious little respect was paid then, one of the best men, and purest men, and most upright men, and most learned and able judges that ever graced the bench of this or any other country, was hounded to the last day of his life as a traitor to the country, to the Constitution he had sworn to support and the principles of common humanity, by people who did not hold themselves bound by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I want to say once more, no sophistry can cloud this bill. This is simply a case in which a bill does not appropriate money for one particular purpose. It does appropriate money for purposes that are admitted to be right and to be constitutional, and to which there is no single objection; but there is one purpose for which it makes no appropriation; it does not repeal any law; it simply fails to make an appropriation for one single purpose.

Mr. President, I say again, and I say it in conclusion, the argument against this bill would be just as strong if the section which I speak of were stricken out of the bill, and the bill did not contain an appropriation for the Ordnance department of the Army—just as strong in the one case as in the other; they stand on precisely the same footing. There is an appropriation for certain objects; for one object there is no appropriation. We in the majority take the responsibility of not appropriating for that object. We are willing to take it. If we have not sufficient reason for not making that appropriation our constituents will condemn us. If we have sufficient reason, yet if this people are willing to have less liberty than the people of Great Britain, if this people are willing to say that they cannot guard their own polls, while the people of Great Britain and Ireland and Scotland can guard theirs; if they are willing to say that while no British soldier shall be within two miles of a polling place on the day of election, our polls shall be surrounded by the bayonets of the Federal Army; if they are willing to say that, they will condemn us. But if they have any of that spirit of liberty which achieved the independence of our country, any of that which achieved the independence of that older country, which produced the statute of George II, then of course the majority in Congress will not fail, and we shall have the satisfaction of knowing that we have done what was right and what we ought to have done.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I only want two minutes. The honorable Senator stated, I thought with needless emphasis, to myself that he would consider himself a perjured man if he voted for a law that was unconstitutional. I pointed out five distinct instances in which he voted for that law. His answer is that no yeas and nays were called. Why did he not call them? If the Senator sits here and permits a vote to be had nem. con., he is just as guilty, if there be guilt in it, as though the roll were called and he voted "yea." That is no excuse. In answer to the two clauses the Senator quoted in regard to quartering soldiers in time of peace, and his question what I would do if Congress should pass a law and a squad of soldiers should come to my house, I should like to return the question; being a Yankee I have that privilege.

Mr. THURMAN. You are not a Yankee, but a Pennsylvanian.

Mr. BLAINE. What would the honorable Senator do if a squad came to his house?

Mr. THURMAN. It would depend upon circumstances.

Mr. BLAINE. Would the honorable Senator go out and shed blood?

Mr. THURMAN. It would depend entirely upon whether discretion was the better part of valor on that particular occasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. My impression is that the course of the Senator from Ohio and my course would be precisely the same.

Mr. THURMAN. Not at all.

Mr. BLAINE. We would give way to the soldiers, and carry the case into the courts. I should not want to confront a sergeant's guard with an umbrella.

Mr. THURMAN. Nor I either.

Mr. BLAINE. I think I should walk out if a sergeant's guard presented themselves with an order from a commanding officer, and take my remedy in the courts. In regard to the question which the Senator brought up on the other clause of the Constitution, the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, and papers, against unreasonable searches and seizures, I presume we have had as much litigation under that clause (which is precisely in totidem verbis the clause in the bill of rights in the constitution of Maine) in the State of Maine, of judicial arbitrament, as any State in this Union. I will tell the honorable Senator that there are a good many hundred men in my State who have attempted to construe that clause of the Constitution for themselves greatly to their subsequent regret. I do not know any more pernicious doctrine that can be preached anywhere than that it is the right of the citizen to construe the law for himself so long as judicial remedy is in his hands and the courts are open for arbitrament.

In regard to constitutional laws, I hold with the Senator that if I sit here in my seat and vote for a law that I believe to be unconstitutional, and thus aid in its enactment, I am perjured; I commit perjury; but if against my vote and against my protest that law is passed, is passed by the two Houses, and is signed by the President, it is the supreme law of the land until the Supreme Court of the United States decide otherwise, and regardless of my individual opinion that governed my individual vote, I am bound as a citizen to obey it; I am bound as a Senator to carry it out. That is the whole of it.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. THURMAN. I want to mention to my friend from Maine one thing. The Senator is certainly aware that a great many questions cannot get up to the Supreme Court. If the Senator should have the misfortune to commit a homicide, although he might do it in defense of his constitutional rights, that question never could be settled by the Supreme Court.

Mr. BLAINE. But all this class of questions get up. The Senator need not bring in a class of questions we have not been arguing about at all.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator quotes me before I get through. I say that a question cannot be decided there that may involve the liberty of every man in this country; it never can get up to the Supreme Court; because a writ of error in criminal cases does not lie to that court.

Mr. BLAINE. Take the actual case.

Mr. THURMAN. I will take the case of a soldier who goes into a house and quarters himself there in time of peace under an unconstitutional law. The Senator slays him; the Senator is indicted for it. He can never get that case to the Supreme Court.

Mr. BLAINE. Then that shows the great absurdity of my slaying him. I could get a constitutional remedy if I did not slay the man; but if I slay him and pursue this outrageous course that the Senator indicates, then I am deprived of a remedy. The Senator convicts himself of the absurdity of his logic. But if, as a quiet citizen, I walk out and go to the courts of the United States and show that that clause of the Constitution is violated to my detriment, I can put the military officer who did it through a pretty heavy punishment.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator has shown that "discretion is the better part of valor;" there is no doubt of that; and it would not be very wise in him to slay the man. But I must inform the Senator that according to my reading, the principles of civil liberty all the world over have been sustained by slaying the trespasser in such a case.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator commends me to a course that shall slaughter the soldier, and give me no remedy. It is just as valuable a kind of glory as to be slaughtered on the battle-field and have your name spelled wrong in the report of the battle. [Laughter.]

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I rose to ask the Senator from Maine a question, but was interrupted. My question was this: I understand him to say that whatever act Congress passes is absolutely binding upon everybody until the Supreme Court reverses it. I propose to put a case, of course an absurd case, because absurd cases illustrate principles. Suppose Congress should pass a law authorizing the seizure of all the women and children of the State of Maine, that they should be seized and sold into slavery, and a soldier of the United States should come to the Senator's house to take his wife and children, would he not slay the man who came to do it?

Mr. BLAINE. Then we should fall back on what the sensible men of the South said, who admitted that they had no right of secession under the Constitution, but they had the right of revolution; and Maine would revolutionize. That is all. We would go outside the law; outside the case.

Mr. BECK. Then there could be a law passed so absolutely unconstitutional that even the Senator from Maine would resist it?

Mr. BLAINE. Of course, so utterly tyrannical that a people would rise against it, just as the thirteen American colonies did when they threw off the laws of the mother country. When the honorable Senator supposes an extreme case of that kind he throws himself outside of the law, and outside of the case we are arguing.

Mr. BECK. That simply illustrates the principle that each man acts on his own responsibility; if the Supreme Court sustains him he is right; if it decides against him he is wrong.

Mr. BLAINE. Old Dr. Whately, in his Logic, winds up by saying that the man who presents an extreme case, and an impossible case, gives up the argument.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to ask the Senator from Kentucky if it is not a fact that if the Supreme Court declare a law to be unconstitutional it is null and void from the beginning?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. If it would be null and void from the beginning, what force did it ever have after its passage?

Mr. VANCE. It never was a law.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, at some time before the vote upon the pending bill is taken, should there be a space which no other Senator wishes to occupy, I shall make some observations indicating my objections to one of the sections of the bill. I wish, however, much more earnestly to obtain that which I deem of far greater value than anything I could say,—an expression by a majority of Senators touching the meaning of the nondescript and unheard-of provision in the bill to which I have alluded. I do not make this remark in inadvertence of the sudden and radical change in the face of the enemy which the lines of the other side have undergone within a few moments. It did not escape me that the honorable Senator from Ohio, the corps commander not only but the generalissimo of the democratic forces, issued an order a few moments ago which indicates much in respect of the future process of this proceeding. That honorable Senator having heard the very persuasive and noticeable remarks of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] and having seen, as I infer, some other signs in the political zodiac, concluded, as did others, that it would not be safe to trust the brethren who make up the majority here, either in a profession of faith orally or even with permission to answer "yea" or "nay" when their names are called upon proposed amendments. Accordingly, that astute and veteran commander has spoken, not I imagine without a council of war having been held. It is said that councils of war do not fight, but councils of war do manage, do treat, do consider carefully; and I know right well that the brain of the Senator from Ohio is not the loom upon which was woven this new disguise in which our friends appear. I will jeopard my reputation as a guesser by affirming that since we dispersed yesterday a conference or consultation has been had; I do not like to say "caucus;" first, because our friends dread that word; and, second, because I presume they have managed to put this in such form that it could be said that a caucus technically did not do it. But I will venture the guess that my long-headed friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] and the other sachems of the democracy concluded that it would not be wise to vote upon amendments; and the mouth-piece of the democracy, the leader of the Spartan band, engaged now in protecting the country on the theories laid down, first by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL,] and reiterated since by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN]—these Spartans do not mean to vote for any amendment, and they do mean (now I am going to expose myself as a prophet still further) to vote down in the Senate every amendment which has been adopted in Committee of the Whole. I will appeal to the RECORD to-morrow to vindicate or to overthrow my pretensions to the reputation of a political prophet. Before the morning of this night the democratic Committee on Appropriations will be repudiated, with the first lord of the treasury from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] at its head, the great financial authority constituting that committee, the heroic Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and all, incarnating the infallibility of the democratic party both in respect of political faith and safe appropriations, will be whistled down the wind. The targe of the Senator from Kentucky will sink before the order which has been issued by the Senator from Ohio, and every amendment they recommended,—amendments voted for by every democrat in the Senate, will receive in the Senate when this bill passes from the Committee of the Whole, the brand of democratic disapprobation. That is what is sometimes called hedging. Why do they hedge? Why does the Senator from Ohio hedge? Why does he make haste twice over to inform all his followers that not a t is to be crossed, not an i is to be dotted, but that accepting the House, as the Medes and Persians accepted their laws, every democrat, no matter if in committee he voted and certified that amendments were necessary, is on his oath to stand up and say that the bill, only the bill, and the bill unchanged in all its details as it came from the House, is the bill which, if possible, must become a law.

Why is this? He must be a tyro in party politics, or he must wink so hard as not to see, who fails to discover what all this means. The dexterous players of party chess, (and I do not mean in the House alone; I am not alluding to the doings of the House; I do not mean in the Senate alone; but I mean these astrologers and star-gazers at the political and presidential firmament who cut out the work for the democratic party, who study all the angles of incidence and reflection, who do all these things which brought on the extra session, and which have continued it)—these players, as cunning phrase-mongers, contrived some words which every lawyer knows mean nothing. In place of saying that the Army should not be used to keep the peace at the polls, they imported the words "as a police force;" and on this little hinge they thought they could swing a great majority of the House of Representatives. How great that majority was, I have no right to say; how it came to be so large, the rules of propriety here deny me the privilege of inquiring; but here is the bill passed by that House and certified by its Clerk, and therefore I have a right to know that the consent of a majority, and of a quorum too, and that means a majority of all those elected to the House, was obtained to this proposed legislation.

Mr. President, I more than suspect, I think I may say without violating any rules that I know, that assent to this language was obtained in the House by the magic, (if magic it be,) by the trick, (if trick it be,) by the cunning, (if cunning it be,) of these four words; and I suspect that it was supposed the Executive of the nation would assent to these four words "as a police force." My honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] laughs. He has a right to laugh. He did not sit on the bench all those years and administer and expound the law all those years without having sharpened those faculties which see through the juggle of these words; and no wonder that when he hears them again he laughs. But it was thought that these four little words might make a place not only large enough for a dove to put down the sole of her foot, but large enough for an entire President of the United States to stand on and approve the bill.

Sir, how much of a compliment to the intelligence of the Executive and his constitutional advisers this expectation was, I will not venture to say. However, they were put there for that purpose; and when it came to be known, as it was made known after this debate began, that we on this side would propound to our friends, not the Westminster Catechism or any difficult or troublesome conundrums, but that we would offer amendments which we indicated we had, to search and test the meaning of these words, it became very apparent to the democratic apprehension that nobody would be able to go and say to the President, as possibly somebody said in the House, and privately to the members of the House, "This language as it is now does not mean to nullify existing laws, because it is only to the effect that money may not be used to maintain, equip, transport, pay, or feed the Army to be used as a police force. As a police force, don't you see?" Such is the way, I am told, it was put elsewhere. "It is only a police force, don't you see;" and nobody argues that soldiers are to be used as roundsmen, in the language of the newspaper editorial which my friend from Iowa read, or constables, or watchmen, or ordinary civil police, to use the phrase of the President; nobody pretends that. This only says that that shall not be done, and as I believe it was said by some eminent statesman, "Who objects to a tub being thrown to the whale?" "Just a little sugar-plum to please the political children and gratify their palate—who objects to that?"

It was thought that if by voting down every amendment here tending to make the lurking, actual, and as was thought latent and hidden meaning of these words, plain, the device would be spoiled for use at the other end of the Avenue. It was thought that no Executive carelessness of reading, no stupidity or obtuseness on the part of constitutional advisers could be so great that the President would sign this bill because of these words after the trick and artifice had been exposed. Therefore, in marches the Senator from Ohio, and he says, "I want it understood," and there was great force in this. At that point the honorable Senator appeared with that breezy affluence of dash which seems to grow upon him of late. He said, "I want it understood," as if he intended to absorb all the responsibility of both sides of the Chamber, "that I will vote down every amendment, regardless of its merits; I do not care what its merits may be." And then he proceeded with some railing accusation against the practice which he seemed to deem bad, of reading to the Executive, or of the Executive reading himself, debates in the two Houses accompanying votes upon legislation. Evidently the Senator expects the Executive to read these sayings of his with that deliberation and respect with which all should read the words of the honorable Senator from Ohio, with that peculiar respect which the Executive might be supposed to feel for the words of his alleged and expecting successor in office. Evidently he expects the President to read his words, that he will vote, regardless of the merits of amendments, against them all, in the hope that by just hedging he may convince the Executive that although amendments were rejected tending to define the meaning of this language, still they were rejected on account of a chronic and indiscriminate hatred of amendments, no matter what the merits of those amendments might be.

That, as to the Executive, is the object of this sudden change of front. That is the reason why the democratic Committee on Appropriations is to be repudiated, overthrown, and despitefully used. That is the reason why a majority in this Senate is to vote down amendments adopted by the same majority in Committee of the Whole.

But, Mr. President, there was another object in all this. It is inferred now on one side of the Chamber that should this innocent little provision ever go back to the House of Representatives, although the previous question may be applied to it, although all the means may be taken which were taken before, if they were taken—I have no right to say that they were because I cannot allude to what took place in the House; but if it were true in the House that an hour had been allowed for debate on this bill and then if it were true that that hour was parceled out, half an hour to one side and half an hour to the other, and then if it were true that three men were selected from the republican side all of whom would speak for this measure and that nobody was permitted to speak against it—I do not affirm that this is so; I have no right to say what took place in the House;—but I say if that were so and that it should happen again, the bill being sent back, I think it has come to the knowledge of a majority of this Chamber that possibly a great many members of the House who relied, as they thought they safely might, upon assurances as to the meaning of these words, might upon being recorded again be found in recorded disapproval; and thus that any advantage which has been obtained, if one has been, in winning the votes of the political party with which the Executive is supposed to sympathize might be lost and thrown away.

For these reasons, as I infer, it has gone out to the lowlands and the hill-country among the democrats, all the dwellers in Mesopotamia who vote on the democratic side in this Chamber have been told that they are to vote against all amendments. Nevertheless, Mr. President, as I began by saying and as I intended to conclude saying in a moment and not to detain the Senate as I have done by so particular a statement, I would like to have a vote upon an amendment pending which I offered; an amendment to it offered by the Senator from Maine is pending also, and the vote is first on the latter amendment of course unless some arrangement is made about the order of these votes. I would like to vote on that amendment and to vote on four other amendments which I wish to offer, to the end that we may see, as far as we shall be permitted to see after this latter indication of intention on the other side, what these words are designed to mean, what office they are designed to perform, should they ever find a place in the legislation of the country.

And now, although as I say I would like to make some observations upon the bill, I will not do it at this moment if by leaving the floor I can obtain a vote upon the pending amendment and the others to which I have referred and which I should like to offer. If any of them are adopted it will of course discredit my prediction, and of course change what I should feel warranted in saying in criticism of the bill. It seems to me that whatever of further discussion there is to be would be conducted more intelligently if we could know that the bill is to stand as it is, or that such modifications as we think should take place may be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the Senator from New York. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. BLAINE. No yeas and nays have been called for, and it may probably simplify the nature of the amendments and the voting upon them if I shall reserve my amendment to be a direct amendment to section 6 rather than an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New York. For the present I withdraw my amendment in order that the vote may come directly upon the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] to come in at the end of section [6] 5.

Mr. CONKLING. Let it be reported, and let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section [6] 5 it is proposed to insert "except in aid of the civil authorities;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. [6] 5. That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State, except in aid of the civil authorities.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON, (when his name was called.) Early in the evening I paired for a brief time with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.] I do not see him in his seat, therefore I refrain from voting. Otherwise I should vote for this amendment.

Mr. BURNSIDE, (when Mr. ANTHONY'S name was called.) My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] My colleague if here would vote "yea."

Mr. KERNAN, (when Mr. BAYARD'S name was called.) The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] was called from the Senate for a little time this evening, and I was informed that he had paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHANDLER.]

Mr. BLAIR, (when his name was called.) I am informed that an arrangement was made by which Mr. BELL, my immediate predecessor, was paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] and I am desired to carry out that arrangement until to-morrow night. I feel bound to do so. I would vote "yea" if at liberty to do so.

Mr. BRUCE, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. LAMAR.] If he were here, my colleague would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired temporarily with my colleague [Mr. WALLACE] who is now absent from the Senate. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER, (when his name was called.) I am temporarily paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this bill with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.] I should vote against this amendment and he would vote for it, if he were present.

Mr. HEREFORD, (when his name was called.) On this subject I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAWES, (when Mr. HOAR'S name was called.) My colleague, [Mr. HOAR,] if he were here, would vote "yea;" but he is absent and paired, as has been stated by the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD.]

Mr. WITHERS, (when Mr. JOHNSTON'S name was called.) My colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is absent from the Senate in consequence of indisposition, but is paired on all political questions with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.] My colleague, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. JONAS, (when Mr. LAMAR'S name was called.) The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] is paired with his colleague, [Mr. BRUCE.] If present, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] would vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN, (when his name was called.) The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] has been in the Chamber during the day, but was compelled a short time since to retire from indisposition. I am paired with that Senator. If he were here, I would vote "yea." He would vote "nay," I presume.

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON.] If he was here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. SAUNDERS, (when his name was called.) I am paired for a little while with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.]

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when Mr. TELLER'S name was called.) My colleague [Mr. TELLER] is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If he were here, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL, (when Mr. THURMAN'S name was called.) The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is paired with my colleague, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Blaine,	Conkling,	Kellogg,	Platt,
Booth,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Burnside,	Hill of Colorado,	Logan,	Windom.
Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Morrill,

NAYS—28.

Bailey,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Beck,	Groome,	Kernan,	Slater,
Call,	Grover,	McDonald,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Maxey,	Vest,
Coke,	Hill of Georgia,	Morgan,	Walker,
Davis of W. Va.,	Houston,	Pendleton,	Whyte,
Eaton,	Jonas,	Randolph,	Withers.

ABSENT—33.

Allison,	Davis of Illinois,	Johnston,	Sharon,
Anthony,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Bayard,	Farley,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Blair,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Voorhees,
Bruce,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Wallace,
Butler,	Hamlin,	Paddock,	Williams.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hampton,	Plumb,
Carpenter,	Hereford,	Saulsbury,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Saunders,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. I now offer an amendment which I hope will commend itself more to the kindness of the majority of this Chamber. I move to strike out in the bill the words "as a" in line 4 of this section and insert the words "instead of the ordinary civil" so that it will read:

Any portion of the Army of the United States to be used instead of the ordinary civil police force, to keep the peace at the polls.

My hope that that will strike our brethren on the other side more favorably is founded on this fact: In the veto message sent on the 12th of May, 1879, giving objections to the approval of a bill to prevent military interference, I observe these words:

No soldiers, either of the Union or of the State militia, should be present at the polls to take the place or to perform the duties of the ordinary civil police force.

I imagine that the words found in this bill were suggested by those words in the veto message; and that the bill may conform to the views of the Executive I have offered the amendment which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The SECRETARY. In section [6] 5, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the words "as a" and insert the words "instead of the ordinary civil;" so as to make the section read:

That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used, instead of the ordinary civil police force, to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

Mr. WITHERS. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion for a single moment.

Mr. WITHERS. For a moment.

Mr. CONKLING. As I infer, there is no intention on this side to debate these amendments. A motion to lay on the table is valuable to cut off debate; but as the amendments are not to be debated, a vote can be taken just as quickly the other way. If the Senator has no objection, we would rather take a square vote, as it is called, on the amendments. Of course if he moves to lay them on the table and the motion is sustained, we get no direct vote, and in that event everybody will understand that the motion to lay on the table is a test question. But as there is to be no debate, I submit to the Senate that we ought to be allowed to have a vote on our amendments on their merits.

Mr. WITHERS. With that understanding, I am perfectly willing to have a vote.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I would ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRUCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague [Mr. LAMAR] on this question. Were he here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. WALLACE.]

Mr. CHANDLER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am temporarily paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] until nine o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.]

Mr. MORRILL, (when Mr. EDMUNDS's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. BOOTH, (when Mr. FARLEY's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. FARLEY] is absent on important business. On all political questions he is paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.] I make this announcement once for all this session.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, (when Mr. GORDON's name was called.) The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.] The Senator from Georgia, if here, would vote "nay."

Mr. HEREFORD, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONAS, (when Mr. LAMAR's name was called.) The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] is paired on all political questions with his colleague, [Mr. BRUCE.] If he were present, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] would vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON,] who is absent on account of illness. If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON.]

Mr. SAUNDERS, (when his name was called.) I am paired until nine o'clock with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when his name was called.) My colleague [Mr. TELLER] is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If he were here, my colleague would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GROOME. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] has been called from the Chamber for a few moments, and he requested me to say that, if present, he would vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is paired on all political questions with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.] I announce this for the session.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Kellogg,	Platt,
Booth,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Burnside,	Hill of Colorado,	Logan,	Windom.

NAYS—28.

Bailey,	Coke,	Groome,	Houston,
Beck,	Davis of W. Va.,	Grover,	Jonas,
Call,	Eaton,	Harris,	Jones of Florida,
Cockrell,	Garland,	Hill of Georgia,	Kernan,
McDonald,	Randolph,	Vance,	Walker,
Maxey,	Ransom,	Vest,	Whyte,
Morgan,	Slater,	Voorhees,	Withers.

ABSENT—32.

Anthony,	Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Bayard,	Edmunds,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,
Blair,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Saunders,
Bruce,	Ferry,	Lamar,	Sharon,
Butler,	Gordon,	McMillan,	Teller,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	McPherson,	Thurman,
Carpenter,	Hampton,	Paddock,	Wallace,
Chandler,	Hereford,	Pendleton,	Williams.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. I offer as an amendment to come in at the end of the section the words which I will send to the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section [6] 5 it is moved to insert:

Provided, Nothing herein shall be construed to affect the right to employ any part of the Army to execute the laws in such cases and under such circumstances as such employment of said force may be expressly authorized by the Constitution or by act of Congress.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to say of that amendment that it is the language reported by the Judiciary Committee in the House, adopted by the House and by the Senate, known as the posse comitatus clause in 1878. It simply provides that this section shall not be construed so as to defeat that section.

Mr. WITHERS. As it is already on the statute-book, I presume there is no necessity for putting it back there again, and I suggest that we shall likely vote down a good many things that may be offered as amendments. It is likely the Ten Commandments would be voted down if offered as an amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Although I do not want to argue this, our understanding is that these words but for this saving clause repeal the statute giving the President the right to employ troops on election day according to this act of 1878. To save that, the amendment is offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR, (when his name was called.) I desire to say that I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] until to-morrow night; and I make the announcement thus particularly because if he were present I suppose he would vote in the negative and I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BRUCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. LAMAR.] Were he here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. WALLACE.] If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would probably vote "nay."

Mr. CHANDLER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] temporarily.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.]

Mr. JONES, of Florida, (when Mr. GORDON's name was called.) The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.] If he were here, the Senator from Georgia would vote "nay."

Mr. HEREFORD, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) Upon this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. EATON,] who is necessarily absent from the Chamber a few moments. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when Mr. TELLER'S name was called.) My colleague [Mr. TELLER] is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If my colleague were here he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BURNSIDE. On this question my colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] If my colleague were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK. On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON.]

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Kellogg,	Saunders,
Booth,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Windom.
Burnside,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,

NAYS—27.

Bailey,	Groome,	Kernan,	Slater,
Beck,	Grover,	McDonald,	Vance,
Call,	Harris,	Maxey,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hill of Georgia,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Houston,	Randolph,	Walker,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Ransom,	Withers.
Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—34.

Anthony,	Eaton,	Johnston,	Plumb,
Bayard,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,
Blair,	Farley,	Lamar,	Teller,
Bruce,	Ferry,	Logan,	Thurman,
Butler,	Gordon,	McMillan,	Wallace,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	McPherson,	Whyte,
Carpenter,	Hampton,	Paddock,	Williams.
Chandler,	Hereford,	Pendleton,
Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Platt,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. I have two more amendments to offer, one of which I send to the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section [6] 5 it is proposed to add the following words:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the power of the President of the United States to employ such parts of the land and naval force of the United States as he may deem necessary to enforce the faithful execution of the laws of the United States or to suppress such rebellion, in whatever State or Territory thereof, where the laws of the United States may be forcibly opposed or the execution thereof forcibly obstructed.

Mr. CONKLING. That amendment is the act of Congress of 1792, 1795, and 1807 as those statutes now stand in the Revised Statutes, being section 5298. It is a proviso declaring only that what the President is authorized to do in those acts shall not be forbidden by this section 6 or 5. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LOGAN. Before the question is put I desire to say that I was not in the Chamber when my name was called on the preceding amendment. Of course I cannot vote now; but I desire to mention the fact that I would have voted for the amendment had I been in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. WINDOM. Before the vote is put I desire to say also that my colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] was paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] My colleague on leaving the Chamber desired me to announce his pair on each vote. He would have voted "yea," had he been present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, which has been read.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNSIDE, (when Mr. ANTHONY'S name was called.) My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] My colleague, if he were here, would vote "yea."

Mr. BRUCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. LAMAR.] Were he here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. JONES, of Florida, (when Mr. GORDON'S name was called.) The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.] Were he here, the Senator from Georgia would vote "nay."

Mr. DAWES, (when Mr. HOAR'S name was called.) Upon all these votes my colleague [Mr. HOAR] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD.] If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. PLATT, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. EATON.]

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when Mr. TELLER'S name was called.) My colleague [Mr. TELLER] is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PADDOCK. On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON.]

Mr. WINDOM. On this vote my colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. JONAS. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] is paired with his colleague [Mr. BRUCE] on all these questions. If he were present, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Blaine,	Cameron of Wis.,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Booth,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Burnside,	Hill of Colorado,	Logan,	Windom.

NAYS—30.

Bailey,	Grover,	Maxey,	Vest,
Beck,	Harris,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Houston,	Randolph,	Wallace,
Coke,	Jonas,	Ransom,	Whyte,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,	Withers.
Garland,	Kernan.	Slater,
Groome,	McDonald,	Vance,

NOT VOTING—30.

Anthony,	Davis of Illinois,	Hereford,	Platt,
Bayard,	Eaton,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Johnston,	Sharon,
Bruce,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Butler,	Ferry,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Carpenter,	Gordon,	McMillan,	Williams.
Chandler,	Hamlin,	McPherson,
Conkling,	Hampton,	Paddock,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to add at the end of this section these words:

Except when necessary in aid of the civil authorities, and then only on application by the civil authorities.

So that it will read:

Any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election within any State, except when necessary in aid of the civil authorities, and then only on application by the civil authorities.

And on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNSIDE, (when Mr. ANTHONY'S name was called.) On this question my colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] My colleague, if he were here, would vote "yea."

Mr. BRUCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. LAMAR.] Were he here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (when his name was called.) On this bill and all the amendments that may be proposed to it I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] who will be absent during the night, and so shall I. I make this announcement once for all, and shall not make it again. I am in favor of the bill as it came from the House, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] is in favor of all these amendments.

Mr. MORRILL, (when Mr. EDMUNDS'S name was called.) My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. HEREFORD, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON.]

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Booth,	Dawes,	Logan,	Windom.
Burnside,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ingalls,	Platt,

NAYS—29.

Bailey,	Groome,	McDonald,	Vance,
Beck,	Grover,	Maxey,	Vest,
Call,	Harris,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Whyte,
Coke,	Houston,	Randolph,	Withers.
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Ransom,
Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Garland,	Kernan,	Slater,

ABSENT—29.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Johnston,	Teller,
Bayard,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Thurman,
Blair,	Ferry,	Lamar,	Walker,
Bruce,	Gordon,	McMillan,	Wallace,
Butler,	Hamlin,	McPherson,	Williams.
Carpenter,	Hampton,	Paddock,
Chandler,	Hereford,	Plumb,
Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Sharon,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAINE. I now offer as a proviso at the end of the sixth section the amendment which I withdrew a few moments ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine offers an amendment which will be reported by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section [6] 5, the amendment is to add:

Provided, however, That any person who shall carry a deadly weapon of any kind, openly or concealed, at the polls, at any election for Representative in Congress, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished with a fine not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or with imprisonment for a period not less than six months nor more than five years, or with both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. BLAINE. I should like to have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAINE. I have nothing to say about this except that I hope democratic Senators on the stump this coming campaign will not say that is an amendment they would have voted for except that it came at such an inopportune time as to prevent them.

Mr. EATON. The democratic members of the Senate will say no such thing. Their claim is that this Congress has no power whatever to legislate upon subjects of that character. It rests with the Legislatures of the States to determine what the laws shall be to protect their citizens.

Mr. BLAINE. This Congress has no power to do anything but warn off the United States!

Mr. SAULSBURY. I take this occasion to say that democratic Senators are responsible for their votes to their constituents and not to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. That is the best reason I have heard given.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRUCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. LAMAR.] Were he here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER, (when his name was called.) I am paired as before stated.

Mr. MORRILL, (when Mr. EDMUNDS's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. HEREFORD, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WITHERS, (when Mr. JOHNSTON'S name was called.) My colleague, [Mr. JOHNSTON,] if present, would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WINDOM. On this and the last preceding vote my colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] was paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If present, my colleague would have voted "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK. On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON.]

Mr. VOORHEES, (who had voted in the negative.) I have a somewhat embarrassing duty to perform. I have been voting for the last quarter of an hour, I think I have voted three or four times, in utter forgetfulness that I was paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY,] who desired to go to New York last evening. If my vote to-day made any difference in the result, I should not know how to make reparation; but as it has not, all I can say is in this public way to regret my forgetfulness of a fact that I ought to have remembered. I was paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY,] and I am now on this vote. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Booth,	Dawes,	Logan,	Windom.
Burnside,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ingalls,	Platt,

NAYS—29.

Bailey,	Groome,	McDonald,	Vest,
Beck,	Grover,	Maxey,	Walker,
Call,	Harris,	Morgan,	Wallace,
Cockrell,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Whyte,
Coke,	Houston,	Ransom,	Withers.
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Garland,	Kernan,	Vance,

ABSENT—29.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Johnston,	Sharon,
Bayard,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Blair,	Ferry,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Bruce,	Gordon,	McMillan,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Hamlin,	McPherson,	Williams.
Carpenter,	Hampton,	Paddock,
Chandler,	Hereford,	Plumb,
Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Randolph,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINDOM. I offer the following to come in at the end of section 5:

Except as authorized by the Constitution of the United States.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEREFORD, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] otherwise I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON.]

Mr. BURNSIDE. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] My colleague, if he were here, would vote "yea."

Mr. BRUCE. I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. LAMAR.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WINDOM. On this question my colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY. My colleague [Mr. BAYARD] is paired with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHANDLER.]

Mr. THURMAN. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Booth,	Dawes,	Logan,	Windom.
Burnside,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ingalls,	Platt,

NAYS—30.

Bailey,	Groome,	McDonald,	Vance,
Beck,	Grover,	Maxey,	Vest,
Call,	Harris,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Coke,	Houston,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Ransom,	Withers.
Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Garland,	Kernan,	Slater,

NOT VOTING—28.

Anthony,	Davis of Illinois,	Hereford,	Paddock,
Bayard,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Blair,	Farley,	Johnston,	Sharon,
Bruce,	Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Butler,	Gordon,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Carpenter,	Hamlin,	McMillan,	Voorhees,
Chandler,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Williams.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. I move, unless some Senator has further amendments to perfect the text, to strike out section 6 as it was, section 5 as it has come to be, of the bill; and I ask, to save time, not for the yeas and nays, but for a division unless some Senator wants the yeas and nays on that motion.

The PRESIDING GFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to strike out the section.

The question being put, the ayes were 15.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNSIDE, (when Mr. ANTHONY'S name was called.) On this question my colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BRUCE, (when his name was called.) As I have stated before, I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. LAMAR.]

Mr. CHANDLER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. HEREFORD, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WINDOM, (when Mr. MCMILLAN'S name was called.) My colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. THURMAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 18, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Booth,	Dawes,	Logan,	Windom.
Burnside,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ingalls,	Platt,

NAYS—30.

Bailey,	Groome,	McDonald,	Vance,
Beck,	Grover,	Maxey,	Vest,
Call,	Harris,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Coke,	Houston,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Ransom,	Withers.
Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Garland,	Kernan,	Slater,

ABSENT—28.

Anthony,	Davis of Illinois,	Hereford,	Paddock,
Bayard,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Blair,	Farley,	Johnston,	Sharon,
Bruce,	Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Butler,	Gordon,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Carpenter,	Hamlin,	McMillan,	Voorhees,
Chandler,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Williams.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I move non-concurrence in the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONKLING. That motion is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not necessary.

Mr. WITHERS. Then I move to strike out the amendments which have been made in committee.

Mr. CONKLING. That is not necessary. The question is simply on concurring or non-concurring.

Mr. WITHERS. I know that; but my object was simply, if it met with no objection on the part of other members of the Senate, by one vote to act on all the amendments.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator indulge me? One single negative vote non-concurs in all the amendments.

Mr. BLAINE. Not if one Senator demands a separate vote.

Mr. CONKLING. Unless some Senator demands a separate vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. CONKLING. I think we had better have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAINE. We had a very prolonged debate on some of the sections relative to the organization of matters at West Point, and I was led to believe by some of our democratic friends that the amendments were of great importance to the healthy organization of that institution. My friend from Virginia who has charge of the bill, and who in all non-partisan matters I follow, with great zeal and confidence told us so. I followed him in this case and voted with him.

Mr. WITHERS. I hope you will continue to do so.

Mr. BLAINE. Now, if he will give me any reason for backing out so suddenly, changing front, untying the knot that we took so much trouble to tie yesterday——

Mr. WITHERS. It is not tied yet.

Mr. BLAINE. Now we are to down the hill or roll down the hill that we climbed up with such arduous labor yesterday or the day before. Surely my friend from Virginia who has charge of this bill, and the embassador from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] who is the leader of us all in appropriations, do not expect us to take this sudden turn without reasons given. The Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] I see, is eager to give some reasons. He is a member of the Committee on Appropriations also. I do not think of appealing to any other than my fellow-members on that committee. My friend from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] who was the former chairman, says of course we must stand by the committee. We always do that; but you must not lead us into these devious ways without giving a reason, or we shall lose all confidence in you as leaders. [Laughter.]

Mr. PENDLETON. We do not ask you to change.

Mr. BLAINE. There is the Senator from Ohio, who is not a member of the Appropriations Committee, and does not know anything about the Masonic rites and ritual and ceremonies that pertain to that committee, and he says he does not ask us to vote with the majority. He does not know the pain it will give the Senator from Connecticut, the Senator from Pennsylvania, and Senator from Virginia to see a divided vote of the members of that committee. Other members outside of that charmed circle may vote as they please; but the members of the Appropriations Committee must have some special instruction or they cannot change. Does the Senator from Connecticut want the floor? [Laughter.]

Mr. EATON. Look at the clock.

Mr. BLAINE. No complaint yet; plenty of time.

Mr. EATON. I have not made any complaint. If I commenced I could not stop in half an hour. I want to hear the speech, though, of my friend from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. No, you will not have that; I have no more speeches to make this session; I am talked out; I merely want to know what I shall do in the way of voting.

Mr. LOGAN. I think I can suggest, if the Senator will allow me, a way to relieve the situation.

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly; I am wanting a suggestion.

Mr. LOGAN. I suggest that unanimous consent of the Senate be given to the Appropriations Committee to withdraw their speeches in favor of these amendments. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. That might do; I think that would simplify the matter a good deal. We are learning something every day. I am every day amazed at the extent and variety of democratic resources and democratic tangles and democratic untangles in matters of this sort. Here we were led into a long series of amendments. We were told that they were very important; we were told that the very health and happiness of the Military Academy demanded this; and then the honorable Presiding Officer comes down out of his chair and says that the Constitution of the United States and the laws thereof will suffer great violence if an i is dotted or a t crossed in the whole of this bill; and those i's that have been dotted and those t's that have been crossed must be erased from the record. We have got to take the bill just as the House sent it, and without one reason given. After the honorable Senator left his chair and came down on the floor, he never gave us a reason for that course which he suggested. Has there grown up a sort of lurking distrust of the democratic House? Is it shaky? Has the margin of majority, by reason of pairs and absences, been a good bit disturbed? Is there a fear that if the bill is again committed to that maelstrom it may in some form get mashed by some side or the other on the rocks that lay along it? I wish the honorable Senator from Ohio would condescend once more to leave the chair and explain to us this mistake, which in vain we seek an explanation of from the members of the Appropriations Committee. Do not leave us in the dark; especially do not leave the country in the dark. Do not leave a waiting and wishing world ungratified with the information which is locked up in your breast, Mr. President. [Laughter.] Come, give it. I have appealed in vain to the Appropriations Committee, and now my last resort is to the President of the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I am troubled as my friend from Maine is. When the last bill was pending in this Senate, the legislative appropriation bill, not having been present at the meeting of the Committee on Appropriations, I ventured to vote as I thought proper, and I received a pretty severe lecture for it in the committee-room from the honorable chairman of that committee that I had been a little disposed to bring the committee into disrepute, and I must have a lecture on the subject and be disciplined. I submitted to that discipline very kindly, and when a certain vote was taken, the chairman will recollect, it was agreed that we should stand together upon these amendments.

Mr. WITHERS. I hope the agreement will be carried out.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Virginia stated that the committee itself would lose its influence in the Senate if we did not vote together. Is it possible, does the Senator from Maine mean to insinuate, that the democratic members of this committee are now going to go back on their reports? Do you mean to insinuate anything of that kind?

Mr. BLAINE. I was just showing why they would not? [Laughter.]

Mr. WINDOM. Of course they are not going to do it. Now, I want to call attention of the Senate to one amendment which was made by that committee in section 3. That section of the House bill provided:

SEC. 3. And the examiner of State claims in the office of the Secretary of War shall have while on such duty the pay, emoluments, and allowances of mounted officers one grade higher than that held by him in his regiment or corps.

The committee discovered that that would give to this officer back pay for the last two or three years, and the Committee on Appropriations inserted the word "hereafter;" so that it would read:

And the examiners of State claims in the office of the Secretary of War shall hereafter have, while on such duty, the pay, emoluments, and allowances, &c.

Is it possible that the Committee on Appropriations will turn around now and vote back pay to that officer for the last two or three years?

Mr. BLAINE. Eight thousand dollars.

Mr. WINDOM. Some $8,000 to be thrown away rather than send this bill back to the House.

Mr. CONKLING. Perhaps they do not believe in a hereafter. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINDOM. I suppose it is on the ground suggested by the Senator from New York that they do not believe in a hereafter. I should think they did not, from these votes.

Take another amendment. Section 5 reads, as the House sent the bill to the Senate:

SEC. 5. That each member of the graduating classes of the Military Academy, of 1879 and 1880, after graduation, may elect, with the assent of the Secretary of War, to receive the gross sum of $750 and mileage to his place of residence; and the acceptance of this gross sum shall render him ineligible to appointment in the Army, except in the event of war, until two years after his graduation; and the amount required to defray the expenditure herein provided for shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Senator from Virginia showed the other day by a report from the Secretary of War that during the last six years the number of cadets at West Point was one hundred and thirty-three less than the number of vacancies in the Army, and yet with that demand for the services of educated officers it is now proposed to pay these men that we have educated four years for the express purpose of making them competent officers $720, if they will get out of the way and allow some inexperienced men to be appointed in their places. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] informs me there are some thirty vacancies this year; I think there are about twenty. He and I do not remember the number exactly alike. There are sixty-six graduates this year, and I believe about ninety vacancies. Now the Senator from Virginia proposes by voting for this amendment of the committee that we shall pay these young men whom we have spent $3,000 or $4,000 apiece in educating $720 each, if they will not fill those places which we have prepared them for, and give them to men who are entirely unprepared for them.

Mr. EATON. Not if your Secretary of War does his duty.

Mr. WITHERS. The Secretary of War is the power that can determine that.

Mr. WINDOM. So far as the declaration of the Senate is concerned, by voting down the amendment proposed by the committee we do just that thing which I have stated.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask my friend from Minnesota whether he and all on that side of the Chamber did not vote for this very provision last year?

Mr. WINDOM. I did, because at the time I was not aware of the facts I have now stated; but the Senator will bear in mind that when in the Committee on Appropriations I myself brought these facts to the knowledge of the committee—that the number of graduates was far less than the number of vacancies. I cannot say what happened in the committee, but I will say that not one gentleman who will to-night vote against this proposition has heretofore voted against it on this bill. The reason was deemed to be sufficient. We did not think it desirable to pay $3,000 or $4,000 to educate a young man and then pay him $720 if he would not perform the duty for which he was educated, in order that we might take a man who never had had any education in that direction. I cannot conceive it possible that upon these two amendments which I have suggested the Committee on Appropriations is going back upon its own record.

Mr. EATON. Only a word. The great dramatist has made one of his characters say that if reasons were as plenty as blackberries he would not give them on compulsion, but I will give one reason. On reflection I ought not to speak, I suppose, at any length of what has been done elsewhere, but I like to see unanimity, and I believe the other branch of this Federal Legislature, who were so unanimous one way, would be very well pleased if the Senate was equally unanimous in favor of this bill; and that is enough.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment on page 9, line 193, and also a separate vote on the amendment on page 10, line 213. These are amendments to the text in order that the text may make sense.

Mr. WITHERS. Those amendments rectified clerical errors, which can be corrected in the enrolled bill.

Mr. ALLISON. No, they cannot be corrected except by the action of this body. They are errors that cannot be corrected except by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the first amendment the Senator from Iowa refers to?

Mr. ALLISON. To strike out the word "purchase" and insert the word "purpose" on line 193.

Mr. EATON. That is merely a clerical error.

Mr. ALLISON. The other is in line 213, to strike out "charge" and insert "change."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These are the amendments the Senator from Iowa wants reserved?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to have an amendment reserved also on page 13, to see whether the Senate will deliberately pay back pay to the officer there named, for the last three or four years amounting to some eight or ten thousand dollars.

Mr. BLAINE. Eight thousand dollars is the price of not crossing a t or dotting an i!

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friends each know that in the last Congress and this we voted and passed in each of the Army bills that did not finally become laws the identical words which this bill proposes.

Mr. BLAINE. No, we had "hereafter" in.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No; that section has been passed twice just as it is in the House bill.

Mr. WINDOM. Whatever may have been the action heretofore, now that the Senate is advised of the point, and every Senator who will read this section will agree with me that it does give back pay unless we insert the word "hereafter," we ought to guard against such a construction.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator is certainly mistaken, and I will not say that he knows it; but I am of opinion that the fact was well understood that the provision as it stood did not provide for back pay; but to prevent a possible criticism upon it which had been once made, we put in the word "hereafter," to make it beyond all controversy, while all of us, so far as I knew, were of opinion that the section without that amendment did not carry back pay with it.

Mr. CONKLING. Has the Senator any new light now that changes his opinion on that subject?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator from Minnesota surely understands that the bill speaks from the date of its passage.

Mr. WINDOM. But unfortunately the bill says:

> The examiner of State claims in the office of the Secretary of War shall have, while on such duty, the pay, &c.

It does not confine it to "hereafter." I will say that the Committee on Appropriations, in inserting the word "hereafter," deliberately expressed its opinion that it needed that word to prevent back pay.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator surely knows that unless there is a retroactive clause in the section it does not retroact. Certainly it speaks for the future.

Mr. WINDOM. There has been a good deal of retroaction in the way of back pay.

Mr. WALLACE. I believe the Senator knows all about that; I do not; but surely this regulation has no reference to back pay.

Mr. WINDOM. I know nothing about it except that I have heard that my democratic colleagues took it heretofore; I never did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Three amendments have been reserved.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is evident that our side will vote against all the amendments. Then why vote separately on them? It just requires the consumption of time, and the yeas and nays are already ordered I believe on the amendments, and we shall have the same response on each one. The object is to put the responsibility on this side of the Chamber, and to accomplish no good at all. Why not vote on all at once?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, I do not desire the yeas and nays on the amendment that I have reserved. I merely want the sense of the Senate to see whether these essential corrections are to be made. If the bill is to go without them, be it so.

Mr. BLAINE. I felt sure when the honorable Senator from Alabama rose that we were to have an explanation of this extraordinary change, which the Appropriations Committee refused to give us.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator from Maine knows we want to save his friends on the other side from a change of front.

Mr. CONKLING. I think the yeas and nays should be taken upon concurring or non-concurring with the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, and I am not able to see myself why they should not be voted upon en masse; and unless some Senator thinks it is really desirable to divide them, I ask that we may have the yeas and nays once for all on these amendments in group; and if the Senators on the other side are going to reverse their votes that will appear as well by once taking the yeas and nays as by repeating them it seems to me. I make that suggestion.

Mr. WINDOM. As this matter has been distinctly stated to the Senate and every one understands precisely what is the effect of a vote in gross, I have no objection to taking the vote on them all together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa withdraw his demand?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no desire to delay the Senate. I only asked for a separate vote in order that these amendments might be read, in order that we might see the utter absurdity of agreeing to this bill without changing the two words. I withdraw my call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the demand for a separate vote is withdrawn. The question now is, will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHANDLER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. HEREFORD, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. JONAS. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] is paired with his colleague, [Mr. BRUCE.]

Mr. WITHERS. My colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.] My colleague, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. BURNSIDE. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] My colleague, if here, would vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES. My colleague, [Mr. HOAR,] as has been repeatedly stated, is paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD.]

Mr. MORRILL. My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired, as a very enthusiastic friend says, with the next President of the United States, [Mr. THURMAN.] [Laughter.]

Mr. WINDOM. My colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON.] The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. BRUCE. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. LAMAR] on this and all other questions connected with this bill. Were he here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Logan,	Windom.
Booth,	Dawes,	Morrill,
Burnside,	Hill of Colorado,	Platt,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ingalls,	Rollins,

NAYS—29.

Bailey,	Grover,	Maxey,	Vest,
Beck,	Harris,	Morgan,	Walker,
Call,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Cockrell,	Houston	Randolph,	Whyte,
Coke,	Jonas,	Ransom,	Withers.
Davis of W. Va.,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Eaton,	Kernan,	Slater,
Garland,	McDonald,	Vance,

ABSENT—30.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Bayard,	Farley,	Johnston,	Sharon,
Blair,	Ferry,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Bruce,	Gordon,	Kellogg,	Thurman,
Butler,	Groome,	Lamar,	Voorhees,
Carpenter,	Hamlin,	McMillan,	Williams.
Chandler,	Hampton,	McPherson,
Davis of Illinois,	Hereford,	Paddock,

So the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were non-concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BLAINE and Mr. CONKLING called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, a well-worn maxim says "it is wise to learn from an enemy." In the spirit of this saying I quote a political adversary, not an enemy, I hope. I read an article of political faith from the eloquent and distinguished Senator from Indiana now before me, [Mr. VOORHEES.] That Senator recently used these words:

> I would not vote * * * to surround the ballot-box and interpose troops to control elections on election day.

Again:

> I would not on any consideration, earthly or beyond, vote for a bill which by implication or construction allowed the President of the United States to order the military—infantry, cavalry, and artillery—with shotted guns and fixed bayonets to surround the polls on election day.

This doctrine sometimes ruthlessly trampled under foot by the democratic party, is one of the jewels in the republican faith. From the birth of the republican party—and it had its origin in the need to resist wrongs against freedom at the ballot-box and elsewhere—it has abhorred interference with or control of elections by the military or by anybody else. In Kansas, the nation saw the democratic party interfere with the bayonet and the saber to cleave down popular right and dominate popular elections by fraud and force. The purpose was to plant slavery in Kansas; yet we heard to-day from a Senator who boasted his proximity and intimate acquaintance with Kansas and its climate, that slaves, or rather the race which it was proposed to hold as slaves would perish from the frosts of Kansas, even without the snows. The Army was employed under democratic direction to disperse the Legislature of Kansas, and the Army did this sad work with all the enginery enumerated by the Senator from Indiana—"fixed bayonets, infantry, cavalry, and shotted guns" trained on the doors of the state-house.

Here in the capital city of the nation, here in Washington, under democratic authority, soldiers, regular soldiers of the United States, shot down in the streets, on election day, peaceable and blameless voters; and other acts of crime against the ballot disfigure the chapter of history which chronicles the achievements of the democratic party. By republican authority, by republican consent, no election was ever dominated by military force. No election in time and place of peace was ever dominated, controlled, or interfered with by military authority at the behest or with the consent of republican officials.

History, tradition, and fable have during these twelve stormy weeks alike been exhausted, to produce an instance of republican interference with an election by military force.

No instance has been found—not one. Kentucky in 1865 was not such an instance. Kentucky was a border State, a State lying between contending forces and sections, during the greatest war of modern times. It was the boast of one of Kentucky's Senators that her quota in both armies was full. In 1865 that great body of the men of Kentucky who had fought in the armies of rebellion for the overthrow of the Government, the Government having triumphed and the attempt to overthrow it having failed, came back to Kentucky to participate in the affairs and elections of that State. Abraham Lincoln was President—the same President who on the day when Robert E. Lee marched his army into Pennsylvania, was denounced by the democrats of Pennsylvania in State convention assembled. On the day or the day before Lee invaded Pennsylvania, with the soil of their Commonwealth quaking under the tramp of armed men, marching under the uplifted banners of revolt, striving without provocation and without cause to prostrate the fairest, freest, greatest government mankind had seen, with an army bent upon this fell purpose invading their State, the democratic party—the same party which we have heard from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] saved the Union—assembled in delegated State convention in Pennsylvania, and denounced Lincoln and the measures by which he and those with him were engaged in an attempt to crush that bloody treasonable attempt. Seeing the condition of things in Kentucky in 1865 Mr. Lincoln issued, and authorized generals of the Union Army to issue, proclamations and orders which placed portions of Kentucky virtually under martial law. It was at that time, with civil authority temporarily suspended, and swarming with those who had fought in the armies of rebellion, that Kentucky became the theater of occurrences of which her distinguished Senator complains.

He reads numerous documents, one of them to prove that at a precinct, Mud Lick—

> There were ten or fifteen armed soldiers present at the voting place, and one of their number, named Rogers, proclaimed in a loud voice, near the polls, that the next "illegal voter" who presented himself would be arrested and carried to "headquarters."

"The next illegal voter;" that was, the man who had drawn sword against the flag of his country. The narrative proceeds:

> This was about nine or ten o'clock in the morning, and the proof shows that most of the voters present left the polls immediately after this announcement was made, without making any attempt to vote.

From which I think it is fairly, if not indisputably inferable, that these much-abused citizens who had flocked about that poll intending to do the voting, were disloyal men, rebels; and when the man whose uniform typified the authority of the nation rose and said, "This is an election at which disloyal men freshly in arms against the Union are not to vote, and the next such an one who attempts it will be arrested," it was deemed by every rebel present a notice to quit served individually upon him, and they withdrew.

That, Mr. President, is not, I repeat, an instance of an election held in time and place of peace, although technically the war was over and the rebel armies had surrendered; nor is it an instance of an election dominated, controlled, or in any unjust or illegal sense interfered with by military force.

There have been wrongs at elections—grievous wrongs in time of peace—for many years in many places. The stealthy foot of fraud has crept to the polls, and achieved that which open violence could not gain. This was true long years ago in the State which I have the honor in part to represent. It has been true not only, as I have had occasion before to say, in recent times, but before many who sit before me were born. In April, 1838, forty years ago, before my youthful friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] saw the light, the judiciary committee of the assembly of the State of New York, not a special committee, but the regular judicial committee of the popular house of the Legislature of New York, submitted to that house a report, in which stand these words:

> Men vote who do not reside in the ward; often not in the State; aliens are frequently brought to the polls and their votes imposed upon the inspectors, although many of them have not been a week in the country, and voters are not unfrequently taken from poll to poll, voting in three or four different wards at the same election. These are the frauds constantly practiced at our elections—
>
> Constantly practiced at elections—
>
> to the disgrace of the State and to the manifest wrong of the whole country.

Those were democratic times; William L. Marcy was governor; and in later democratic times, more than this has been true, more than this has been avouched and proved out of the mouths of multitudes.

The Senator from Kentucky can find no doubt in his own State and in every State, unless it be the more youthful ones, instances of fraud, of irregularities, of violence not done by military force, at elections; but all of them, all that preceded 1866 put together, are insignificant and unworthy of attention compared with the violence and fraud practiced at elections in the Southern States since the war closed, and in the Northern States also since that time.

It is because such things have been, because such things still may be, that the republican party holds a clear and simple faith in this regard. It holds that the laws of the Union are to be faithfully executed everywhere, on every day; and if there be a choice of days, on election day more than on others, because that day is sacred to popular right and popular liberty more than any other day—because on that day a solemn proceeding takes place, a proceeding which concerns the birthright of every American citizen—his right, by his vote, to shape those laws by which he is to be governed. On such a day the republican party believes that all the power of all the laws, all authority and all influence should be brought to bear to insure to every man, be he high-born or humble, the right, without let or hinderance, fear or danger, to go to the election precinct in which his vote may be cast, to vote, to vote once, without molestation, and to have that vote honestly counted, every other vote being honestly counted also. The whole purpose of the republican party and of its creed in this respect, is achieved when the right I have endeavored to describe is enjoyed by every democrat and every republican, be he home-born or a foreigner.

We maintain that the national jurisdiction is adequate to this purpose at all national elections. Disclaiming as existing statutes do, the right to interfere with a State, a county, or a municipal election, they assert the national right under the provision of the Constitution so clearly stated by the honorable Senator from Iowa before me, [Mr. KIRKWOOD;]—clearly stated, whether the honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] be right or not when he says the national power is an ultimate power and the power of the States a primary power.

The republican party holds that under any construction of this provision of the Constitution the national authority has the right by statute to declare, and by administration to secure the preservation, the purity, and the sanctity of the ballot-box at a national election, so as to insure to every citizen entitled to vote the exercise of that right without molestation and without danger. We hold that the national power dwells everywhere, in every State, on every day when, according to the Constitution and the laws, an act is to be done by national authority. In an arsenal, in a dock-yard, in a fort, the national jurisdiction dwells three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. To superintend there, to reign there, to possess authority there, is the prerogative and function always of national jurisdiction; but beyond the forts, dock-yards, and the like, and also the District in which we sit, that too being exclusively subject to national law—beyond these enumerated places, in the States, in the city of Cincinnati, the home of my honorable friend, [Mr. PENDLETON,] in every city and every hamlet, on every hill-top, and in every vale, in all the States of the Union, we hold that the national jurisdiction obtains, that the national jurisdiction of right is, whenever an instance exists for the performance of a national act.

Such an instance or occasion is the holding of a national election, an election for the choice of the Representatives who together constitute the greatest repository of national power—the Representatives constituting the House which is endowed, which alone is endowed, with some of the most exalted and fundamental of all the attributes of sovereignty. The House of Representatives, and it alone, has power to originate what in Great Britain are called money bills. We call them revenue bills. The House of Representatives, and it alone, has the power of impeachment; it is the grand inquest of the nation, and upon its accusation no officer is so high, no officer is so panoplied with power, that he may not be dragged to the bar of the Senate to answer for all the high crimes and misdemeanors with which he stands charged. When an election occurs to choose in all the States the national officers who united are to wield powers so great as these, we believe an occasion arises which invokes the national solicitude, which deserves the national protection, which finds recognition in the words of the Constitution referred to by the Senator from Iowa.

How long, Mr. President, since the democratic party, its leaders, its organs of public sentiment, held that the United States had a duty to perform in protecting the ballot-box against violence and wrong?

In 1876, a presidential election was to occur, a parliamentary election also. All the members of the House were to be chosen. The land resounded with narratives of frightful, cruel, atrocities in the South. Not only newspapers, but private letters, written by northern visitors traveling in the South, and by residents of the South adopting all the safeguards which can be employed in transmitting matter by mail—giving oftentimes a caution to destroy the signature if not the letter lest intelligence of it should return to the place whence it came and bring chastisement or assassination upon its writer; not only by such channels of information, but from oral narratives delivered by people who fled from the South, and also by persons who went there to investigate, came tidings of disorder and violence. From these sources, not to speak of reports of congressional committees, came statements which convinced not only republicans of the North, but democrats of the North, that a condition of things existed in the South which amounted practically to a suspension of elective government in various parts of several States. At that time there sat in the House of Representatives, from the district in which I live, a democrat of some prominence, a democrat selected, if I remember aright, by a democratic House, or by the democratic portion of the House, as chairman of the board of managers sent here to conduct the trial of articles of impeachment. The Representative of whom I speak, Mr. Scott Lord, on the 10th of August, 1876, introduced into the House a preamble and resolution which may fresco the checkered and unique record of the Senate for this day and for two or three recent days.

Mr. LORD. I ask unanimous consent to have a resolution read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Whereas the right of suffrage prescribed by the constitutions of the several States is subject to the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which is as follows: "'ARTICLE XV.

"'SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

"'SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.'

"And whereas the exercise of the right of suffrage so prescribed and regulated should be faithfully maintained and observed by the United States and the several States and the citizens thereof;

"And whereas it is asserted that the exercise of the right of suffrage is in some of the States, notwithstanding the efforts of all good citizens to the contrary, resisted and controlled by fraud, intimidation, and violence, so that in such cases the object of the amendment is defeated—

So that in such cases the object of the amendment is defeated—

"And whereas all citizens, without distinction of race, or class, or color, are entitled to the protection conferred by such article: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That all attempts by force, fraud, terror, intimidation, or otherwise to prevent the free exercise of the right of suffrage in any State should meet with certain, condign, and effectual punishment, and that in any case which has heretofore occurred or that may hereafter occur in which violence or murder has been or shall be committed by one race or class upon the other, the prompt prosecution and punishment of the criminal or criminals in any court having jurisdiction is imperatively demanded, whether the crime be one punishable by fine or imprisonment or one demanding the penalty of death."

This resolution produced, as the record shows, great consternation in the House, and when it was moved to put it on its passage no quorum voted. That dreadful condition of things existed which the evening before last so shocked the tender sensibilities of honorable Senators. No quorum voted, a call of the House took place, and I observed that a large number of members, many of whom were really present, did not respond to their names even on the call. Eventually, after a great deal of finesse and evasion, and some dexterous attempts to avoid having this resolution brought to a direct vote, it passed on a call of the yeas and nays. But two men in the House voted against it: one was Mr. BLAND and the other was Mr. REAGAN, and one hundred and nine members did not vote at all, although a large number of them, as appears by the record, before and afterward were present in the House.

The passage of this resolution was received with great applause by two classes of the people: first by democrats—such democrats as conceived the pending bill, democrats who keenly relish the cunning and smartness of doing, in show and appearance, a thing which in reality they do not mean. The second class who applauded loudly were the people with republican proclivities who, for variety, sometimes vote the democratic ticket, people professing to be republicans, but usually finding an occasion if they can, to fear we shall be too partisan, and vote the democratic ticket or a portion of it, or at least praise the democratic party unduly whenever it does a thing, however empty, which is not atrociously, flagitiously wrong.

The applause and sensation was so great that it was thought there should be an order issued by the executive branch of the Government to emblazon and promulgate this great legacy of condensed, patriotic, and humane democratic sentiment. So, amid the applause of politic democrats and shaky republicans, the resolution went up to the executive department. There sat my honorable friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.] He was Minister of War: he was the uncrowned despot, the deus ex machina, at the head of our countless colossal army of twenty thousand men, most of them scattered beyond the abodes of civilized man. Whether he wore war-paint and feathers when he issued the order I am going to read, I do not know, but he issued an order as he and everybody else understood, to carry out and coincide with this regenerated, kind-hearted gospel of the democratic party; here is the order:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 15, 1876.

General W. T. SHERMAN, Commanding United States Army.

SIR: The House of Representatives of the United States, on the 10th instant, passed the following preamble and resolution, viz.

I have read it, and will not read it again.

The President directs that, in accordance with the spirit of the above—

I stop here to ask any Senator, if there be one on either side of the Chamber who supposes that the Army of the United States can be employed in time of peace to enforce the laws on election day except as a police, who supposes that the Army as an army, either in corps, brigades, regiments, batalions, companies, anything as the Army distinguished from the police force of the country, can act in the enforcement of civil laws,—I stop to beg him to listen to this order and judge from it how the administration of President Grant, the Cabinet including the Attorney-General, and everybody else, at that time understood the capacity in which the Army could be employed to enforce civil law:

The President directs that, in accordance with the spirit of the above, you are to hold all the available force under your command (not now engaged in subduing the savages of the western frontier) in readiness to be used upon the call or requisition of the proper legal authorities for protecting all citizens, without distinction of race, color, or political opinions, in the exercise of the right to vote as guaranteed by the fifteenth amendment, and to assist in the enforcement of certain, condign, and effectual punishment upon all persons who shall attempt by "force, fraud, terror, intimidation or otherwise to prevent the free exercise of the right of suffrage" as provided by the law of the United States, and have such force so distributed as to be able to render prompt assistance in the enforcement of the law. Such additional orders as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of these instructions will be given from time to time after consultation with the law officer of the Government.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

Here was a resolution demanding the arrest of these offenders, demanding that the disturbance and violence which they caused on election day should be overcome and beaten down, that the perpetrators should be handed over to the courts afterward to be tried; and here is an order directing the General of the Army to so dispose his forces that soldiers could hastily on emergency aid the civil authorities, and among other things arrest the doers of these wrongs and hand them over for trial. This outburst of democratic virtue was passed off all over the country by democratic orators and democratic organs, the resolution and the action taken under it, to show how faithful the democratic party was in executing the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments. The proceeding was the favorite proof during that campaign that the democratic party and the democratic party in Congress was just as faithful, just as ready, just as zealous as anybody else in the maintenance of right, in the observance of the constitutional amendments, and in the execution of the national laws. It was the ambition and effort of democrats then to seem to take the lead in guarding elections by national authority; now democrats have discovered that guarding elections is the province of the individual States, and that the United States has nothing to do with it.

Mr. President, the view of national right and duty presented by this democratic resolution, the view embodied in the acts of Congress known as the election laws, and embodied in other acts of Congress, some of them passed in the time of Washington, authorizing the President to use the Army to enforce the law, is the view now held and always held by the republican party.

When this extra session began, and before it began, the democratic majority in the two Houses held a very well understood and clearly exposed position. They refused to pass the appropriation bills to carry on the Government. Why? Because they said as condition of making appropriations they would have the repeal of certain laws, the election laws, the jury laws, and the laws under which the President may, by the military arm in aid of the civil authorities, execute the law on election day. The honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] who has the courage of his convictions and the ability to state them, standing where he now sits, informed the Senate and the country of all that I say and more; and from that hour to this moment he has proved the prophet, the John the Baptist of his party. It has done from step to step what he then foretold. The Senator stopped predicting before reaching the final action in the drama, and therefore the last movement of his party, which will be a retreat, will not discredit him as a seer.

On the other hand, the minority in the two Houses maintained two positions, and only two. One was this: to make no terms, to pay no price, to surrender no laws as the conditions on which a political party would allow the Government to live. The minority in the two Houses said that the people under laws originated or continued by democrats had paid, and were hereafter to pay revenue for well known purposes—revenue to maintain their Government and enforce their laws, and the minority said that the money thus paid and to be paid should be applied to those purposes without condition. Again, they said as their second position that these threatened laws are ancient, wholesome laws, that they should not be repealed or palsied. On these two positions we have stood. We still stand upon them.

I come now to inquire how any Senator who holds these positions or either of them, can vote for the pending bill.

The honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] told the Senate day before yesterday that the majority, having failed to secure a repeal of certain laws, was determined now to secure their "negation." No doubt it is to secure the negation of existing laws that section 6 of the pending bill is proposed. There should be no negation by Congress of permanent statutes save by repeal. Congress can do few things more vicious than to frustrate, nullify, and bring into contempt, laws which Congress does not repeal. To repeal a law, even a wholesome and wise law, is one thing; but because you cannot repeal it, or because you have not repealed it, by indirection to nullify it, to make it a dead letter, to make it an object of contempt, is a bad, pernicious example, and a crime against order and against the Constitution. If a law be hurtful or unwise, no mode of ascertaining its vice and want of merit is so certain and safe as to execute it. Every student of law and of history knows that. But the idea that laws on the statute-book are by legislators and by individuals to be observed, defied, or evaded, each acting upon his individual judgment, is indeed amazing.

When the bill first reached the Senate, there was some inquiry and coy reticence about the meaning of section 6. After the record made to-night, there will probably be little difficulty in finding out sufficiently what it is understood to mean by those who labor to enact it. It seems to me plainly designed to nullify these acts of Congress, and therefore to overthrow one of the positions maintained by the minority from the outset of this session. Surely it does impose conditions on which the Army may be allowed to live and move; and therefore it overthrows the other position held by the minority from the beginning.

The honorable Senator from Ohio said that this bill has no unusual feature except that it omits one object of appropriation. I quote him justly when I report him as saying that the question and the instance was exactly as it would be had the bill made appropriations for the Army generally and omitted the Ordnance department; and he asked, how can anybody vote against a bill, much more how can the Executive veto a bill, on the ground that an object of appropriation has been omitted? Let us test this a moment.

The Constitution says Congress shall have power to raise and maintain armies and a navy. I grant that it is within the constitutional power of Congress to maintain or not to maintain a navy. I admit that Congress has the power, saying nothing of the wisdom of its exercise, to say "It is not necessary to maintain one ship or gun-boat in ordinary." I admit the power to decide that no army at all should be maintained, or that if the Army is to be maintained no ordnance department shall be maintained. The bill before us does quite another and different thing.

The laws providing as they do for a navy, suppose the two Houses were to pass a bill appropriating money enough to keep the Navy afloat and keep it in repair, but providing that the Navy and its ships should not be used to defend the harbors of the nation or to protect the rights of American citizens abroad. Would this be a mere omission to appropriate money to maintain the Navy, or would it be a provision forbidding the President to do his constitutional duty? The Constitution makes the President Commander-in-Chief of the Army and of the Navy; and the Constitution says he shall take care that the laws are faithfully executed. The Constitution says some things too about the common defense: the harbors and the shores of the Republic, the honor of the flag, the rights of American citizens in foreign lands and on foreign seas—these and other things are affairs to be guarded by the Navy. When a single citizen, an adopted citizen, the child of a foreign nationality was imprisoned in the land of his birth, an American commander with a squadron demanded his release as the only condition on which he would refrain from bombarding a town. Suppose we had a provision in an appropriation bill appropriating money for the Navy and then interdicting the use of the Navy for such purposes as I have indicated—we should then have a parallel to the present instance; yet the experienced and illustrious jurist from Ohio speaking as the leader of his party tells us that no exception could be taken to such a bill save only that it had omitted an item of appropriation! That honorable Senator is fond of saying "that won't do;" and were he here I should venture to quote to him that celebrated saying.

Let me put another case. The Constitution says that treaties and laws made in pursuance of the Constitution shall be the supreme law of the land. Here are treaties and here are statutes which provide that the frontiers in the West, the frontiers of the State represented by the Senators who sit here, the frontiers represented by the Senators who sit there, shall be defended by the national arms against the red men of the desert, against the Sioux and the other savage tribes that roam over western plains. Suppose this Army bill provided that the money should not be used for any portion of the Army to be employed in repelling Indian hostilities or in protecting the white men, women, children and homes of the West, against the scalping-knives and tomahawks of the savage, would the honorable Senator from Ohio rise and say, "That is no objection to the bill on which a vote or a veto could rest; that is merely an instance in which one item of appropriation has been omitted?" An army of twenty thousand men maintained more than half of it to guard against Indian incursions, and an appropriation bill ties up that army and ties up the executive hand, and says it shall not be done; and yet treaties and laws say it shall be done; and the Constitution above all human laws says that the President shall take care that the laws, and all the laws, be faithfully executed.

Look at this provision, and along with it look at a provision of existing law. Read the two together; and answer if you can, that they do not forbid the President to do the very duties which the Constitution denotes, and which his oath of office embraces.

Section 6 provides that no money given by this bill is given "or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election within any State."

Section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, already law, to speak at the same time with this act, if act it shall become, declares:

No Department of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year—or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation.

Now mark—

The two provisions taken together are, the one, that this money shall not be employed for the purpose; the other, that no other money shall be employed for the purpose; so that no money shall be employed; and in no way, by no legal device, in so far as Congress can tie his hands, can the Executive execute his oath of office or his constitutional duties.

And what is the pretext for this? The honorable Senator from Ohio says that a law which defies the Constitution is no law at all, and he intimates that the election laws do violate the Constitution. He did not tell us that the act of 1792, the act of 1795, and the act of 1807, enacted by the men who made the Constitution and to which every authority civil and military, executive, judicial, and legislative has bowed for three-quarters of a century, are unconstitutional, but he intimated that the election laws were unconstitutional. These laws, enacted in 1870, challenged by the most astute lawyers in court after court, pronounced constitutional by the circuit court of the United States, pronounced constitutional as far as they have ever been drawn into question by the Supreme Court of the United States, never pronounced unconstitutional by any judicial tribunal whatever, the honorable Senator from Ohio has voted for appropriations to execute year after year; but now he thinks that they are unconstitutional, and therefore he says it is right for him to vote for such a bill, and that it would be right for the Executive, who already on his oath in repeated veto messages has affirmed the competency and the validity of these laws, to sign a bill which undertakes to frustrate, annul, and paralyze them.

Not content with the existing prohibition against incurring any pecuniary obligation unless the money has been actually appropriated, the majority propose yet more rigid restrictions.

I have in my hand a copy of the report made from a committee of conference a few hours ago by the Senator from Pennsylvania. The managers of the two Houses despite the action of the Senate have changed the judicial bill so as, if possible, to render this now pending provision a more effectual handcuff and fetter upon the Executive. It will be remembered that the Senate amended a provision in the judicial bill so as to except, as does a section of the Revised Statutes, the War and Navy Departments from the operation of the restriction in respect of certain exigencies touching which they might make contracts although the money was not appropriated. Here comes what the Senator from Pennsylvania has reported to us, agreed to by him and his associate manager from the Senate, agreed to by the democratic managers of the House, to be passed of course under a drill and discipline as perfect as Carnot ever knew—a discipline so absolute that when the members of a committee, with the brave Senator from Kentucky among them, on their oath and their honor report that certain changes of substance are needed to be made in a bill before it is fit to be adopted, after they have come into the Senate with that report, and on the yeas and nays voted for it after their reasons have been stated and stereotyped for their children to read, turn round at the beck and gesture of their party leader, and in the twinkling of an eye, on the call of the yeas and nays, voting upon all these recommended and adopted amendments in block, reverse the judgment they pronounced, reverse the vote they twice recorded, and the statement they first sent out to their countrymen, that these amendments were necessary, just, and right. A discipline like that will no doubt carry in both Houses a provision like this:

That the sums appropriated in this act for the persons and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; and no Department or officer of the Government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money—under any of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment or payment of general or special deputy marshals for service in connection with elections or on election day until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law.

Now, I beg Senators to notice—

That is the provision which you have, or are to have so far as democratic votes go, in lieu of that other provision which was adopted in the Senate even by democratic votes. If I could see the Senator, or to use his own sobriquet the embassador from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] I would be glad to submit a reflection to him: he is the Christopher Columbus of another extraordinary doctrine. He has discovered a constitutional continent, and owning it by right of discovery, I suppose, he made it a present to the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] who I consider now the largest landed proprietor of whom history gives note.

The honorable Senator from Georgia does not say, as the Senator from Ohio says that if a law is unconstitutional in the judgment of a legislator, then he is to refuse to execute or uphold it, then he is to give it the go-by and provide for its evasion. The Senator from Ohio confines his doctrine to cases where the individual thinks the law is unconstitutional. The Senator from Georgia, however, rising high into constitutional space leaves the Senator from Ohio absolutely nowhere as a constitutional expounder. What does he say? He says that every legislator is to consider not only whether a law is constitutional or not, but even if it is constitutional whether in his judgment it is an expedient law; and unless he thinks it is, then he is not bound to carry it out; and he says that looking the ground all over, taking a general range and average of the whole subject, he has concluded with himself that the members of Congress can be elected better, and the election, and I suppose the result, will be more satisfactory to him without executing the national election laws than if they are executed. He says having so determined for himself, that is a reason why he should vote to nullify these laws because he has tried to repeal them and he cannot. Now I see the honorable Senator from Ohio here. I wish he had come in before, and if I could do so without inflicting a repetition upon others I would bring to his notice the fact that although his constitutional doctrine is somewhat heroic, the Senator from Georgia has laid down a doctrine so far beyond and so high above the doctrine of the Senator from Ohio in novelty and intrepidity, that really it looks by comparison as if the Senator from Ohio is lacking in party daring or constitutional valor; and that we know he is not.

I have said, Mr. President, that the pending section 6 taken in connection with existing statutes, nullifies laws by which the President is empowered to act in given cases, and I will try briefly to prove that they do so. I ask Senators first of all to remember that although this bill is for only one year, and that a year in which congressional elections do not occur, every Senator who votes for the bill this year of course would be compelled by consistency to vote for the same bill next year. The Executive who signs the bill this year would be compelled to sign a bill in the same words next year, and next year is the year in which all the elections in all the congressional districts are to take place.

It has been said that section 6 has not the force I have ascribed to it because of the words "as a police force." This is the only argument I have heard.

I am told that gentlemen have argued or rather asserted that if those words become statute law, still the President will have the power, if occasion requires, to employ military force to keep the peace at the polls. The convenient mode of examining the question is to inquire whether national troops employed in time of peace to enforce civil law do necessarily act as police or not. Of course, everybody knows that they do not, in the language of one of these veto messages, perform the duties of the "ordinary civil police force." I take it there is nobody beyond the walls of a lunatic asylum who supposes that the Army does, that the Army can, or that anybody ever proposed the Army should do duty as ordinary civil police. I shall read authorities, however, to show, as until this bit of legislation was conceived I supposed had never been doubted, that both in England and in this country the Army and any portion of the Army acting merely to enforce laws, acts as police, as a police force, as a force auxiliary to the civil police. No matter how stated, the truth is all the time the same, as I understand it, that the Army proceeding in time of peace, when martial law has not been proclaimed, to enforce municipal or civil law, acts as a police force, with all the liabilities, all the immunities, all the prerogatives, and none other, attaching to civil officers doing the same thing.

I read first from a careful and highly commended text-book, Wise on Riots. I read for the sake of the author's opinion, and also for the opinions he cites. Says this publicist:

> The jealousy which has always been evinced in this country of any approach to military government, was probably the foundation of the erroneous notion in 1780, that soldiers were powerless without the authority of the civil magistrates; and the surprise expressed in 1832, at that part of Lord Chief Justice Tindal's charge which was specially directed to this subject, showed that the error was far from being extinguished. Mr. Justice Holroyd had indeed stated, in Redford vs. Birley, (3 Stark. N. R. 101; see also Burdett vs. Abbott, 4 Taunt. 401,) that the military were citizens no less than soldiers, and instances occurred in the Luddite disturbances of their acting alone, in accordance with what is unquestionably the law of this country; but never was it so clearly expounded as in the following extract from that charge:—
>
> And while I am stating the obligation imposed by the law on every subject of the realm, I wish to observe that the law acknowledges no distinction in this respect between the soldier and the private citizen. The soldier is still a citizen, lying under the same obligation, and invested with the same authority, to preserve the peace of the king as any other subject. If the one is bound to attend the call of the civil magistrate, so also is the soldier; if the one may interfere for that purpose when the occasion demands it, without the requisition of the magistrate, so may the other too; if the one may employ arms for that purpose, where arms are necessary, the soldier may do the same. Undoubtedly, the same exercise of the discretion which requires the private subject to act in subordination to and in aid of the magistrate, rather than upon his own authority, before recourse is had to arms ought to operate in a still stronger degree with a military force. But, where the danger is pressing and immediate; where a felony has actually been committed, or cannot otherwise be prevented; and from the circumstances of the case, no opportunity is offered of obtaining a requisition from the proper authorities,—the military subjects of the king, like his civil subjects, not only may, but are bound to do their utmost, of their own authority, to prevent the perpetration of outrage, to put down riot and tumult, and to preserve the lives and property of the people.

Now the text resumes:

> Prudence and regard to public opinion will keep back the military, even more than mere private individuals, from voluntary interference, and the instances are happily very rare of such interference being necessary. But a question occurs, which cannot be passed over in a legal work, although it is one of a most delicate nature, and upon which only broad principles can be laid down. It is the degree of justification the military will have by law for acts done by them, while aiding the civil power. If they are engaged in executing a warrant, then they will be protected in enforcing that which it is their legal duty to enforce, to the same extent as constables.

I read one other extract:

> Like all other ministers of the law, whether executing warrants or obeying parol orders, which in cases of riots seem to have, under 34 Edw. 3, c. 1, the force of warrants, (see 1 Hawk, c. 65, s. 18,) they are exposed to an indictment or a court-martial for disobedience, or, if death ensues, are liable to be indicted for manslaughter or murder.

Again:

> Here, too, it may be remarked, that the military are constables, being engaged in a lawful purpose, would not collectively be answerable for any misconduct. Not so, the mob. In the one case each must take the consequences of the act of any one, while in the other no person will be answerable for the improper act of one, except that one only.

He says further:

> The knowledge of these principles will exercise a wholesome influence both over the military and the civilians. Not forgetting their responsibility to the laws, they will honestly and manfully do their duty, quite satisfied that even if the prejudices or angry passions of the people should from accidental circumstances expose them to temporary difficulty.

I read next from the third volume of Wharton's Criminal Law the words of this author and also the language used by Judge King of Philadelphia on the occasion of the Philadelphia riots of 1844. He says:

> Those who love law and order should not shrink or hesitate in striking an honest blow for their protection, when threatened by lawless violence. When such a timid and feeble spirit prevails the days of the Republic are numbered. This general duty, this universal obligation, extends to the citizen soldiers who, in common with all other members of the community, are required to be assistant in the maintenance of the public peace on the call of the civil magistrate. They are subject to the same penalties in case of neglect or refusal to appear, as any other citizen summoned by the sheriff.

Let me stop to remind the Senate that by a national statute all the powers possessed by sheriffs to summon the posse, whether the civil or the military posse, are conferred upon the marshals of the United States; so that mutatis mutandis this authority is applicable to the case we have in hand—the case of quelling riot and tumult on a national election day and enforcing on that day peace at the polls and the national election laws:

> They do not—

I beg Senators to observe the words I am about to read:

> They do not, on such occasions, act in their technical character as military When assembled, they are but part of the sheriff's posse, and act in subordination to, and in aid of, that officer, who is the true and responsible chief of all forces summoned under his authority. If the soldiers act in any manner not authorized by law, they are amenable for such acts, not to the military but the civil law. In brief, as to all rights and authorities, they stand on the same footing with the other citizens summoned by the sheriff, and composing with them his posse.

Let me read another authority—the words of an eminent lawyer, one largely instructed, a democrat, an Attorney-General of the United States. I read first the head-note of the opinion of Caleb Cushing delivered on the 27th of May, 1854:

> A marshal of the United States, when opposed in the execution of his duty, by unlawful combinations, has authority to summon the entire able-bodied force of his precinct, as a posse comitatus.
>
> This authority comprehends, not only bystanders and other citizens generally, but any and all organized armed force, whether militia of the State, or officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States.

He traces first as found in the common law the doctrine he announces, and then observes:

> Such being the law as to the marshals and their deputies, there was no absolute need, in the fifth section of the act of 1850, to introduce a clause to authorize them to command all requisite assistance in the execution of the warrants and precepts mentioned in that act, which should be directed to them. In this respect the act is declaratory merely.

Further on he says:

> These considerations—

After stating the prerogatives, permissions, restrictions, liabilities of all men acting as a posse or aiding to keep the peace—

> These considerations apply as well to the military as to the civil force employed; for the posse comitatus comprises every person in the district or county above the age of fifteen years, (Watson's Sheriff, page 60,) whatever may be their occupation, whether civilians or not; and including the military of all denominations, militia, soldiers, marines, all of whom are alike bound to obey the commands of a sheriff or marshal. The fact that they are organized as military bodies—

I beg Senators to observe these words—

> The fact that they are organized as military bodies, under the immediate command of their own officers, does not in any wise affect their legal character. They are still the posse comitatus.

Here he cites the twenty-first volume of Parliamentary History containing a judgment of Lord Mansfield.

Now, Mr. President, let me put one case and only one, and I shall do it very briefly. In the city of Cincinnati, in the city of New York, where you will, on the next national election day when two or three o'clock has come and one party, in the language of the primary, having succeeded in getting in its votes, thinks it would be just as well to hinder all after-comers from depositing their ballots, men crowd about the polls, they throng the way, they fill up the approaches, they make a corral of roughs, and peaceable citizens stand in the rear while a half hour is wasted in a mock challenge to some perfectly well-known voter, the object being to wear out the time so that the sun shall descend before all the ballots are received. A deputy marshal, if our friends will allow one to be there which I rather think they will——

Mr. EATON. Not if I can help it.

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, no; not if you can help it. I am aware of that. If there were no rights allowed in this country except what the democratic party would respect, a great many rights would be missing.

Mr. EATON. No right.

Mr. CONKLING. I am aware not if you can help it; but if the Executive remembers the Constitution and does his duty, you cannot help it.

Mr. EATON. We will try.

Mr. CONKLING. I know you will, you have tried and tried in vain so far.

Mr. EATON. The Senator ought to know that the language he has been reading applies to the militia of the States, not to the Army of the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. Which book is that?

Mr. EATON. The book you read from.

Mr. CONKLING. Wharton's Criminal Law?

Mr. EATON. Yes, sir. It has no reference whatever to the Army.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish my friend had not said that. It does not disparage him in my estimation as a lawyer at all, but it does something else: it convinces me that he is looking through that mist sometimes called passion. In the quaint old language of the law it is furor brevis. Sudden and short passion, nothing else, could lead the honorable Senator from Connecticut to such carping technicality.

Mr. EATON. I beg to say again, with the Senator's permission, that that book from which the Senator read and that chapter from which he read has reference simply to the militia of a State and not to the organized Army of the United States. Read the chapter.

Mr. CONKLING. If my honorable friend should commit a homicide now and employ me to defend him, I should certainly defend him on the ground of furor brevis, that heat of passion which would reduce his offense below the grade of murder. The Scripture says a contented mind is great riches. I trust my friend from Connecticut can contain himself while I complete the remark I had begun when he interrupted it?

Mr. EATON rose.

Mr. CONKLING. Cannot the Senator wait?

Mr. EATON. I can wait.

Mr. CONKLING. Will you wait?

Mr. EATON. I desire to make one suggestion.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I remind the honorable Senator that "they also serve who only stand and wait."

Mr. EATON. I should like to make a suggestion, if there is no objection.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I will sit and wait.

Mr. EATON. It is, that if a contented mind be greatness, I have no doubt of the wealth of my friend from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONKLING. Having listened to that very luminous and entertaining observation, I will stop to make the reply which his criticism requires.

Great indeed must be the forgetfulness of a trained and practiced lawyer when he makes, as of any value, or pertinent at all, such a cavil as has fallen from the honorable Senator from Connecticut.

In the first place, a sheriff obtains all his powers from the common law as declared in sundry statutes. In the next place, in that volume of national laws is a section which I will stop and find should my friend require, declaring that all the powers to summon a posse comitatus, whether that posse be civil or military, possessed by the sheriff of a county, is vested in the marshals of the United States and they are clothed with all of them.

Mr. EATON rose.

Mr. CONKLING. My friend said awhile ago that he could wait. I begin to doubt his power to wait.

The power of a marshal in his district is identical with the power of a sheriff in his bailiwick. That granted, does the Senator tell me that the one has not the same permission and right to call upon the national military that the other has upon the State military? If he does tell me so, I will read him down by authorities in the very book to which I have referred him.

This authority—

Says Cushing, dealing with the authority to summon the posse comitatus—it comprehends, not only bystanders and other citizens generally, but any and all organized armed force, whether militia of the State, or officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States.

Is that the militia of a State?

Mr. EATON. Are you asking for information?

Mr. CONKLING. I always need information.

Mr. EATON. I was not speaking of that, but was speaking of the other book from which you read.

Mr. CONKLING. This is the third time my friend has interrupted to say that he is talking about Wharton's Criminal Law. I read from it as I stated, the language of Judge King in the case of the Philadelphia riots in 1844. Does not everybody know that those cases involved the State authorities and that Judge King was a State judge and was talking about the power of the sheriff to command the services of the military force of the State? All this appears from what I read. Having read it, I followed it by reading from Cushing to show that the same powers which the sheriff had touching the State militia, the marshals had touching the soldiery of the United States. My honorable friend will not misunderstand me when I say that I think there was more of asperity than was necessary when he called my attention to the fact that I had read from a book touching the powers of a sheriff, inasmuch as I so stated, and the language itself so showed, and inasmuch as I followed it with an authority to prove that what was true as there announced as to State militia on the order of State officers was equally and as broadly true touching the marshals and their deputies in respect of the soldiery of the United States.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator interrupted me in the midst of an illustration which I suppose the Senate has forgotten and I will not inflict it again. I will endeavor to complete it notwithstanding the division and confusion which my honorable friend has introduced into it by the very valuable contribution he made to the Senate's stock of information when he said I had read what every one who listened knew I had read.

I was saying, suppose on election day a mob of men acting in concert at two or three o'clock are wedging out and fencing out all voters, and a marshal—such as I repeat I think we shall have at the polls on the next national election day, and all in despite of the honorable Senator and his party,—goes up to these law-breakers and bids them desist. They take this marshal and do what is called "hustling him," one turns him around and another catches him and turns him around and in a few moments he finds himself on the outskirts of the crowd bringing up the very latter end of the assemblage. The marshal calls on the bystanders to arrest those who maltreat him and block the way to the polls. There may be a large company of roughs—I will not describe them particularly because when we come to specify the different denominations of democrats the honorable Senator from Kentucky does not like it, and other leaders seem to take umbrage; therefore I will say nothing about shoulder-hitters or the graduates of rat-pits or of any of the nurseries of modern democracy—but these roughs refuse to be governed by law or to heed the marshal, and there they are practically paralyzing the law and baffling the election. The bystanders are called on, the honorable Senator from Kentucky is there, I am there, and the marshal says "I command you to take hold and help me." The honorable Senator from Kentucky would be brave enough to do it, but it would be quite like me to say "Well I do not know, I do not care to be knocked down by a slungshot or stabbed with a dirk-knife, and I am not going into this motley crowd to cope with it, and you must get somebody else." Thereupon he goes down and finds a recruiting officer or somebody else in charge of a squad of soldiers, and they having had authority and permission from their commanding officer to answer a summons if the marshal calls upon them, he goes and says "I want you to go down there with your shoulder-straps if you have them, or with your blue coat and brass buttons which typify the national authority, and bid these men desist," and they go along with the marshal, three or ten as you please, and they are as large and swelling as the Senator from Kentucky can make them with all the accouterments and appalling machinery which soldiers carry. The marshal goes up and says "they are the men who threw me out of this crowd and who threatened me and who as you see are choking the mouth of this thoroughfare, and refusing to let people vote." Thereupon the sergeant if he is there, the corporal if he is there, the private if he is the head man in this portentous array of military pomp and power, goes up to these law-breakers and says "You must desist," and he says to the marshal "Which is the man who knocked you down if you were struck?" He says "That is the man." The military man says "You arrest him, and we will protect you." He does arrest him and takes him to the station-house and he swears out a warrant against him and he summons the witnesses the next day against him.

Now, I inquire, do these soldiers act as an army and not as a police? What term in the nomenclature of the art of war describes these three men or five men; what are they? Not an army corps, I judge, nor a regiment, nor a brigade, nor a battalion, nor a company, nor a park of artillery—a squad perhaps; in some sense a squad, one single man perhaps. He is a squad, possibly he might be an awkward squad, [laughter,] but does he move as an army? One drill or recruiting sergeant with a lame leg hobbles up and says, "I am a military officer, and I tell you that if you knock that man down again, he being a civil officer, I will arrest you; I will go and call other soldiers to arrest you." Is this lame sergeant an army or a navy? What is he? He is a man of war no doubt. He is a police officer; he is a man acting as auxiliary to the ordinary civil police; he is an individual belonging to the power of the county, in State phrase, or belonging to the power of the United States, in national phrase. He is a member of the posse comitatus. If in the city of Cleveland a military company in its armory drills to-night, and a police officer, not even a sheriff, rushes in and says, "A horrid murder is freshly done in the street, three men have done it, and I cannot cope with them, and they are robbing the body of the man they murdered; I speak to you as the captain of this company; I command you to come out here with your men, and form a corral of muskets around these homicides while I put handcuffs upon them;" the company under an order from their captain, under an order from the colonel of the regiment if he is there, the general of the brigade if he is there, march out and form a hollow square, or surround these culprits and with their own hands pinion them, or reduce them to submission by use of their bayonets or their sabers; I ask every lawyer who hears me in what quality, in what capacity, do they act? As Attorney-General Cushing, as Judge

King says, as the chief-justice of England said, as the commentator whose book is in my hand says, they act in aid of the civil authority. If they go out and unnecessarily slay a citizen, the man who does it is triable, as I am triable, on indictment for murder before a civil tribunal. In aiding the lawful authority, every man is responsible only for what he does himself. There is a broad distinction between a mob and the authorities who resist a mob. Every man in a mob is liable for what every other man does, and in trials growing out of the Lord George Gordon riots the judges of England ruled that the cry of the mob, no matter who uttered it, could be given in evidence against every man who was acting and taking part in that mob. Why? Because if what they were doing was a misdemeanor all were principals, if it was a felony all were principals in the second degree who were present aiding and abetting. Thus it is that, in ventures of violence and disorder, every accomplice, every conspirator runs the risk of the acts of all his co-conspirators; if a man on the verge of a mob with which I am acting does a murder, I run the risk of answering myself the penalty of the law. But in the law's favor, for the sake of order and authority, it is one of the maxims and principles of the law that they who are engaged in maintaining it, in arresting tumult, in quelling violence, are to answer severally, each for himself, and not jointly one for another.

Mr. President, I beg pardon of the Senate for occupying all this time. I have in my hand, and I intended to notice, one of the veto messages sent to the House by the President. I will not detain the Senate longer. In lieu of reading as I intended to do some of its passages and commenting upon them, I wish to say that if a veto message could assign reasons applicable to the pending bill, in my judgment this message assigns them. Should it be rewritten in order to show the abridgment, the paralysis which this provision enacts against existing laws, it could scarcely be more substantially adapted to this purpose than it is. And yet the majority here, about to pass an act in the teeth of this argument, tell us through their leader that they will not allow this bill to return to the House because of their anxiety to bring to an immediate close this hurtful, needless session.

Sir, let me say that if economy of time were to be studied, it might have been well to adopt some of the amendments, wise and wholesome as they were, which have been offered to this bill; it might have been wise to except from the destruction it works two acts of Congress signed by George Washington, one act signed by Thomas Jefferson, and a section of the Revised Statutes embodying them all passed recently by both Houses of Congress and signed by the then Executive.

The edict of partisan authority denied us permission to reconcile in some measure this act with existing laws, not the election laws but some of the most ancient and wholesome laws of the Republic. Whether that refusal consults time wisely, whether it will conduce to a speedy and wholesome termination of this extra session, we shall all know before long. Meanwhile having run the risk of ruining my reputation as a prophet once to-night by predicting what the votes of democrats would be, and having escaped shipwreck in that instance by turning out to be right, I will wait for events to display the next phase of this changeful comedy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass? upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, only a word. I said something which called from my friend from New York some rather sharp language that in my judgment was utterly unnecessary and utterly uncalled for. The Senator from New York read from Wharton on Criminal Law, and, if I understood him aright in that reading, he did not say one word with regard to the militia or the citizen soldiers; and thus it was, knowing as I did what those riots were in Philadelphia and what those remarks applied to, that I went and took the book and examined it for myself. Nobody doubts, nobody can doubt, that the sheriff of a county has a right to call out the posse comitatus. Nobody doubts, nobody desires to doubt the great fact that the military of the State, whether they be organized or unorganized, are subject to the call of the sheriff. That is all there is in that authority which the Senator from New York read, and it was unnecessary that he should have exhibited some little temper because I saw fit to interrupt him in his very delightful speech, not to say argument.

And now, sir, I desire to say one word in regard to a remark or two that was uttered a great many hours ago by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.] He found fault with this clause in the bill which we have before us:

> That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

And this question was put by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin: suppose the President of the United States desired to send troops to New York on the 1st day of November to be in readiness to prevent riot which in his opinion might occur on election day, what then? That very question of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin contains the pith of this whole matter. We deny, we utterly deny that the Constitution of the United States gives to the President of the United States any such power as this—a President sitting here in the White House to determine that in his opinion a month hence there may be a riot in the city of New York that would require the armed force of the United States. The very question of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin smacks of tyranny and oppression, and every lawyer, every sane man knows it. What! Has it come to this, that a President of the United States, a month in advance of an election, is to apprehend a riot and take the Army of the United States, against all law and against all right, and move that Army into a State in this Union without being called for either by the executive of the State or by the Legislature of the State? That is the very thing that the democratic party find fault with, and that is the very thing that the republican party demand.

Mr. BLAINE. Does my friend mean that the President cannot move part of the Army into a State until the governor invites him to do it?

Mr. EATON. For the purpose of protecting the people of the State?

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no, but for any purpose he chooses?

Mr. EATON. For the purpose of protecting the people of a State against insurrection, riot, or violence, no, a thousand times no; and no Senator ought to ask a question of that character of other Senators.

Mr. BLAINE. For what purpose is the President at liberty to move an army into and within the States?

Mr. EATON. For what purpose is the President at liberty to do it? He is at liberty to do it when he is called upon by the Legislature of the State or the executive of the State; or he may move, if it happens to be in a fortress in Rhode Island, or New York, or Connecticut, a squad of men to take charge of it. Undoubtedly a squad of men may be moved to take care that the rammers of the guns are kept properly dressed, and that the touch-holes of the guns are properly cleaned out.

Mr. BLAINE. Then my friend only permits the President to move the Army of the United States where there are some rammers to be dressed and some touch-holes of cannon to be attended to. Is that all?

Mr. EATON. It is about all so far as I choose to say it in answer to the question of the Senator from Maine; just about all.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well.

Mr. EATON. We are talking here about the right of the President to interfere with regard to an election in a State, to move a portion of the Army of the United States in apprehension of violence into Maine or New York, to take care of the people of those States a month hence when an election is coming on. I deny any such power. I vote no money to give the President any such power.

Said the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, the democratic Senate has made up its mind that riot shall run one day in the year and that on the other three hundred and sixty-four days in the year the President may keep the peace in a State. Why, sir, is it possible? There is not one day in the year that the President of the United States can send the Army of the United States upon the soil of a State to keep the peace; not one day. There is no such power; none whatever, either on election day or any other day. Three hundred and sixty-four days in the year, said the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, the President of the United States has the right to keep the peace with the Army on the soil of a State. Where does the authority come from? Late as it is, I will give my time to any gentleman who will look at the Constitution of the United States and show me any such authority given to the President by that instrument. There is no such authority. He cannot move the troops of the United States on to the soil of Massachusetts in order to protect the people of Massachusetts without being requested either by the Legislature or the executive of that State. Such I have been taught; such is my belief; such has been the belief of old Massachusetts, in my judgment, from 1776 down to to-day.

The honorable Senator from Wisconsin hazarded another opinion with regard to the democratic Senators; he said they did not wish for peaceable elections. I use his words. Is it possible that there is a single member of the Senate on that side of this floor who believes that the democratic Senators do not desire peaceable elections as much as the republican Senators? Can it be possible? Now, I undertake to say that I do not believe there is a single Senator upon that side of the Chamber who does not desire peaceable elections. God forbid that I should permit any spirit of party to induce me to so vilify gentlemen who are worthy of seats on this floor; and I confess that I regretted to hear a remark of that character come from the honorable Senator from Wisconsin. If he had said that the views or the purposes or the conduct of the democratic Senators, in his judgment, would tend to produce elections not peaceable, I should have found no fault with him; I should have believed his judgment was in error; but when he or any other Senator on this floor makes a wholesale charge of that character against the democratic members of this Senate, he does no injury to them, but he does great injury to his own reputation for fairness.

Sir, I will detain the Senate but a moment longer, for I cannot argue this question, even in my poor way, at this late hour. The honorable Senator from New York said that this was a negation or nullification of a law, and he volunteered to say—true he kept as near the wind as he could; he has a way of steering his bark very near the wind—he said he did not mean it offensively to anybody, but it was a crime against the Constitution. A crime against the Constitution for his peers and his equals to take the course that they deem best in order to maintain in its purity the Constitution of our fathers! It does not become the Senator from New York or any other Senator to charge this portion of the Senate with being guilty of a crime against the Constitution.

But my friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS]—I hope he is here—in that part of his speech which alluded to the southern majority on this floor, used this language, and I wrote it down, speaking of the South, he spoke of its obsequious allies at the North. I thought we had about got through with trash of that character. The northern Senators on this floor "the obsequious allies of the South!"

Mr. President, the northern democratic Senators on this floor are the equals and peers of the Senators from the South; jointly they meet, jointly and together they meet for the purpose of getting up proper laws to govern the whole of this country. "Obsequious allies of the South!" Mr. President, my relations with the Senator from Kansas have been kindly and friendly, and I did not expect to hear him or any other man charge my honorable friend from Ohio, now in the chair, [Mr. THURMAN,] my other honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] the two Senators from Indiana, the two Senators from New Jersey, my honorable friend from New York, [Mr KERNAN,] my honorable friend from California, [Mr. FARLEY,] and the honorable Senators from Oregon, as "the obsequious allies of the South."

I suppose that the northern Senators on this floor are the peers and equals of the southern Senators on this floor, as independent, as honorably exercising their own judgment operating upon the minds, if possible, (and it is not impossible,) of their southern friends; and I beg to say this, and I have a right to say it, I take great pleasure in saying it, that if there is anything in these laws that the honorable Senator from Kansas does not quite like or the honorable Senator from Maine does not quite like, or my good friend from Minnesota, I beg to say to them, excuse our southern friends and lay as much of that charge as they please to us, the northern branch, and we will try to bear our full share of that difficulty, if there is any difficulty attending it. But let us be done with this talk about "the obsequious allies of the south!" I will not characterize language of that character as I might do with propriety, I rather say that I regret it; I rather say that I trust we shall never again hear on this floor language of that character. It is an insult to your equals, an insult to your peers.

I suppose the time has not yet come when a man who happens to represent Indiana or Connecticut on the floor of this Senate cannot exercise his own judgment; the time has not yet arrived when he cannot follow out the dictates of his own conscience without being insulted upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, I think we have done our full duty with our republican friends. We have given from one o'clock until twelve o'clock, and there certainly hereafter will be no fault found with the democratic members of this Senate, northern and southern, that they have not permitted fair and frank and full debate. And now, Mr. President, I am ready to vote upon this question; and I trust that the gentleman at the other end of the Avenue will put his name to this bill, that it will become a law, and that the fierce wrath of my honorable friend from New York, or my honorable friend from Maine, I cannot quite quote his words, but I think somebody really desired the President in signing this bill to write himself down an ass.

Mr. BLAINE. No; that was the judicial bill; I am responsible for that phrase. I said that in regard to the judicial bill; but with my full and complete assent——

Mr. EATON. I beg pardon. I withdraw it.

Mr. BLAINE. With my full and complete assent the Senator from Connecticut may apply it also to this bill.

Mr. EATON. Very well. The President in signing this bill, for we believe he will sign it, will not write himself down an ass, an Ensign Stebbins, or any other production of the pine forests of Maine, [laughter,] but that he will when he signs the bill write himself down a pure statesman, a man who desires to see good done to every portion of his common country.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate but a few minutes. In view of the vote I propose to cast upon the Army appropriation bill I deem it proper to accompany it with a very few remarks.

The bill, as it is about to pass, purports to appropriate money for the support of the Army in performance of all its duties except that of acting as police at election polls. Section 6 of the bill provides that no portion of the appropriation shall be used as compensation for "any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at any election held within any State." I shall not attempt, at this late hour, to make an argument, but will simply state some general views. I disagree with Senators on both sides of the Chamber, especially the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] in their definition of the term "police force," and also in their announcements that this bill if passed will be a negation of existing laws. The Army, as it has been occasionally used on election days, has not acted as a police force, and I do not believe any skilled military man would call the troops referred to in the order of the late Secretary of War, Mr. CAMERON, which has just been read by the Senator from New York, a police force, nor do I believe it can be so designated or described from a legal stand-point, nor do I believe the duty they were ordered to perform was police duty. Each soldier was all the time under the military command of his military superior, and in case of dereliction was subject to punishment under the articles of war.

Now, Mr. President, I am not speaking as a lawyer, but as a man somewhat skilled in military terms and definitions, and their relation to civil affairs, and I say again that I believe no man skilled in military affairs would ever designate the force contemplated by the order of Mr. CAMERON a police force; and I will go further, and say that I do not believe the military force of the United States ever has been, should be, or need be called upon to act as a police force at the polls. Under this view, the prohibition as to the use of any part of this appropriation for the purpose of policing the polls amounts to nothing. Although not a lawyer, I will venture to say, in passing, that I do not believe the term "posse comitatus," so often referred to in this debate as being synonymous with the term "police force," is so. The police may be summoned like others to the posse, but a posse never becomes a police force. The police force is regular, continuous, and specially manned; the "posse" never exists except in an emergency, and every man in the Republic can be called to it. Of this subject, Mr. President, you are better informed than I am. This expression of my opinion refers to the common acceptation of the terms, and I believe that of men who think on such subjects ninety-nine out of every hundred, as they are met upon the streets, would, if asked the definition of these terms, agree with me.

But suppose I am entirely wrong in these views. Suppose that a body of troops used in any way to keep peace at the polls becomes thereby a police force. Suppose that the Army used as was contemplated by the order of Secretary Cameron was a police force, still this bill would not prevent the President from using a like police force; it simply provides that no money appropriated by it shall be used for paying, clothing, transporting, or subsisting that force. Now, the President can sign the bill, knowing that it does not appropriate money in an objectionable way, and is good as far as it goes; it may not appropriate money to pay for the maintenance of the Army while it is on a certain specific duty, but he can take what this bill gives, because it surely provides for the Army to a great extent, and does not restrict his power, as President, to order the Army upon any duty necessary to the just and efficient execution of the laws of the nation; and if it does not supply him with all the money necessary to provide for the Army in all emergencies, two courses are open to him: he can ask Congress for more money, or he can try to get along without it.

If he asks for more, and we decline to give it, or, in other words, if Congress should adjourn without appropriating the money asked for, he can, if he thinks proper, call its members together again and inform them that the interests of the public service require that money should be appropriated for the specific service to which the prohibition in this bill refers, or if he does not deem the matter of sufficient importance, in view of all attending circumstances, to warrant a call for an extraordinary session of Congress, he can wait until the regular session comes around; and if in the mean time an emergency should arise to necessitate the use of military force to aid in the execution of the law on election day he can order such forces as he thinks necessary to that duty, and call upon Congress at the next session for means to pay any deficiency that may be made by the emergency. Mr. President, I believe the appropriation is ample, and available for all purposes and duties appertaining to the Army, and if we send him no other bill which stands in the way of the Constitution or the best interests of the country, the President will, in my opinion, be glad to allow this bill to pass, to allow us to go home, and to allow the country to have the rest it so much needs and so much desires.

Now, Mr. President, we have before us the report of the conference committee on what is called the "little judiciary bill." I have a right upon this occasion to speak of that report, as my reference to it will be in connection with what I have said upon the bill now before the Senate. Section 2 of this report reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sums appropriated in this act for the persons and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; and no Department or officer of the Government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money under any of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment or payment of general or special deputy marshals for service in connection with elections or on election day until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law.

Our friends on the other side of the Chamber cannot expect us to support this section of the bill because the very terms of it forbid the President making appointments of deputy marshals during the ensuing fiscal year, which he has a right to make under the law. If he approves this section, he can incur no liability, he can make no contract. He cannot appoint such officers without making an implied contract with them, and giving them a claim upon the Government for services, thus incurring a liability. The passage and approval of this section would be a negation of existing law, not a repeal. It would be a restriction of the authority of the President conferred upon him by the Constitution and the laws, an act which I would under no circumstances consent to, if I could help it. I do not desire to refer to the President improperly, but I will venture to say that he ought not to sign any bill which has a clause of this kind in it. In that opinion I am very fixed.

Now, Mr. President, I am free to say that I am very glad of the opportunity to give a vote to show to my constituents that I do not believe in the use of troops at the polls as a police force. Such use is not in accordance with the spirit of our institutions. I am as firm a believer in the powers of the President to enforce all the laws of the United States as the Senator from New York, and I agree almost entirely in all he has said to-night, in reference to the exercise of that authority, which, in my opinion, covers all matters touching Federal laws, whether they relate to elections or other national affairs.

Mr. President, the people of the United States are not afraid of the Army; they are not afraid of soldiers. The Army is made up of the people. We have certainly seen enough of soldiers within the last eighteen years not to be afraid of them, as disturbers of the peace. During the war, many misgivings were expressed as to what would become of the enormous armies after the war was over; but when a million of armed men were mustered out and absorbed by the industries of the country, and willingly made peaceable citizens, the people were ashamed of their distrust of the soldiers. The survivors of the war returned to their homes and their families, and are counted among our best citizens and most faithful civil officers. The people have no misgivings in reference to the Army; they have no fear of it. If it were disposed to be bad, it is too small to harm this great country; but it is not disposed to be bad; its rank and file are law-abiding men.

Mr. President, I am not unmindful of the fact that Senators on the other side of the Chamber have failed to place themselves in a proper position, by the adoption of amendments which have been proposed to-night to the Army bill, by our side. The amendments would have made the bill no stronger as an appropriation bill, but I think they would have made it look better. The President has ample authority under it to enforce the laws of the United States, but I think it would have been better for Senators on the other side to have agreed to some, or all of our amendments. Nor am I unmindful of the fact that the democratic party is in a majority in both Houses of Congress, and that we must not expect to have their legislation shaped to suit us in every particular. Neither can the President expect to have everything in the way of legislation shaped to correspond exactly with his views and wishes. But our friends on the other side of the Chamber should remember that they have not a two-thirds majority. They should remember that they cannot pass laws without the President's approval, and they should not expect the President to sign bills which he, as a conscientious and upright officer, cannot approve. All this talk about curtailing the authority of the President is unfair and unwise, to say the least of it. The democratic majority in the two Houses of Congress should remember that they are not supreme in power. I say again they cannot pass laws over the President's veto. He will have something to say about the enactment and repeal of laws, and if he possesses the mettle that I think he does—but I should not use an if, because he has demonstrated that he has the mettle—and such laws are presented as this little judicial bill recommended by the conference committee, it will be found that he will have something to say about them that will not be pleasing or complimentary to the majority in Congress. I am only expressing my opinion, and am without authority to speak for any one else.

Mr. President, I shall cast my vote for the Army appropriation bill, because I believe that, as far as it goes, it provides for the Army without infringing upon the rights of the Executive. Some amendments heretofore agreed upon in Committee of the Whole which I favored have been stricken out by the other side, as a matter of party policy. I am sorry they were not left in the bill, but I shall not allow that action to swerve me. One amendment I am very much interested in, the last one. I hope there will be fairness enough in both branches of Congress to pass that as a separate bill or joint resolution. If it is not so passed, then, as a matter of course, the Engineer Corps must wait for a chief until the next session. The other amendments which the majority have chosen to throw overboard are not of importance enough to warrant an effort for a separate bill. Mr. President, I shall cast my vote for the Army bill, as it stands, believing that by so doing I am consulting the best interests of the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass? on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to say one word in response to the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE.] He calls upon the majority in this Chamber to remember that they have not a two-thirds vote by which they could pass a bill over the disapproval of the Executive. Sir, it was not necessary for that honorable Senator to say it, for I think I have as much right to speak as knowing the sentiments of that party as any other one member of that party, and I do wish to disabuse his mind and the mind of every other man as candid and as fair as I hold him to be, of the idea that there has ever been the intent upon the part of the majority to whom he speaks to apply any duress, any coercion upon any other branch of this Government.

Sir, the only coercion that was sought to be applied was the coercion of duty to the country, the coercion of duty to the Constitution, that the great powers reposed elsewhere in this Government should not be exercised except in the high spirit of public usefulness, in the same spirit in which I trust we are voting. It is our duty to propose laws, it is our duty to frame those laws in such form as we believe the welfare and the happiness of our country require. It is the duty of the co-ordinate branches to exercise their prerogatives and their judgment according to their constitutional power and according to their conscience. We have sought to do no more. Before the people of this country we shall go, telling them from first to last that the appropriation bills of this Government have been framed amply to supply every need that the Government has with economy and with necessity, to supply them in full, to supply them according to the public safety, according to the public need, to put in those bills that which we thought the country needed, to withhold nothing that we thought the country needed, but not to signify that under any circumstances we sought collision with an independent branch of the Government which might in any degree disturb the orderly proceeding of the Government. It never was the intent, it never was the declaration; it is not now. There is no petty idea—God forbid it should be—of creating collision when we knew collision so easily could be created. We deprecate the suggestion of collision. We will do all that can be done to avoid it; nay, sir, we will do everything to prevent it; and should it be intended and should it be effected, we propose that the responsibility shall stand, before all intelligent men, where it belongs. There neither is the ambition, nor is there the desire, that the good and orderly government of this country should be disturbed one instant, by the majority that stand on this side of the Chamber; I cannot speak of that which may stand elsewhere. We have but one object in view, amply and perfectly to supply this Government with all that it needs for its just defense within and without, to avoid all collision and friction with the co-ordinate branches of this Government and to administer its affairs with that high spirit of comity, of mutual consideration, that shall prevent that which Alexander Hamilton well called a dishonorable stagnation in our public affairs.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the language of the honorable Senator from Delaware. Does he mean to imply that Senators standing as high as himself in the democratic party have not made threats as palpably and as plainly as he disclaims them? Does the honorable Senator from Delaware this evening express the ability to point to a single declaration of a democratic caucus or a democratic gathering disclaiming that? He comes now and says that they will do everything to avoid a collision. Sir, that is "paltering in a double sense" with the average patriotism of the country, because there is not a child between the two oceans who does not know that if the democratic party had assembled and passed the appropriation bills as they were bound to pass them, this session need not have lasted a week; and the honorable Senator from Delaware is careful now not to say that he will pass the appropriation bills clean and simple.

Mr. BAYARD. Do what?

Mr. BLAINE. That you will pass the appropriation bills clean of all possible political riders.

Mr. BAYARD. I mean to say this: I mean to say that as far as I am concerned——

Mr. BLAINE. And you speak for your party?

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, I do as much as any man can speak for a party, for I know their intent and I know they do not intend that a false, dishonest, disingenuous issue shall be thrust in between the people of this country and the conduct of this Congress. [Applause in the galleries.] They do not intend that the charge shall rest which is sought to be so unjustly, so falsely placed upon them, that by their conduct confusion should be brought into our public affairs. We do intend that the people of this country should understand distinctly that which we think is wholesome and right and safe for the country. We do intend that the people of this country should understand that we propose that our elections shall be held free from the presence of military force, whether of a State or of the United States. We do propose that. If that shall be forbidden, if the President of the United States shall say again that which he has said before that the Army shall not have its supplies unless he shall be able to use it for partisan purposes at the polls under the bare and bald pretext of a police force to keep the peace, then we intend still that he shall not starve the Army, but he shall answer to the people of this country for polluting the ballot-box by the presence of an armed force.

Mr. BLAINE. Then am I to understand the honorable Senator as saying distinctly for his party that if the President should veto this bill they will pass the Army appropriation bill without any riders of any kind whatever?

Mr. BAYARD. Sir, it is not becoming for the Senator from Maine to put to me the coercion of a threat of what I will do when the President shall veto a bill. Sir, let him do his duty, and we will do ours.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, the Senator ends by an evasion, as I supposed he would end. The Senator got up here like the Euphuist in The Monastery, of whose language it was said:

> "Brave words, very brave words, very exceeding pyet words," answered the miller; "nevertheless, to speak my mind, a lippy of bran were worth a bushel of them."

I wanted to put the Senator to the test whether, after these fine declarations that read well and telegraph well, he is willing to say in the hearing of the Senate and in the eye of the country that, come to the last test, he would be willing to vote supplies for the Army without condition and without qualification, as the law requires he should.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it is not for the Senator to require me to say what I do in the eye of the country or for telegraphing. I am not good at that; I do not talk here or legislate for mere Buncombe effect; but I simply repeat the fact, that which I have heretofore repeated: this Government may safely rely upon the democratic majority to be maintained in every just power that it possesses.

Mr. BLAINE. "Every just power;" and the democrats reserve to themselves to define what the "just power is."

Mr. BAYARD. We find our powers under the Constitution, and we confine ourselves to that.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator still evades, and does not say, and I want to nail it that he does not say, that he will vote supplies to the Army without conditions. This Congress came here under the double-fisted loud declaration made openly by Senators on the floor, made by the press of the democratic party everywhere, that the appropriation bills were to be passed with conditions, and if the conditions were not accepted supplies would be withheld. The great democratic leader who sits in the chair, whom I have the honor to address, made an elaborate argument to sustain the right of the democratic party to do that; and now at the end of the session the honorable Senator from Delaware, who disclaims speaking to the public notwithstanding the position he has held here for so many years, desires to pronounce a benediction and sing a democratic doxology over the patriotism that they are willing to show. I want him to tell what that patriotism is, and whether they are willing to have the test put to them which is the real test and the real demand of the hour. Nay, I want to ask the honorable Senator from Delaware whether in the judicial bill he is ready, as I see it now everywhere proclaimed that the democratic party are ready, to say if the President will not take the bill under the restriction that no possible liability shall be incurred for marshals, and so the courts shall be closed. It is said here, there, and everywhere, that the courts shall be closed if the bill is not approved.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Who said it here?

Mr. BLAINE. It has been the temper of this debate clear through.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask if anybody has uttered it on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. BLAINE. Will the honorable Senator say that if the President vetoes that bill he will vote for the courts irrespective of that provision? Will the honorable Senator say that? Will the honorable Senator from Delaware take the floor and say it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not going to send that bill by my vote to the President with any threat. When the bill comes back, if the President vetoes it, I will deal with it according to the facts and according to my own judgment of what is right.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the other honorable Senator from Delaware will not pledge himself. We have a brace of Senators from Delaware who will not do it. The honorable Senator from Delaware farthest from me [Mr. BAYARD] will not say he will not oppose a clean Army bill. The honorable Senator from Delaware next me [Mr. SAULSBURY] will not give the assurance that he will oppose a clean court bill. Gentlemen, take your positions. The honorable Senator from Delaware has an independent vote. I am speaking of the one to whom I first referred. I do not question his right to vote as he chooses.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say in the very best humor to the Senator from Maine, that when the democratic party recognize him as the high priest to whom we must confess, then I will make a confession to him of what we intend to do, and not before.

Mr. BLAINE. I should like any member of the democratic party who feels in a confessing mood, not to me but to the country, to state whether he is willing to pass these appropriation bills without any political riders. I have not yet heard one make the avowal. I have never heard of but one who did make the avowal, and I desire to state it for his credit. He is a Senator whose personal acquaintance I do not enjoy. It has been said throughout the country that the honorable Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMPTON,] the only one here now on the floor, stated that he would vote for the supplies regardless of conditions. I do not know whether that is correct, but so far as I know he stands this night before the country as the only democratic Senator who has ever said that.

Mr. BAYARD. That shows the Senator has not read the debates.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the honorable Senator tell us now that he does say that?

Mr. BAYARD. I have said it.

Mr. BLAINE. Vote them without any condition whatever?

Mr. BAYARD. I have said that we propose that this Government should receive supplies, despite the action of the honorable Senator's party or the action of the President.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator deals in riddles. I still do not understand his answer. I profess my utter inability to comprehend his answer. I ask him the direct question, will you vote for supplies for the Army without condition?

Mr. BAYARD. And I do not answer because I do not choose to be catechised in that manner.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the Senator does not choose to give a direct answer. Let it stand in that way.

Mr. BAYARD. I have answered plainly, I think.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have nothing more to say. Let these bills take their course, let the country judge of the votes that are given; but while the Senate stands in an attitude of demanding conditions it is not for the honorable Senator from Delaware to preach to this side of the Chamber what is the line of patriotism.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I should not have left the chair, certainly not at this late hour of the night, and unwell as I am, had it not been for the direct personal allusion of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.]

The Senator from Maine saw fit to charge the democratic party or certain democrats, and certainly me, whom he must have intended by his personal allusion to me, as having threatened to withhold appropriations for the support of this Government unless there was an acquiescence by the Executive in certain legislation that we placed upon the appropriation bills. I believe I state his proposition fairly.

Sir, I have sat here ever since the close of the last session and heard that charge made against me. I heard it made at the close of the last session. I heard it made in an elaborate speech by my then colleague, (Mr. Matthews,) who did me the justice not to attribute that purpose to me, but who spoke upon the broad constitutional question of the powers of Congress, and of each branch of Congress, without one word of offense toward me. I heard the same thing in an elaborate, carefully prepared speech, written out in vacation, by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] not now in his seat; and still more remarkable, and for the first time in the history of this country, I saw the same thing in a message of the President of the United States to the Congress of the United States.

There never was a more unfounded charge made against a man. About three o'clock on the morning of the 4th day of March last I, who had lain down after a long and fatiguing session of the Senate to get a little rest, was awakened out of the sleep into which I had fallen to come into the Senate, because I was told that my presence was necessary here. I came down, and my political friends told me that I must speak upon the bill that was then before the Senate, and upon the question that has been mooted. I did speak. I spoke out of the fullness of thought and of years of thought; not of momentary thought, not of an hour's thought, not of a day's thought, but out of the thought of long years upon this Government that I love so well and that I have done my best to support. I did say then that we were perhaps (no, I do not know that I used the word "perhaps," and if I did I do not use it now) upon the eve of a controversy which might last longer than the life of any man in this Senate Chamber, the question whether the people's representatives would vote the people's money without a redress of grievances. That is what I said. I did not say that under the Constitution as it now exists the House of Representatives had a right to coerce the Senate or to coerce the Executive, but I did say that we were on the eve of a contest that might last longer than the life of any man in this country. I did say, not that the democratic party, not that I, not that the democratic Senators here, but that the House of Representatives in time, in this controversy which I foresaw, might say, "We represent the tax-payers of the United States; we vote their money; we take their money from their pockets and vote it; and we will not permit that we who represent the tax-payers of the country shall see money taken from the pockets of the people and appropriated against the will of the people because it is the will of one man." That I did say, and I stand by it. The man who cannot see that that is forecoming in this country is in my judgment a short-sighted man.

I did not say that that idea could triumph without a change or an amendment of the Constitution of the United States. I know very well that changes, and such fundamental changes as that in our Government, are not to be effected without alterations in its fundamental law. I never uttered one single word that, properly understood, could have been interpreted as a threat that under the Constitution as it now is, and under our duties as they now are, we would refuse to vote supplies unless our opinion upon public laws was complied with by the Executive. I made no threat of the kind whatsoever; and yet that speech of mine, made between three and four o'clock in the morning, waked up out of a sleep as I was, and exhausted and tired as I was, has been dignified by a reply from the Lord knows how many Senators, and finally by being incorporated in a message of the President of the United States.

Sir, let me call your attention to the fact that the Senators from the State of New York represent four millions and more of people, who pay more taxes than any other four million perhaps on the face of this Republic. Perhaps the time may come when they will say that two Senators from Nevada representing not as many people as there are in the little city of Columbus, where I live, shall not thwart the will and the interests and taxes of the four million people of New York at their pleasure. I say that time may come. I have said that I do not wish it to come. I said so in that very speech. I said then that I did not wish at all to disturb the representation in this Senate. I have not forgotten, though others may who seek to make this a consolidated government, that the equal representation in the Senate that gives to the gallant State of Delaware two Senators on this floor, that gives to Nevada two Senators on this floor, was a necessity to the formation of the Constitution of the United States. That was conceded by the great States; and, mark it, the great States then were the Southern States. If that equality of representation in the Senate had not been conceded by the great States of Virginia and North Carolina, and other Southern States, we should have had no Constitution and we should have had no Union. This Republic exists by the magnanimity and wise policy and the patriotism of the large States of the Union which agreed that the smallest State in the Union should have an equal representation with the largest in the Senate of the United States. I do not want to disturb it; but yet I beg Senators not to press their advantage too far. I beg them to remember that a Senator from the State of Nevada represents but fifty thousand people who are taxed to support this Government, and a Senator from the State of Ohio represents three million people who are taxed to support this Government, and a Senator from the State of New York represents four million people and more who are taxed to support this Government. Do not press your advantage too far, Senators from the small States; and above all things, do not press the one-man power too far.

Sir, we are most of us descended from the people of that little group of islands called the British islands—Great Britain and Ireland; and let me call your attention to the fact that a British administration cannot exist one day after an adverse vote of the House of Commons. Yes, it can; it can dissolve Parliament and appeal to the people; but it must dissolve Parliament and appeal to the people, unless it resigns at once. This Administration that now rules us, if we were in England and under her system, in that monarchy of England, after an adverse vote which elected three times a democratic majority to the House of Representatives, could not have lasted an hour. We have not that thing in this country. We have no responsible administration that an adverse vote of the House of Commons, or the House of Representatives, can turn out of power in an hour or compel the administration to appeal to the people once more. Under our system of government we are fast locked up for four years. Whether it is the best system or not is a question about which political statesmen will differ; but I do tell you, do not press that thing too far. While in England and in France no administration can stand for an hour against the adverse vote of the people's representatives, in the United States of America, the most advanced of all people in the doctrine of individual liberty, of free government, do not press too far this power of the Senate and the power of one man in the White House. That is all I meant; and if anybody finds fault with it, let him find fault with it; I shall not quarrel with him about it.

This is no new idea with me. The same thing has been said for fifty years and more, and by much wiser men than I am. The same thing has been said by distinguished foreigners who have written upon the American Constitution. The same thing has occurred to every man that can rise above mere petty party politics and take a philosophical and statesmanlike view of the institutions of America.

That is all I said, and for saying that, for saying what had been said again and again from the foundation of this Government to this time by man after man who was a philosophical student of history, I have been denounced as advocating a perfect overthrow of the Constitution, an overthrow of the independence of the Senate, an overthrow of the independent power of the Executive, and preaching a sort of red-handed communism in this country that I never dreamed of and that I am as far from advocating as any man in this Chamber.

Now, the Senator from Delaware is perfectly right. We have none of us ever said that we would not vote the necessary supplies to carry on this Government. But if the Senator from Maine by his question whether we would vote a bill pure and simple means that when Congress shall appropriate for nine objects perfectly constitutional, the President of the United States shall say, "I approve of those nine appropriations, but I will not approve the bill unless you put in a tenth," then I say to him, I will not submit to that dictation. I say to him, the President has no more right to coerce me to make appropriations than I have to coerce him to sign appropriations that he does not like—not the least bit in the world.

Use all the sophistry you will, cover it up in words, try to mislead people as much as you please, here is the whole question. Here is a bill that appropriates for certain objects. No man denies that the objects for which it appropriates are constitutional; no man denies that the appropriations are proper; but it does not appropriate for one single purpose. If the President can say, "I will veto these appropriations which are proper because the bill does not appropriate for something else that I want appropriated for," the responsibility is on him; it is not on me. That is all there is in this question.

I do not care how much gentlemen may talk: they may talk until all the hairs of their heads are gray, or until all the gray hairs have disappeared and they will have no hairs at all, but they cannot obscure the fact that this bill is an appropriation for all purposes for which Congress sees fit to appropriate, and that the objection to it is simply that it does not appropriate for one other purpose that the minority in Congress say ought to be appropriated for.

If the President of the United States shall see fit to say that when the majority in Congress have appropriated, for every proper object in their opinion, ample appropriation to support the Army, all that could be asked to support the Army, all that the Secretary of War has estimated as necessary for the support of the Army, he will not let the Army be supported unless we appropriate for something else that we do not want to appropriate for, but that he thinks ought to be appropriated for, then I have to say that the responsibility is on him; and I have to say to the Senator from Maine and to everybody else that it is not for the minority in Congress and it is not for the President of the United States to coerce the majority into appropriating the people's money for that for which the majority in Congress do not think money ought to be appropriated.

Mr. WINDOM and Mr. BLAINE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. With a single remark in reply to the Senator from Ohio I shall have done with this debate forever. The honorable Senator from Ohio in explaining his position touching the speech he made just before the adjournment of the last Congress, says now that he did not expect that redress of grievances to be a practicable thing without some amendments to the Constitution. If he had explained his speech at that time that in his judgment he had some theoretical idea about what the Government ought to be and what powers we ought to have, he would have been allowed certainly to theorize until the end of time without anybody saying "nay" to him. If he had said to the House that sent over a bill with this menace in it, "Why, young gentlemen, you are a little too ardent; what you are purposing to do cannot be done until you have an amendment to the Constitution," they would have taken a retreat very rapidly under the advice of the Nestor of democracy, and there would not have been a particle of feeling on this whole question. But however much that may have been in the mind of the honorable Senator at that time, however much it may have been his matured reflection since, I am sure he will acknowledge himself that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD contains no possible allusion from him to a theory of the kind, which required a constitutional amendment.

I will venture to say to him that this whole matter which has held the country now for three months and Congress here for that period in a session which this side deem unnecessary, the whole theory which has called this Congress together, took its rise and its origin, gathered its force and its volume from that speech which he made with the great authority as a political leader which he enjoys. If he had not made that speech, or if he had made that speech with the explanation he has added to-night, we should in my judgment have been spared this extra session of Congress with all its evils to the country, with all its irritations, both public and personal.

Mr. THURMAN. As to this extra session of Congress and its evils to the country, I am of the impression, although I may be self deceiving, that one of the pleasantest things that I shall recollect in after life as occurring in my public service will be the fact of this extra session. I know very well that my friend from Maine may have a different opinion, but that is mine. I think this extra session has done no small service for American liberty. That is my opinion about it.

In regard to what the Senator said, that if I had not started that theory there would not have been this extra session and there would have been no criticism, I am sorry to say that I can claim no originality in what I said between three and four o'clock in the morning on the 4th day of March after a fourteen or fifteen hours' session, fatigued and worn down as I was; I am sorry to say I cannot claim any originality for that. To go no further back than the celebrated controversy as to Kansas, I might quote and read here to the Senate the language of my predecessor in the Senate, the language of Mr. Seward, the language of Mr. Fessenden, the language of republican Senator after republican Senator, who in the strongest language and, without intimating any change in the Constitution of the United States, asserted that the House of Representatives had the right to demand a redress of grievances before they voted the people's money. It will not do at all to hold me up as a Catiline before the American people. The only thing that I am ashamed of is that I seem to be the imitator of men whom I never admired very much and whom I opposed in all my political life. I have no claim to originality in this business at all.

Sir, I spoke as I said, waked up as I was at three o'clock in the morning after that long and fatiguing session, coming into the Senate and being told at once what was the question and that I was expected to speak upon it. Perhaps if I had been refreshed by sleep and food, as my friend from New York [Mr. CONKLING] thought was very necessary for an intellectual performance, and I agree with him, I might have spoken more guardedly. But I have been somewhat of a student of history, somewhat of a student of the science of government according to my poor, humble faculty, and out of the fullness of my heart, of my reading and of my reflection, I poured forth my true thoughts on that night. I have not the least thing in the wide world to take back; and it may, or it may not, be that when I am laid in my grave and another generation shall sit in this Hall it shall be found that two Senators representing fifty thousand people can tax four million people represented by only two Senators, and that one man in the White House for four years can set the will of the American people at utter defiance and dictate to Congress what shall be the bills that are to support the Government.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I rose a few moments ago for the purpose of refreshing the recollection of the honorable Senator from Ohio by reading some brief extracts from the speech made on the occasion to which he refers. The remarks made by him when last upon the floor, however, make it seem somewhat unfair to read them. The honorable Senator tells us he was waked up at three o'clock in the morning, and leaves us to infer that he was not very wide awake at that time.

Mr. THURMAN. I was quite awake.

Mr. WINDON. I want to say that the honorable Senator has had three months to wake up, and until to-night, although that speech has been very often interpreted as interpreted by the Senator from Maine, we have never yet heard the waking thoughts of the honorable Senator from Ohio. I confess I like them very much better than those uttered by him on that night when he was so suddenly roused from that deep sleep. I think it would be unkind to suggest that possibly the elections in various parts of the country within the last few months have tended to awaken the Senator a little, and perhaps may have modified the speech. I will, however, read a brief extract from it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What elections have we had in the last few months?

Mr. WINDOM. Quite a number last spring.

Mr. THURMAN. They have been mainly democratic victories as far as I have heard.

Mr. CONKLING. Are those all the elections the Senator has heard of this spring?

Mr. WINDOM. How was it in the honorable Senator's own city?

Mr. THURMAN. That had nothing to do with politics whatever; it had no political significance.

Mr. WINDOM. That is mere side-play. The conditions under which the Senator made the speech on that occasion were something like these: The conference committees had reported disagreement; it was three or four o'clock in the morning, and it was known that the bills could not pass. It was understood perfectly that an extra session would be called for the purpose of acting upon these measures. The honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] had announced what we all understood to be the programme of the democratic party, to wit, that separate bills embodying the proposed legislation should be passed when the new Congress met, they should be presented to the President, and if the President did not sign them that he should bear the responsibility of blocking the wheels of government. Then the honorable Senator from Ohio immediately followed with an argument a portion of which was as follows:

Perhaps no greater question in the form we are brought to consider it was ever considered by the American Congress in time of peace; for it involves not merely the merits or demerits of the laws which the House bill proposes to repeal, but involves the rights, the privileges, the powers, the duties of the two branches of Congress and of the President of the United States. It is a vast question; it is a question whose importance can scarcely be estimated; it is a question that never yet has been brought so sharply before the American Congress and the American people as it may be now. It is a question which sooner or later must be decided, and the decision must determine what are the powers of the House of Representatives under the Constitution, and what is the duty of that House in the view of the framers of that Constitution according to its letter and its spirit.

Mr. President, I should approach this question, if I were in the best possible condition to speak and to argue it, with very grave diffidence, and certainly with the utmost anxiety, for no one can think of it as long and as carefully as I have thought of it without seeing that we are at the beginning perhaps of a struggle that may last as long in this country as a similar struggle lasted in what we are accustomed to call the mother land. There the struggle lasted for two centuries before it was ultimately decided. It is not likely to last so long here, but it may last until every man in this Chamber is in his grave.

Then the Senator proceeded to state what the question was:

It is the question whether or no the House of Representatives has a right to say "We will grant supplies only upon condition that grievances are redressed. We are the representatives of the tax-payers of the Republic; we, the House of Representatives alone have the right to originate money bills; we, the House of Representatives, have alone the right to originate bills which grant the money of the people; the Senate represents States; we represent the tax-payers of the Republic; we, therefore, by the very terms of the Constitution"—

Not by some amended Constitution; but—

"by the very terms of the Constitution, are charged with the duty of originating the bills which grant the money of the people. We claim the right, which the House of Commons in England established after two centuries of contest, to say that we will not grant the money of the people unless there is a redress of grievances."

Mr. President, under the circumstances in which the speech was delivered, after the speech of the honorable Senator from Kentucky, when it was known that the bills could not pass at that time, that a democratic Senate was to be organized in a few days, and that these bills then would be presented to the President, every one upon this floor, I think, understood the honorable Senator from Ohio to mean that an issue had been inaugurated between Congress and the President, because he said it "involves the rights, the privileges, the powers, the duties of the two branches of Congress and of the President of the United States," which he thought might last until we were all in our graves. I think we were justified in understanding from the Senator at that time that he did mean that a contest was inaugurated between Congress and the Executive. The country so understood it; the Senate so understood it. The honorable Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] if I remember aright, at once took the floor and denounced this programme as revolutionary; and nobody, I believe, at that time pretended to answer that the programme which had been laid down was not the one which we understood to have been adopted by the democratic party.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I am perfectly delighted that my friend from Minnesota carries my speech around in his pocket. I commend that practice. I hope he will carry more of them around to show to his people out in Minnesota. I think it would be productive of good.

Mr. WINDOM. I had arranged it for that purpose, to take through the next campaign.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the Senator will, but I hope he will interpret it fairly.

Now let me say to the Senator that immediately after speaking, and perfectly worn out and exhausted, I left the Senate Chamber and did not come in again until toward the close of the speech made by my then colleague, (Mr. Matthews.) I did not know at all what was said by other Senators while I was absent; but I am willing that the Senator shall take that speech just as he pleases, he may put his own interpretation upon it, and I tell him now that the time will come before he dies, perhaps—he is a much younger man than I am—when the people of the United States, the numerical majority, the taxpayers in the United States, will not submit that their Representatives in the House of Representatives shall vote to take money out of their pockets and vote it away without a redress of grievances, and it will be no greater change in the interpretation of the Constitution than has been made since 1861. You have changed this Constitution of ours by interpretation since 1861; you have made it what the framers of it never dreamed of; you have made it what the thirteen States which adopted it would have rejected with scorn and horror. That is what you have done by interpretation, and what has been done by interpretation can be done again. I do not want to see an interpretation that overthrows the plain and obvious meaning of the Constitution. I do not want to see any such thing as that occur; but I tell you, gentlemen of the Senate, that it will not do to trifle with this question too much. It will not do for two men in the Senate representing but fifty thousand people to stay the will of four million people. It will not do for one man in the White House to hold the American people for four years in a vise when a ministry in Great Britain cannot hold the people for four hours. That won't do.

The Senator says that I have not answered all these imputations upon that speech which have been made ever since the speech was delivered. Mr. President, if I were to take up my time in answering all the false interpretations of what I have said in a long course of public life, I should have to ask the Lord for a prolongation of my existence greatly beyond the average duration of human life.

Mr. WINDOM. My very great regard for the honorable Senator from Ohio, and the fact that he has advised me to carry this speech with me, induces me to ask him a question as to what he meant by one or two expressions in it. He said:

Perhaps no greater question in the form we are brought to consider it was ever considered by the American Congress in time of peace. for it involves not merely the merits or demerits of the laws which the House bill proposes to repeal. but involves the rights, the privileges, the powers, the duties of the two branches of Congress and of the President of the United States.

What did he mean by involving the powers of the President?

Mr. THURMAN. I advise the Senator to go and read Seward's speech, Fessenden's speech——

Mr. WINDOM. I have more faith in my honorable friend's speech.

Mr. THURMAN. Read Seward's speech, Fessenden's speech, Ben. Wade's speech on the Kansas bill. Go and read John Sherman's speech, now Secretary of the Treasury, on whose motion it was put on the bill that no part of the money appropriated by the bill should be used to sustain the government in Kansas. Go and read their speeches, which said that the House of Representatives had a right to put that condition on the appropriation bill; that they had a right to say the money of the people should not be used without a redress of grievances. Go and read them.

Mr. WINDOM. No, Mr. President, I do not intend to carry any of those speeches with me; and I do not want to misrepresent this one.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator carries my speech around and represents me as a revolutionist, but he will not carry John Sherman's speech, or Ben. Wade's speech, or Seward's speech, or Fessenden's speech. He will not do anything of that kind. He will go up in the swamps of Minnesota and read my speech.

Mr. WINDOM. It is for the express purpose that I may not misrepresent the Senator, and because I do not intend to carry those other speeches with me and do intend to carry this that I again repeat my question. The Senator said:

Perhaps no greater question in the form we are brought to consider it was ever considered by the American Congress in time of peace; for it involves not merely the merits or demerits of the laws which the House bill proposes to repeal, but involves the rights, the privileges, the powers, the duties of the two branches of Congress and of the President of the United States.

I want to know how it involved the rights and privileges and powers of the President of the United States in the form we were then called to consider it?

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator cannot understand that, it would be utterly impossible for me to enlighten him. That is all there is of it. I never attempt impossibilities.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator considers the answer to this question an impossibility, of course I shall not press it; but perhaps I shall try an easier one. He proceeded in that speech, speaking of the question upon which we had entered and the great issue, to say:

No one can think of it as long and as carefully as I have thought of it without seeing that we are at the beginning perhaps of a struggle that may last as long in this country as a similar struggle lasted in what we are accustomed to call the mother land. There the struggle lasted for two centuries before it was ultimately decided. It is not likely to last so long here, but it may last until every man in this Chamber is in his grave.

What was that question? I cannot understand what that question was in view of the Senator's talk to-night. I thought the Senate understood it before.

Mr. THURMAN. Upon my word, I have always entertained a very high opinion of my friend from Minnesota——

Mr. WINDOM. I entertain a very high opinion of my friend now.

Mr. THURMAN. And the principal reason was because he was born in Ohio. [Laughter.] If after reading the preceding part of the speech he cannot understand that, I give him up in utter desperation.

Mr. WINDOM. I think, then, I shall be at liberty when I take this speech with me to construe it as best I can, for I certainly can get no help from the honorable Senator from Ohio, although I have tried in two ways, first asking him a hard question and then an easy one. If the Senator says the first is impossible, and if he answers the second by saying he respects me because I was born in Ohio, I cannot get very much light on that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass? on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAINE, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BLAIR, (when his name was called.) The pair before announced as existing between myself and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] has been so arranged that I am at liberty to vote, and I therefore vote in the negative.

Mr. BRUCE, (when his name was called.) On this and all political questions I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. LAMAR.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when Mr. CARPENTER's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. CARPENTER] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL, (when Mr. EDMUNDS's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. FERRY, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.] Were he here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HEREFORD, (when his name was called.) I have been paired until now with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] but the pair has been transferred to allow the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] also to vote. He has been paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS.] The Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Massachusetts will now be paired, so that the Senator from New Hampshire and myself can vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES, (when Mr. HOAR's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. HOAR] has been announced as paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. JONAS, (when Mr. LAMAR's name was called.) The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] is paired with his colleague, [Mr. BRUCE.] If present, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] would vote "yea."

Mr. INGALLS, (when Mr. PLUMB's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. PLUMB] is unavoidably absent from the city and is paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.] If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, (when Mr. TELLER's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. TELLER] is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. THURMAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GROOME, (when Mr. WHYTE's name was called.) The pair of my colleague [Mr. WHYTE] has been already announced, but it has not been stated how he would vote if here. I complete the announcement by saying that he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BURNSIDE. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] If my colleague were here, I suppose he would vote "nay."

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] is paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.] If the former were present, he would doubtless vote "yea."

Mr. WITHERS. My colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.] If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. WINDOM. My colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. GROVER] is paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.] If present, the Senator from Oregon would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Bailey,	Eaton,	Jonas,	Ransom,
Bayard,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Groome,	Kernan,	Slater,
Burnside,	Hampton,	McDonald,	Vance,
Call,	Harris,	Maxey,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Walker,
Coke,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Davis of W. Va.,	Houston,	Randolph,	Withers.

NAYS—19.

Allison,	Chandler,	Kellogg,	Platt,
Blair,	Conkling,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Booth,	Dawes,	Logan,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,	Windom.
Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Paddock,

ABSENT—25.

Anthony,	Bruce,	Carpenter,	Edmunds,
Blaine,	Butler,	Davis of Illinois,	Farley,
Ferry,	Johnston,	Plumb,	Whyte,
Gordon,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,	Williams.
Grover,	Lamar,	Teller,
Hamlin,	McMillan,	Thurman,
Hoar,	McPherson,	Voorhees,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BECK. If it is not too late I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] on this question is now paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] Mr. Bell, of New Hampshire, was his former pair, and the Senator from Massachusetts is now substituted in his place. My colleague, if present, would have voted "yea" on this bill.

PARIS MONETARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. WHYTE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring) That 12,000 extra copies of the report and proceedings of the Paris monetary conference, held in August last, be printed and bound in cloth, of which number 6,000 copies shall be for the use of the House, 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 for the use of the Department of State.

CHINESE RESIDENTS AND VISITORS.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to give notice that to-morrow after the morning hour I shall call up the bill (S. No. 622) regulating intercourse with the subjects of the Chinese Empire visiting or residing in the United States, and for other purposes, with a view of submitting some remarks upon it.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at two o'clock a. m., Saturday, June 21, 1879) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 20, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

JUDICIAL EXPENSES.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to inquire of the Chair how the Journal stands as to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses. I do not ask that the report as recorded in the Journal be read at length; but I ask for the reading of the last clause. In the report as printed on page 49 of the RECORD of this morning there seems to be an omission of a word, which, as I understand, was included in the report as read at the desk. I ask the attention of my colleague [Mr. MCMAHON] to the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] who submitted the report of the committee of conference is not now in his seat.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Journal will show the error, if there is one. I will read the sentence:

And no Department or officer of the Government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money under any of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment or payment of general or special deputy marshals for service in connection with elections or on election day until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law.

As I understood the reading of the report yesterday, by the Clerk, the word "by" occurred after the words "United States" and before the word "authorizing," so that it would read "by authorizing the appointment or payment of general or special deputy marshals for service in connection with elections," &c.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has sent for the original conference report.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Journal is to be corrected at all it must be done now, and the insertion or the omission of the word makes considerable difference in the meaning of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The original report will be here in a moment. [At this point Mr. MCMAHON entered the Hall.] The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] will please give his attention. His colleague on the left [Mr. GARFIELD] has directed the attention of the Chair to the report of the committee of conference, printed on page 49 of the RECORD, in relation to the bill making appropriations for certain judicial expenses, and has raised the question whether the word "by" should be inserted after the words "United States" and before the word "authorizing" in the second section of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the question because from the reading yesterday (the report was read from manuscript; it was not in print) I understood that the word "by" occurred after the words "United States" and before the word "authorizing." I wish to ask my colleague whether the report as printed in the RECORD is not incorrect in this, that the word "by" has been omitted? If so, the Journal should be made to correspond to the fact.

The SPEAKER. The official paper showing the report of the committee of conference will settle the matter.

Mr. MCMAHON. The word "by" I think was not inserted before the word "authorizing."

Mr. GARFIELD. I understood from the reading that it was.

Mr. McMAHON. I think the remarks which I made indicated very clearly that it was not.

Mr. GARFIELD. On the contrary, I thought that the remarks of the gentleman indicated that the word "by" was there. I certainly understood, both from his remarks and from the reading of the report, that the word "by" was used in the place to which I have referred.

Mr. McMAHON. I thought when the gentleman made his remarks that he did not fully understand the bearing of the amendment as we had presented it.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Journal should conform to the fact, whatever it may be.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to see the official paper. That will settle it of course. I am sure the print here is in accord with the original paper.

The SPEAKER. The matter will be passed over for the present, as the Chair has sent for the original papers now in the Clerk's room, and in the mean time he will recognize the gentleman from Virginia for a moment to ask unanimous consent.

Some time subsequently,

The SPEAKER said: The Chair now has before him the original conference reports, both that submitted to the Senate and that submitted to the House. He also has the short-hand notes of the reporter of the RECORD, and a transcript made from those notes by another reporter of the RECORD, and in none of those papers does the word "by" appear between the words "United States" and the word "authorizing."

Mr. GARFIELD. Then, of course, the Journal and the RECORD need no correction.

Mr. McMILLIN. In addition to what has been stated by the Chair, I have here an exact copy of the report of the committee taken yesterday morning while the debate was going on, and the word "by" does not appear in that paper.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Journal as read will be considered as approved.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

QUARANTINE HOSPITAL.

Mr. GOODE. I have been directed by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases to report back as a substitute for House bill No. 1489 a bill (H. R. No. 2332) to provide for the establishment of a quarantine hospital in Hampton Roads, Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The substitute will be read for information, when the Chair will hear objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the National Board of Health be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to establish a quarantine hospital in Hampton Roads, Virginia, on some suitable site to be selected by said board; and the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, however, That the money hereby appropriated shall not be available until a valid title to the site of said hospital building shall be vested in the United States, and until the State of Virginia shall relinquish to the United States all right to levy taxes on said site or the property thereon while the United States shall remain the owner thereof.

Mr. CONGER. Reserving the right to make objection, I should like to have an answer to an inquiry whether the proposed site for this hospital is in the neighborhood of Fortress Monroe, or of the Hampton Institute or any of the public educational and other institutions? I am not familiar enough with the geography of the place to tell. If it should be in close proximity to any of those institutions I certainly should object to the introduction of the proposition.

Mr. GOODE. I will explain to the gentleman from Michigan, if he will permit me, and I think after a word or two of explanation he will not object to the passage of the bill reported from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. CONGER. I am not familiar enough with the geography of Hampton Roads to know exactly the location in reference to these educational and other institutions.

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to establish a quarantine hospital in Hampton Roads. It is recommended unanimously by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases and by the National Board of Health.

I will say for the information of the gentleman from Michigan that Hampton Roads is a harbor of refuge for merchant vessels coming along the coast from the Southern States and from the West Indies. There is also in the vicinity of Hampton Roads a large naval station, and it frequently happens that Government vessels call at that station for orders, and it likewise very often occurs on these merchant vessels and on Government vessels which call at this naval station there are sick men, who, when the vessels are stopped at the quarantine station, are too sick to be transported to the marine hospital within the limits of the town, so that they are necessarily confined on board the merchant vessel or the man-of-war, as the case may be. The result is that very great suffering has ensued on account of it. The men have not proper accommodation for sick people, and the whole object of this bill is to provide a convenient and commodious quarantine hospital in the Hampton Roads.

I will say further there is no educational institution anywhere in the vicinity except the Hampton Normal Institute, which perhaps may be about ten miles away from the proposed location of this hospital.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose the Hampton Roads proper to be that strip from Fortress Monroe to Newport News and running up past the Hampton Institute.

Mr. GOODE. The Hampton Roads proper is formed by a line running from Tanner's Point to Newport News and from there to Fortress Monroe and then back, making a triangle.

Mr. CONGER. Where is this hospital to be located with reference to Newport News?

Mr. GOODE. The location under this bill is left to the National Board of Health, but a commission appointed by the Secretary of the Navy recently made examination and recommends Sewell's Point, at a distance of some ten or twelve miles from Fortress Monroe and the Hampton Normal Institute and seven and a half from the marine hospital at Norfolk. The object is to establish a hospital in the neighborhood of Sewell's Point.

Mr. CONGER. On which side of the James River?

Mr. GOODE. On the left hand as you go down at a place called Sewell's Point.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is in the interest of humanity, and I hope it will be passed without objection.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to the measure, but I do object to the establishment of any hospital for yellow-fever patients in the neighborhood either of Norfolk, Fortress Monroe, the Hygeia Hotel, or the Hampton Normal Institute.

Mr. GOODE. As I have already stated to the gentleman from Michigan, it is proposed to establish this quarantine hospital some ten miles distant from the places he has mentioned.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman from Virginia whether the sum of $25,000 appropriated under this bill could not be taken from the $500,000 already appropriated for the purposes of this yellow-fever commission?

Mr. GOODE. It might if the House should so order, but the committee thought it best to appropriate it out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. As many demands have already been made on the fund appropriated for the National Board of Health from the Southern States, we thought it would be more agreeable if we should make a definite appropriation. I am sure it is much needed, and money could not be better expended than to the object here proposed. It is in the interest of humanity.

Mr. FARR. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether there is not a hospital at Norfolk?

Mr. GOODE. There is a hospital near the limits of the city. But as regards these people on board the merchant vessels and the Government vessels who are sick of contagious and infectious diseases, it is considered unsafe to remove them so near to the corporate limits of the city.

Mr. FARR. Is there a marine hospital?

Mr. GOODE. There is a marine hospital in Portsmouth, seven and a half miles distant from this point; but it is considered unsafe to carry to that point persons sick of yellow fever or ship-fever. The local authorities object to it.

Mr. FORT. The marine hospital is on the opposite side of the river?

Mr. GOODE. Only a few yards from the city of Portsmouth, not more than twenty from its outside limits.

Mr. FORT. How near to the city of Norfolk?

Mr. GOODE. It is separated from Norfolk by the Elizabeth River.

Mr. FARR. How does the gentleman propose to sustain this hospital? Here is an appropriation of $25,000 asked to build a hospital. How is it afterward to be maintained? Is it to be at the Government expense?

Mr. GOODE. No, sir. The citizens of that locality undertake, if the Government build a hospital, that they will take care of the sick in the interest of humanity. Those sick people belong to the North and to the South, and where they are brought to the quarantine station they cannot be taken care of on board the vessels, nor can they safely be brought within the city limits, or to the marine hospital. It is proposed that if the Government build a hospital, the local authorities shall provide for the sick.

Mr. FARR. The records of the House should show that the local parties propose to do this.

Mr. GOODE. I ask the Clerk to read for the information of the House the memorial which I send to the desk.

Mr. FARR. While I am not opposed to any appropriation that may be reasonable in the interest of humanity, it seems to me we have already been very liberal in appropriating a half million of dollars, largely, if not entirely, to be spent in the South. Thirty thousand dollars also have been appropriated for a marine hospital at Memphis, Tennessee. If the local parties are willing to assume the responsibility of taking care of the people sent to this hospital, I think we ought to have it so stated on the records of the House.

Mr. GOODE. I ask that the communication be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned citizens of the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth, and the county of Norfolk, in the State of Virginia, respectfully represent:

That, while ample provision is made at the port of Norfolk and Portsmouth for seamen suffering from non-contagious diseases, there is no provision whatever made for those suffering from contagious diseases; that merchant vessels from the West Indies and Gulf ports bound to the northern and eastern ports, having yellow fever on board, frequently put into Norfolk for assistance; that they have to be kept at the quarantine station, which is four miles distant from the city, and while all is done by the local authorities that is possible, much suffering and doubtless loss of life ensues from the necessity of keeping patients pent up in the limited quarters of merchant vessels, many of them not larger than coasting craft; that Hampton Roads is a great central port of call for orders, and that vessels are constantly arriving there from various parts of the world; that Norfolk being a great naval station, ships of war of our own and of foreign nations not infrequently put into Hampton Roads with yellow fever on board, and in times past it has been customary to bring patients suffering from such fever to the naval hospital of the station, but that since the dreadful scourge from yellow fever to the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth in 1855, this has been prohibited by the local authorities, inasmuch as the hospital is but a few hundred yards distant from these cities; that while we are willing and able to take care of such patients as would rightfully come to us in course of trade with our own port, we are not able to care for, in a proper manner, the number of sick which vessels in passing by our harbor stop to deliver to us.

In view of these facts, your memorialists respectfully ask that a quarantine hospital be established on one of the shoals or flats about the entrance to the Elizabeth River. It is believed that "Boushe's Bluff Shoal" is the most eligible site for the erection of such a structure on screw piles, and if on examination this should be found to be the case, a light and fog-signal put on the structure would make access to this important naval station easy at all times and supply a want long felt by pilots bringing vessels to Norfolk during thick weather.

Your memorialists, therefore, respectfully ask that the sum of $25,000, or such sum as may be found necessary, be appropriated for the purpose of establishing this hospital, light, and fog-signal.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. CONGER. There should be a clause ceding jurisdiction from the State of Virginia to the United States.

Mr. GOODE. The bill provides for that.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; it is only provided that the State of Virginia shall not levy taxes. I suggest that the bill be amended by inserting the words "and shall cede jurisdiction over the same to the United States."

Mr. GOODE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question: whether there are to be buildings erected under the operation of this bill?

Mr. GOODE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNNELL. The bill simply provides that the National Board of Health shall establish a hospital; but there is no provision at all for the construction of buildings. It is usual that the construction of such buildings shall be under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GOODE. The committee thought it better as we had a National Board of Health to vest in them the authority to select the site and erect the buildings.

Mr. DUNNELL. There is no authority in this bill for the National Board of Health to erect any building.

Mr. GOODE. To meet the suggestion of the gentleman, I will insert the words "and erect" after the word "established."

Mr. DUNNELL. If it is proposed to allow the National Board of Health to undertake the erection of public buildings I shall be very much inclined to vote against this bill. It is an entire departure from the usual course of proceeding in the history of the Government. The National Board of Health might oversee the erection of buildings. But all of our public buildings are erected under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and the plans are drawn by the supervising architect of the Treasury. It is now proposed to let the National Board of Health go into the erection of public buildings for that branch of the service and employ whom they please. There is no provision made as to how these public buildings shall be erected.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it too late to make the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect whether the point of order was reserved or not.

Mr. CONGER. The point of order was reserved until an explanation should be given of the bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the bill will be amended and made to conform to our usual legislation.

Mr. GOODE. The object of the bill is simply to provide a place for the accommodation of sick people. It is a very modest proposition. It does not involve the expenditure of much money. It is true that heretofore buildings have been erected under the supervision either of the Treasury Department or of the War or Navy Department. But the gentleman will bear in mind that until recently we never had a National Board of Health to surpervise matters of this sort. Now it occurred to me and to the committee that of all people on the face of the earth the members of the National Board of Health would be the most competent to decide upon a site for this hospital and to select a plan for the building. It must be necessarily a very modest building. There is no large sum of money provided. It is intended merely as a place of refuge for those sick people who cannot be properly cared for elsewhere.

Mr. GIBSON. Is it intended by this bill that the Board of Health shall make the contract for the erection of this hospital building?

Mr. GOODE. That was the idea.

Mr. DUNNELL. I trust, then, the bill will be voted down.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] will accept the modification suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

Mr. GOODE. The only wish we have——

Mr. SPRINGER. I must insist upon the point of order.

Mr. GOODE. What is the point of order?

Mr. SPRINGER. The point of order is that this bill makes an appropriation of money and must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GOODE. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon that point of order. If agreeable to the House the erection of these buildings can be placed under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think the bill had better be recommitted and put in proper shape.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. That is what is wanted.

The SPEAKER. The bill might be recommitted, with permission to the committee to report it back at any time.

Mr. GOODE. I hope the gentleman will indicate his amendment now and let it be acted upon.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is subject to that point of order, and also it is a very important measure and should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole for that reason. I think if we pass this bill we will be entering upon a most dangerous precedent in the erection of quarantine hospitals at the various ports of the United States. It will, of course, follow that hospitals will be erected at other places, if we commence here; and if we are to put up quarantine hospitals in all the ports of the United States it will involve an illimitable expenditure of money. I hope we will not enter upon a precedent of this kind without the most mature deliberation.

Mr. CONGER. In order that this matter may have full consideration, I think the point of order should be insisted upon.

Mr. SPRINGER. Besides making an appropriation of money and establishing a most dangerous precedent in that regard, the bill provides that the Board of Health shall enter upon the business of erecting public buildings generally, and that class of officers are not accustomed to that kind of work.

Mr. DUNNELL. That is the point.

Mr. SPRINGER. We cannot tell what kind of buildings doctors would erect.

Mr. McGOWAN. They would be very likely to build good hospitals.

Mr. GOODE. That difficulty can be remedied in a moment. I hope the gentleman will not take advantage of that technicality to defeat a bill which is brought here in the interest of humanity. It is not for the interest of the people of Norfolk that this measure is brought forward, but in the interest of people on board merchant vessels coming from the South to the North and going from the North to the South, who go into Hampton Roads as a harbor of refuge. It is in their interest that the humane people of that community have asked the Government to do this. I do not care whether the building is put under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury or the Board of Health.

The SPEAKER. That is not the point of order which has been raised, and would not, the Chair thinks, be a good point of order. The point of order raised is that the bill makes an appropriation and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GOODE. I am appealing to gentlemen to withdraw that point of order, in consideration of the facts I have mentioned.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair is listening, but does not hear any affirmative response to the appeal.

Mr. GOODE. I assure gentlemen on both sides of the House that it is a species of barbarism to confine these sick men on board of merchant vessels, as they are confined now at quarantine stations.

Mr. CONGER. I cannot see how that barbarism has been permitted in the great State of Virginia since 1855.

Mr. GOODE. It has not been permitted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill accordingly goes to the Committee of the Whole.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the same committee, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1369) to relieve the churches of the District of Columbia, and to clear the title of trustees to such property.

DANIEL M. COOK.

Mr. WARD and others demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at thirty-five minutes after twelve o'clock. This being Friday, the unfinished private business coming over from the morning hour of last Friday is the bill (H. R. No. 2019) for the relief of Daniel M. Cook, which was reported from the Committee on Patents by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WARD.] The pending question is on the demand of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ACKLEN. I desire, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WARD] will allow me, to offer an amendment to the bill; and if this amendment is assented to, I think all objection to the bill will be obviated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the amendment which the gentleman from Louisiana asks consent to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the proviso in the bill as reported, and insert the following:

Provided, That no suit or legal proceedings of any nature whatever shall be instituted, continued, or maintained by said Daniel M. Cook, his heirs or assigns, or by any one claiming under this patent, for infringement of the same prior to this act, in the manufacture, use, or sale, by any person or persons, of any apparatus or process covered by said patent.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker, as this bill has been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, the question being now on its passage, this amendment will have to come in by unanimous consent or the vote ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time must be reconsidered.

Mr. VANCE. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment indicated by the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ACKLEN.] In fact it was the impression of the committee that such a proviso as the gentleman proposes was already in the bill. It is our custom to insert such a proviso in bills of this kind.

Mr. WARD. The principle of the gentleman's amendment is already embodied in the bill, though probably the amendment amplifies it and places the construction beyond all question. I can see no objection to the amendment. I believe it carries out exactly the principles contained in the bill.

Mr. ACKLEN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I wish merely to state why it was I had to resort to dilatory motions in the morning hour of last Friday in order to postpone the consideration of this bill until such an amendment as I have now presented should be accepted. The bill as presented by the committee contains this proviso:

Provided, That no suit shall be maintained for any infringement of this patent made prior to the passage of this act, except upon proof of actual knowledge of said patent on the part of the person or persons so infringing, and for the continued use by any person or persons of any apparatus or process covered by said patent and purchased prior to the passage hereof.

In my judgment this proviso would open the flood-gates for innumerable lawsuits because it contains the words "except upon proof of actual knowledge of said patent on the part of the person or persons so infringing." It is a well-known fact that a lawsuit was instituted by Daniel M. Cook in order to have issued to him by the Department a patent covering not only the apparatus but the process which he likewise desired to have patented. This lawsuit was a public notice; and hence in my view the proviso contained in the bill reported was very objectionable. On this account I opposed as vigorously as I could the passage of the bill with that proviso. The amendment I now offer strikes out that proviso and offers ample security to all persons who may have infringed this patent. Under these circumstances, if my amendment is assented to, I no longer object to the passage of the bill, though I do object as a general thing to the reissuing of patents.

This is a very peculiar case—a case of great hardship. In 1858 Mr. Cook made his first application for a patent. He abandoned that application, as it was insufficient, and again applied in 1859. But the Department issued to him a patent for his apparatus only and not for his process. After that he was involved in a large number of lawsuits; and it was only in 1878 that he secured a patent covering both the apparatus and the process. Under these circumstances, and in view of the hardships thus entailed upon Mr. Cook, I think this patent should be reissued.

Mr. WARD. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana be adopted by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The regular mode of procedure would be to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. WARD. But time will be saved if unanimous consent is given to the adoption of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana will be considered as part of the engrossed bill.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The question recurring on the demand of Mr. WARD for the previous question upon the passage of the bill, the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. WARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF DISCHARGED HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. HENRY. The Committee of Accounts, to whom were referred petitions of William H. Prescott, Robert E. Hedian, and Eugene McSweeny, asking one month's pay from the date of their discharge from the soldiers' roll of the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, have directed me to report the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to William H. Prescott and Robert E. Hedian, who were discharged from the disabled soldiers' roll on the 1st day of April, 1879, and to Eugene McSweeny, who was discharged from said roll on the 9th day of May, 1879, each a sum equal to one month's pay from the date of his discharge.

Mr. CONGER. I would inquire if this resolution refers to disabled soldiers upon the soldiers' roll of the House?

Mr. HENRY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. They were discharged in April?

Mr. HENRY. Yes, sir; during the present session.

Mr. CONGER. They were a part of the persons on what is known as the disabled soldiers' roll?

Mr. HENRY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. Have their places been supplied by other disabled soldiers?

Mr. HENRY. I take it for granted that disabled soldiers have been appointed in their places; I take it for granted because the law requires it.

Mr. CONGER. I think the Committee of Accounts ought to know that fact.

Mr. HENRY. I do not know that it is particularly their duty to do so.

The SPEAKER. It would not affect these claims; but the law controls the appointing officer and compels him to fill these places with disabled soldiers.

Mr. HENRY. From the fact that the matter is regulated by law, I take it for granted that the law has been complied with; but these discharged officers of the House are entitled under the usage of the House to one month's pay.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let me ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HENRY] why the regular appropriation does not provide for these men if they have served as officers of the House?

The SPEAKER. This is to provide for the extra month's pay, and not for the regular pay.

Mr. HENRY. This is the extra month's pay which is usually allowed in such cases.

The SPEAKER. Is the report a unanimous one?

Mr. HENRY. Yes, sir; it is unanimous.

The question was taken on the resolution; and it was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS P. BEALL.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, from the Committee of Accounts, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That Thomas P. Beall be paid $60 out of the contingent fund of the House, for services rendered during the month of November, 1878.

Mr. CONGER. Is not this a proposition to pay for services during the last Congress?

The SPEAKER. This is to pay a colored person who has been an employé about the Capitol for twenty years, perhaps longer.

Mr. CONGER. That fact would appeal to my sympathies as it does to the Speaker's.

The SPEAKER. It does appeal to my sympathies, because he is a very worthy man.

Mr. CONGER. I was simply asking if it was not a proposition to pay for services rendered in the last Congress, and if so, whether under the ruling of the Speaker it must not come from the Committee of Claims?

The SPEAKER. The ruling of the Chair was based upon the fact that the Committee of Accounts had declared that they would consider no such claims.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I would state that these services were rendered during the present fiscal year, and that was why the committee took cognizance of the claim. This is the unanimous recommendation of the committee. This person is regarded as an expert in his profession of tacking down carpets, and was employed in tacking down the carpets in this building. That is all there is about it.

The question was taken on the resolution; and it was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN E. KELLY.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee of Accounts, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 106) to pay John E. Kelly for services as messenger to the Committee of Ways and Means; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution authorizes and directs the Clerk of the House to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, John E. Kelly for services as messenger to the Committee of Ways and Means during the present session of Congress at the rate of $1,000 per annum.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. There was no provision or resolution of the House authorizing this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it had better be treated as new matter. Originally it was a House resolution; but the committee reported a joint resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I dislike to permit the Senate, by this being made a joint resolution, to control the contingent fund of the House. They may take it as a precedent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is right about that; it had better be made an appropriation instead of coming out of the contingent fund. It is better that you should provide that so much money be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SMITH] if the services of this man have heretofore been authorized by a resolution of the House?

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SMITH] will allow me, I will say that this messenger has been employed for four years by the Committee of Ways and Means in pursuance of a resolution of the House. At each time the resolution was unanimously passed, and the committee authorized the chairman to report to the House a resolution to pay this man. He has served during the present session, but in consequence of the illness of the chairman of the committee the resolution was overlooked and was not passed. He has done all the service. He has done his duty for four years and has been paid regularly, except that the usual resolution for this session was not acted on for the reason I have stated.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. We have paid him regularly at that rate just what is now proposed to be paid.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I have been directed by the Committee of Accounts to move they be discharged from the further consideration of the following resolutions, and that they be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid to John Ellis out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $60 per month from October 15, 1877, to February 1, 1878, for services as messenger to the Committee of Claims.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Jacob D. Hutton out of the contingent fund of the House the amount of one month's salary as messenger on the soldiers' roll from the date of his discharge on said roll.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. These subjects do not properly belong to the Committee of Accounts, and therefore it has been thought proper to move their reference to the Committee of Claims, where they do properly belong.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were referred to the Committee of Claims; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I have been directed by the Committee on Printing to report back as a substitute for what is known as Mr. KNOTT'S bill, a bill to provide for the election of a Congressional Printer.

Mr. CONGER. That is public business, and not in order to-day.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is it in order to report a public bill on private bill day?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi withdraw the bill?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I do, as it is objected to.

METRIC SYSTEM.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I have been directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the resolution to print 10,000 copies of House report No. 14, first session Forty-sixth Congress, with amendments.

Mr. ACKLEN. Is that subject to the same rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not heard what it is about.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. This is the same resolution that was before the House evening before last when the point of order was made upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 10,000 extra copies of House Report No. 14, first session Forty-sixth Congress, be printed for the use of the House.

The Committee on Printing respectfully report back the above resolution with the following amendments:

Strike out all after the word "printed," in line 5, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"At the Government Printing Office, 2,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 7,500 for the use of the House of Representatives."

In line 3, after the word "resolved," insert the following:

"By the House of Representatives of the United States, the Senate concurring."

And with the said amendments, they recommend the resolution do pass.

Mr. CONGER. What is that report about?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It is the same report from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures which the gentleman from Georgia explained a few evenings ago. It is a report in reference to the metric system.

Mr. CONGER. Was there any delicacy in the resolution referred to the committee?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I suppose not.

Mr. CONGER. I made the objection to that report from the committee once before, but after hearing in regard to it I do not know I shall persist in my objection to the report being printed.

The amendments were again read.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. As the printing of this report would involve an expenditure of over $500, it was necessary, under the law, to change the resolution into a concurrent resolution. The first amendment recommended by the committee and the second amendment relates to the distribution of the report printed between the two Houses, 2,500 for the Senate and 7,500 for the House.

The amendments were agreed to; and the concurrent resolution, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GLOVER'S REPORT.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the petition of John M. Glover, chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department in the Forty-fifth Congress, asking the execution of the order of the last House for the printing of the report of said committee, with the accompanying evidence, report thereon as follows——

Mr. CONGER. There is no necessity of reading that report, as it is public business and liable to the point of order. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that it relates solely to public business and cannot be received to-day, this day being set apart under the rules for the consideration of private business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will explain in what respect he claims that it is public business. It is a resolution of the House to print a certain document.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. If the gentleman will allow me I will make a word of explanation.

Mr. FINLEY. This is the petition of a private individual.

The SPEAKER. The petition is the basis on which the committee reports.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Let the report of the committee be read.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that this provides for public printing and cannot be received, if objection be made, on private bill day. It is part of the public business of this House. It is for the printing of a public document.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the order of the House, March 3, 1879, for the printing of the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department with the accompanying evidence, be executed, and that said report and evidence take their place in the series of reports of the committees of the House in the Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. If I can be allowed to make a word of explanation for a moment I think there will be no objection.

Mr. CONGER. If this is public business, as it evidently must be so held, it cannot be received, objection being made. The recital of the resolution is, that this report was ordered to be printed in the last Congress, and in that respect it is not true.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. If the gentleman will allow me to make an explanation; it is just this——

Mr. CONGER. I hope the permitting of discussion will not cut off the right to make points of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will reserve points of order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. At the last session of Congress this resolution was passed without, I believe, a dissenting voice. My friend from Michigan, who is now upon the floor, made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed. That motion to reconsider was pending when Congress adjourned. The Clerk of the House decided that he had not power; that it was not within his province to have the publication made while the motion to reconsider was pending. Now, the proposition embraced in this resolution is simply to carry out the order of the House at the last session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, as allusion has been made to the Clerk of the House, that the Clerk submitted the question to the Committee on Rules of this House whether he was authorized under the proceeding had at the last session of the last Congress to print that testimony; and the Committee on Rules decided unanimously, whatever hardship there may have been about it, in reference to the publication the Clerk acted correctly; that the entering of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the printing was ordered was conclusive on him, and that he had no power while that motion was undisposed of to direct the printing. And the Clerk further stated that he never had had the testimony in his possession.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether he has the testimony in his possession?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I have not. It is in the possession of the party who proposes to have it printed.

Mr. CONGER. I shall demand its reading if there is to be any action upon it taken by the House. I presume there is no gentleman who desires that manuscript to be printed and to go to the country as it is now, if I understand its contents truly. The gentleman from Mississippi himself, I think, does not want to be an advocate of the sending forth to the country of the material of that manuscript if he has ever read it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The committee was raised by Congress, and they were ordered to investigate. The committee have made their report, and it is customary to print reports of committees raised by the House.

Mr. CONGER. I insist on my point of order that this is public business.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a statement, with the leave of the gentleman from Mississippi, with regard to the question of order which was submitted by the Clerk to the Committee on Rules. As an individual, I want to enter my protest against the decision of the Committee on Rules being regarded as a precedent.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I do not feel inclined to yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. It will be seen on page 301 of the Manual that it was decided by Speaker Banks that a motion to reconsider died with the session.

The SPEAKER. It never was so decided. The committee looked that up. The Manual is incorrect in that respect. The decision was made by an officer of the House after Congress had adjourned.

Mr. SPRINGER. I merely wanted to enter my protest against the decision of the Committee on Rules being considered a precedent.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Rules gave very elaborate consideration to the question.

Mr. SPRINGER. That ruling would enable any one member the very moment before the final adjournment to enter a motion to reconsider every bill passed in the last days of the session and defeat the action of the House, a motion to reconsider being of the highest privilege, so that it can be entered at any moment.

The SPEAKER. The rule nevertheless allows it.

Mr. COX. That question does not come up now.

Mr. WILSON. I do not quite understand the gentleman from Michigan when he intimates that gentlemen on this side do not desire to have that report printed. The remark of the gentleman does not apply to me. The Committee on Printing have never examined it. We do not know anything about it except what we find by the record. I have called for the manuscript on several occasions, but never got it before the committee. We predicated our action on the fact that the committee reported that it should be printed and that the House at the last session of the last Congress ordered that it should be printed. I have never read it, and do not know its contents.

Mr. CONGER. I venture to say no gentleman on that side of the House will be willing, after reading that report, to advocate its printing or to father some parts of it in any respect.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Why not?

Mr. CONGER. Because I believe they will feel it is an unseemly thing to issue from the House of Representatives.

Mr. FINLEY. Has the gentleman read the report himself?

Mr. CONGER. I have read some portions of it. Some portions I have not read.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman like it so far as he has gone?

Mr. CONGER. I will tell the gentleman in the cloak-room when we go out there and talk the matter over.

Mr. COX. It would be an unexampled thing to refuse to print the report of a committee raised by the House.

Mr. CONGER. I think not. I cannot find one member of the old committee who is willing to be responsible for the report; and no member of the present House is willing to take the responsibility of it.

Mr. COX. It would not be a report unless somebody was responsible for it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am willing to take the responsibility of ordering the printing of this report or any other report made by a committee of this House.

Mr. CONGER. That is a different thing.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know of anything that deserves more to be printed.

Mr. COX. It is full of meat and it hurts the other side of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I insist upon the point of order that it is public business, and is not in order to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule defining the difference between public and private business to be read.

The Clerk read the rule, as follows:

The line of distinction between public and private bills is so difficult to be defined in many cases that it must rest on the opinion of the Speaker and the details of the bill. It has been the practice in Parliament, and also in Congress, to consider as private such as are "for the interest of individuals, public companies or corporations, a parish, city, or county, or other locality." To be a private bill, it must not be general in its enactments, but for the particular interest or benefit of a person or persons. A pension bill for the relief of a soldier's widow is a private bill; but a bill granting pensions to such persons as a class, instead of as individuals, is a public bill. Bills for the incorporation of companies and whose operations are confined within the District of Columbia, have been treated as private; but where such companies are authorized to have agencies and transact business outside of the limits of the District, they are treated as public. Bills granting lands for railroads have been always held to be public; while a bill authorizing the extension of a railroad into the District of Columbia, or conferring certain privileges upon such an incorporation, has been held to be private.

The SPEAKER. The Chair inclines to the opinion that the objection has weight, but will submit the question to the House.

Mr. CONGER. If it is a point of order it is for the Chair to decide.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to believe that this is a public matter; but the practice of the House has uniformly been to allow resolutions to print testimony to be introduced at any time.

Mr. CONGER. What, on private bill day and during the morning hour of private bill day? I hope the Chair will consider that we are now in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised of that; but the Chair prefers to submit the question to the House.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I want to say one word. The gentleman from Michigan intimates that there is something in the report that perhaps we would be ashamed of. Now, if it is a report of a committee authorized by this House, I cannot imagine that the report has anything in it that ought not to go to the country. I do not propose to cover up anything that may affect my friends or allow others to escape who are not my friends, if their action be brought in question by this report. I have no desire to punish an enemy or to favor a friend. I simply propose to carry out the order of the last Congress which was suspended.

Mr. CONGER. The last House refused to let this report be printed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no, the House ordered it to be printed.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The last House ordered it to be printed, and the gentleman moved to reconsider it.

Mr. CONGER. By the rules of the House the printing was stopped by the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ACKLEN. Is it the point of order we are to vote on or the question whether the report shall be printed? If we are to vote upon the point of order I shall vote to sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. It is the point of order that is to be voted upon, whether the House considers this business public or private.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of the report which it is proposed to have printed so that members may know whether they desire it to be printed or not, or whether it is public or private business. We cannot tell whether it is public or private business until we hear it read.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The simple point is just this: the House having at one time declared that this report should be printed the question is whether we will adhere to that decision. When the original resolution was adopted it might have been proper to demand the reading of the report, but the House having once ordered it to be printed and that order having been suspended, it seems to me the reading of the report cannot be called for now.

The SPEAKER. The report is not here and cannot be read.

Mr. CONGER. Then how can the House act intelligently upon a matter which they have not before them?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman has no right to call for the reading of the report that is to be printed under this resolution. Suppose an order should be pending for printing additional copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, would the gentleman have the right to have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD read?

Mr. COX. If the gentleman has the report read it will go into the RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. I do not propose to dally about this matter. If under the ruling of the Chair the House has a right to hear the document read upon a point of order, so as to ascertain whether it is private or public business, then I demand the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. It is usual to have the testimony accompany a resolution of this sort, but the Chair thinks it is never usual to read the testimony.

Mr. CONGER. Well, the report——

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I think I have reported hundreds of resolutions to print of this character, and never before has it been the custom to ask that the testimony be read.

Mr. CONGER. I claim that it is within the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the latter point of order and decides that the testimony need not be read. It would be an obstruction to business, destructive to due legislation.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the reading of the report, not of the testimony.

The SPEAKER. This resolution is the report of the committee.

Mr. CONGER. I mean the report which it is proposed to print.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman has the report read, it will be printed in the RECORD, and I understand he objects to printing the report.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; let it be read.

Mr. ACKLEN. If the gentleman is willing to take the decision of the Chair on the first point of order which he made, that settles the question.

Mr. CONGER. I am willing to have the decision on this point of order; one thing at a time.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. In order to relieve the Chair of any embarrassment, and also the House——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no embarrassment upon the subject. He will submit it to a vote of the House.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Very well.

Mr. COX. I would suggest to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] to withdraw this report for the present. There seems to be some doubt about its being a public measure, and it can be brought up to-morrow.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope it will be withdrawn.

Mr. COX. Evidently they do not want it printed.

Mr. CONGER. We do want it printed.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I will withdraw the report.

Mr. COX. Suppose that we do it by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHITE. It cannot be done that way; that is all.

Mr. COX. It cannot be done by your consent, I know.

The SPEAKER. The report is withdrawn. Reports are still in order from the Committee on Printing.

EULOGIES ON J. E. LEONARD.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following resolution, together with a substitute therefor:

Resolved, That the usual number of the eulogies delivered on the late J. E. Leonard, a member of the Forty-fifth Congress, be printed for the use of the members of this House and the Senate.

The substitute was as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That 8,000 copies of the eulogies delivered on the late J. E. Leonard, a member of the Forty-fifth Congress from the State of Louisiana, together with a portrait of the deceased, executed under direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, be printed; 6,000 copies thereof for the use of the House of Representatives and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

The question was upon agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. That resolution was passed by the House during the last session, and failed in the Senate for want of time. It should have been passed before.

Mr. WHITE. It should have been passed by the last Congress.

Mr. WILSON. It provides only for printing the usual number of such documents.

The substitute was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS AND MANUAL.

Mr. WILSON also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2267) providing for the printing of the internal-revenue laws and manual.

The bill authorizes the Public Printer to bind in cloth 3,000 copies of the compilation of internal-revenue laws and 3,500 copies of the internal-revenue manual, for the use of the Internal-Revenue Bureau.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TRANSIT OF VENUS.

Mr. WILSON also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following Senate concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 250 additional copies of the Observations of the Transit of Venus, made under the direction of the Navy Department, in December, 1874, be printed for the use of the Naval Observatory.

Mr. CONGER. How many copies have been printed for the use of the House, if any?

Mr. WILSON. I am not informed on that point.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Only the regular number, 1,900.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to this resolution, but I did not know whether there had been any printed for distribution by members of the House.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The regular number has been printed for the House. This is to print 250 additional copies, at a small expense.

Mr. WILSON. At a cost of only $2 per copy.

The resolution was adopted.

COLONIAL CHARTERS AND CONSTITUTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WILSON also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following Senate concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to deliver to the Secretary of the Interior ten copies of the Colonial Charters and Constitutions of the United States from those remaining in his possession.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the various votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) fixing the date on which the pay of the committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives who are paid during the session only shall begin for this session, and for other purposes.

CONWAY NATIONAL BANK, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. CRAPO, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2329) authorizing the Conway National Bank of Conway, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Conway National Bank of Conway, now located in the town of Conway and State of Massachusetts, is hereby authorized to change its location to the city of Holyoke, in said State. Whenever the stockholders representing two-thirds of the capital of said bank, at a meeting called for that purpose, determine to make such change the president and cashier shall execute a certificate, under the corporate seal of the bank, specifying such determination, and shall cause the same to be recorded in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and thereupon such change of location shall be effected and the operations of discount and deposit of said bank shall be carried on in the city of Holyoke.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as in any manner to release the said bank from any liability or affect any action or proceeding in law in which the said bank may be a party or interested; and when such change shall have been determined upon as aforesaid, notice thereof, and of such change, shall be published in two weekly papers, one in Greenfield and one in Springfield, in the State of Massachusetts, not less than four weeks.

SEC. 3. That whenever the location of said bank shall have been changed from the town of Conway to the city of Holyoke, in accordance with the first section of this act, its name shall be changed to the City National Bank of Holyoke, if the board of directors of said bank shall accept the new name by resolution of the board, and cause a copy of such resolution, duly authenticated, to be filed with the Comptroller of the Currency.

SEC. 4. That all the debts, demands, liabilities, rights, privileges, and powers of the Conway National Bank of Conway shall devolve upon the City National Bank of Holyoke whenever such change of name is effected.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. CRAPO. This bill has been carefully examined and considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and is unanimously reported by that committee. It has also been examined by the Comptroller of the Currency and has his approval. The object of this change in the location of the bank is the accommodation of the patrons of the institution. The manufacturing and business interests of that locality will be promoted by the change. The bank is in good condition, and the interests of the public, as well as the stockholders, are protected by the provisions of the bill. There can be no objection to its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRAPO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD BRIDGE ACROSS WABASH RIVER.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1627) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge across the Wabash River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Bloomfield Railroad Company, organized under the laws of the State of Indiana, and the Quincy, Payson and Southeastern Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, or either of them, is hereby granted the right to construct an iron or wooden bridge, for railroad purposes, or for railroad and highway purposes, and as a public highway, either with a draw or continuous span, as it may determine, across the Wabash River, at any point said corporation may select, at or within six miles of the town of Merom, in Sullivan County, State of Indiana: Provided, That the bridge to be constructed under the authority hereby granted shall not interfere with the free navigation of said stream beyond what is necessary in order to carry into full effect the rights and privileges hereby granted, and shall be built at right angles with the current of the stream where said bridge may be erected, and that a span of at least one hundred and seventy feet over the main channel of said stream shall be left between the piers of said structure: And provided further, That if said bridge shall be built with a draw of not less than one hundred feet in width and said draw is kept in repair for the passage of boats at all times, the detention of passing said bridge shall not be construed as interfering with the navigation of the stream: And it is further provided, That said bridge shall be, and be considered, a legal structure, and shall be a post-road for the transmission of the United States mails: And provided further, That in case said bridge is built with a continuous span, the bridge shall be built at such height as not to interfere with the navigation of said river by steamboats.

SEC. 2. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or companies, corporation or corporations, or either of them, shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge, and a map of the location, giving for the space of one mile above and one mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War, the bridge shall not be built. And the Secretary of War shall determine the proper length of the spans of said bridge and the height thereof above high-water mark, and as to the plan of the bridge in all respects; and if it shall be found at any time that such bridge unnecessarily or materially obstructs navigation, he shall require the necessary changes to be made therein, in the interest of such navigation, at the expense of said company or companies; and said company or companies shall maintain, at its or their own expense, from sunset until sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading,

Mr. CLARDY called for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. Being engrossed, it was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 2273) to provide office rooms for the National Board of Health and for the publication of its reports and papers, and for other purposes, be made a special order for to-morrow after the morning hour and from day to day until disposed of. It is very important that this bill should be acted on. and I do not think its consideration will occupy five minutes. It is simply designed to give the National Board of Health power to execute certain provisions of the act creating the board.

Mr. WHITE. Why not pass it to-day?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I do not want to interfere with the motion of my colleague, [Mr. BRIGHT,] or I would be glad to do so.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose this bill will be subject to——

The SPEAKER. It will be subject to all points of order.

Mr. CONGER. And to amendment?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Oh, yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. I may desire to offer some amendments.

There being no objection, the order proposed by Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, was made.

PROTECTION OF SULLIVAN'S ISLAND.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Commerce a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to use $5,000 of the appropriation for Charleston Harbor for the protection of Sullivan's Island from the inroads of the sea.

The joint resolution was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to use a sum not exceeding $5,000 out of the $200,000 already appropriated by act of March 3, 1879, for the improvement of Charleston Harbor to protect Sullivan's Island in said harbor.

Mr. CONGER. That should go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ACKLEN. On what ground?

Mr. CONGER. Because it makes an appropriation.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman is mistaken; it does not make any appropriation. I will state the purposes of the resolution. The Engineer Corps are at present constructing jetties in Charleston Harbor, which are about one mile from a former jetty called Bowman's Jetty, a part of which was removed. The appropriation of $200,000 made in the last river and harbor act, approved March 3, 1879, is for the specific purpose of completing the jetties now in course of construction in Charleston Harbor. A part of the jetty, known as Bowman's Jetty, was removed during the construction of the other jetties which were for deepening the harbor. The removal of this portion of Bowman's Jetty has caused the tides to so cut into Sullivan's Island that now each recurring tide threatens to sever this island in two. If this should occur it would seriously affect the work now in progress on the other jetties, which are intended to deepen the channel of the harbor.

This bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Commerce, and its passage is earnestly desired by the Engineer Corps, because it is believed that under the existing law the $5,000 required for this particular purpose cannot be diverted from the specific appropriation of $200,000 for the improvement of Charleston Harbor.

Mr. CONGER. Does this divert a part of the money appropriated for Charleston Harbor?

Mr. ACKLEN. Exactly.

Mr. CONGER. And it does not interfere with the appropriation made for any other harbor?

Mr. ACKLEN. Not at all.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; I have no objection.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 107) was reported from the committee, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ACKLEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the National Division of the Sons of Temperance of North America; which was read as follows, and ordered to be referred to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic when appointed:

SONS OF TEMPERANCE, NATIONAL DIVISION OF NORTH AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1879.

To the honorable the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners, the National Division of Sons of Temperance of North America, now in session in this city, respectfully pray your honorable body to appoint a commission of inquiry into the results of the alcoholic liquor traffic in this country, that the people may be officially informed on this important subject.

By order of the National Division of North America, Sons of Temperance.

GEORGE W. ROSS, M. W. P.
SAMUEL W. HODGES, M. W. S.

TREATY WITH THE REPUBLIC OF MEXICO.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I have been instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back joint resolution (H. R. No. 28) providing for a treaty with the Republic of Mexico, with amendments, and to ask for its passage at this time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. WILSON. I hope no gentleman will object. Let it be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I reserve all points of order until I hear the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. If it is to be objected to it might as well be objected to now.

Mr. FINLEY. Does it require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. ATKINS. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order of business is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to be heard for but one moment. Our relations with the Republic of Mexico are now in a very feverish condition, and it is costing the Government of the United States millions of dollars every year to keep the peace along the borders. One reason why so much disturbance has occurred is because of a defect in our treaty of extradition. Mexican raiders cross the border, spoliate our property, murder our people, commit all sorts of crimes, return to Mexico, and they cannot be extradited, they cannot be returned to this Government because of a defect in the existing treaty with the Republic of Mexico.

The State Department attaches large importance to this report being made now. The President and Secretary of State have opened diplomatic correspondence with Mexico. The President and State Department desire, and it would be more respectful to the Republic of Mexico to have, an expression from the American Congress on this subject. This joint resolution will cost the Government nothing except the pay of a commissioner to act under the order of the President.

In view of these facts, Mr. Speaker, I hope at this day no gentleman will object. It will not take twenty minutes to pass the resolution. It simply recommends that the President, on behalf of the Government, shall open diplomatic correspondence with Mexico with a view to a further treaty to secure peace along that border and to save to this Government millions of dollars every year.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does it authorize the President to appoint a commissioner to be paid a salary to go to Mexico for that purpose?

Mr. WILSON. It does.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the House do now adjourn, as we have no Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest there are bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw my objection if the gentleman from West Virginia will withdraw provision for pay of special commissioner.

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his motion to adjourn.

Mr. WHITE. I do.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] will take the chair.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report.

The SPEAKER. The House has decided to go into committee.

Mr. COX. May not the gentleman by unanimous consent submit his report and place his bill on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. COX. Not until the honorable Speaker leaves the chair.

Mr. FINLEY. The order is executing itself.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

So the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that it is objection day, and the Clerk will read the first bill on the Calendar.

J. P. ZIMMERMAN AND H. P. SNOW.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2003) for the relief of J. P. Zimmerman and H. P. Snow, of Clinton County, Kentucky.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100 to J. P. Zimmerman and H. P. Snow, citizens of Clinton County, Kentucky, being the amount of a forfeited mail-route bond paid by them.

Mr. WHITE. I must object to this bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. No, let the report be read.

Mr. WHITE. Very well, I withhold my objection until the report is read.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom were referred the petition and bill for relief of J. P. Zimmerman and H. P. Snow, having had the same under consideration, find that L. L. Shelby, of the county of Clinton and State of Kentucky, was a bidder for mail-route No. 20372, in said State of Kentucky, and that said route was awarded to said Shelby for $49.50 per annum for four years; that said Zimmerman and Snow were guarantors in the bid of said Shelby for said mail-route; and that said Shelby, after notice from the Post-Office Department of their award in the premises, made and forwarded to said Post-Office Department a bond in due form, with other sureties, for the proper performance of the service on said route; that for want of proper attestation said bond was returned by the Department to the makers thereof and their sureties to be perfected, but said bond was not perfected, nor was it returned to the Department, and a subsequent letting of said route was made for the sum of $50 per annum, and therefore the said Department demanded of the said guarantors, Zimmerman and Snow, the penalty of their bond, as such guarantors, amounting to $100, which said sum was paid by Zimmerman and Snow on the 2d day of July, 1878. On the 6th day of July, 1878, the account of the Department against said guarantors was adjusted by the Auditor at $2, being the damage sustained by the Department by reason of the failure of the said Shelby to perform service awarded to him. The said sum of $100 having been paid into the Treasury of the United States before notice of the adjustment of the account, the Post-Office Department could give no relief. The committee, therefore, report the said bill back with the following amendment: Strike out the words "one hundred dollars" and insert "ninety-eight," and with said amendment recommend the passage of the bill, and submit this their report and ask to be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

Mr. McKENZIE. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his objection.

Mr. WHITE. I withdraw my objection.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside, to be reported in the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES OLIVIER DUCLOZEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclozel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana; reported by Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia, from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a certain tract of land, of ten arpents front by forty arpents in depth, on the west side of Bayou Teche, situated in township ten south, range six east, southwestern district, Louisiana, and known on the plat of the United States consolidated land office, district of Louisiana, as section seventy-nine, claim of Olivier Duclozel, be, and the title to the same under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of Congress approved June 22, 1860, and extended by the act of Congress approved June 10, 1872, is hereby, confirmed to the said Charles Olivier Duclozel, his heirs or assigns.

Mr. CONGER. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclozel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana, beg leave to submit the following report:

The parcel of land described in the bill is part of a tract of land alleged to have been granted by the Spanish government to Barnard Dauterive in 1775. The said grant to Dauterive has been recognized by the confirmation of claims to several portions thereof by several different claimants at different times. (See American State Papers, Duff Green's edition, vol. 2, p. 703, and vol. 3, pp. 136,137, and 171.) Said Duclozel claims title through this grant. In his chain of title there are some defects, but such defects consist only in the fact of the loss of some title papers, and this prior to 1834. Valery Veillon conveyed said land to Charles Olivier Duclozel June 14, 1836. Said Duclozel conveyed said land, by warranty deed, to William B. Sproule in November, 1869. On the 5th day of February, 1873, the register and receiver of the United States land office in the district of Louisiana recommended that the title of said Duclozel to said land be confirmed. On the 3d day of June, 1874, the Commissioner of the General Land Office recommended that said title be not confirmed, because there was not a complete chain of title shown from said Dauterive; but the Commissioner, in such recommendation, says: "Had the present claimant shown actual corporeal possession of the tract of land claimed from the date of his purchase in 1836, it would, in my opinion, in connection with the documents filed, have given him an equitable claim upon Congress for relief, notwithstanding he had failed to complete all the links in his chain of title." Proof has, since said Commissioner's recommendation, been furnished that said Duclozel entered into actual possession of said land at the time of his purchase, and has ever since continued in the actual possession thereof, and cultivated the same until he sold the same to said Sproule in 1869.

Owing to the length of time which has elapsed since the alleged transfers were made of the said land which are necessary in the chain of paper title, and the further fact that said Duclozel and those claiming under him have been in actual possession of said land since 1836, and forasmuch as no other parties have made any claim to said land, the committee reach the conclusion that the said title to the parcel of land hereinafter more particularly described should be confirmed in the said Charles Olivier Duclozel, his heirs, assigns or transferees, with the limitations and restrictions which the committee have hitherto adopted in similar cases.

Said Duclozel sold said Sproule, with some other lands, a parcel of twelve arpents front on the river Teche by forty arpents depth, being section 79 in township 10 south, of range 6 east, in the southwest district of Louisiana. This is the parcel the title to which is desired to be confirmed. When said Duclozel sold said parcel of land to Sproule, he, by his contract, engaged that the title to said parcel of land should be perfected by act of Congress or otherwise. For said land Mr. Sproule executed his notes, which are unpaid. Said Sproule is dead. Said Duclozel is also dead. Legal proceedings are now pending to subject said lands for the benefit of the creditors of said Sproule. The widow of Duclozel is administratrix of the succession of her deceased husband's estate. She cannot collect the purchase money due on said notes executed by Sproule unless and until the title to said land is in some manner confirmed; and there seems to be no other means to obtain confirmation except by act of Congress.

The Government of the United States is in no manner interested in this matter. It is simply a question whether the estate of Charles Olivier Duclozel shall have the money due from Sproule, to be collected by his widow and administratrix, Mrs. Olivier Duclozel, or whether the creditors of said Sproule shall have the benefit of the proceeds of the sale of said land to her exclusion.

The committee are of the opinion that the purchase-money due from said Sproule should be first paid out of the proceeds of the sale of said land, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. There is a misprint in the bill. Where it reads "ten arpents" it should be twelve arpents. I ask that that correction be made.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the consideration of the bill. I have no objection to the amendment, if entertaining the amendment would not be considering the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the rule observed in the committee is that an amendment may be entertained and voted on upon objection day without debate.

Mr. ACKLEN. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not object to this amendment being made. It is simply to correct a misprint in the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to the amendment, but I do not wish to be considered as withdrawing my objection to the consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be made as indicated.

There was no objection, and the amendment was made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill, as amended, will be laid aside and reported favorably to the House.

Mr. CONGER. I have objected to the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman from Michigan. The bill will be passed over.

Subsequently,

Mr. GUNTER said: The gentleman from Michigan agrees to withdraw his objection to the bill. Unless there is further objection, I ask that the bill be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. CONGER. The amount of land is much smaller than I supposed, and after looking at the papers I agree to withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES H. REEVE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2180) granting a pension to James H. Reeve; reported by Mr. COFFROTH from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read. It grants and allows to James H. Reeve, late captain and brevet major in the Third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, from June 26, 1865, a pension at the rate of $24 per month; and authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of said James H. Reeve on the pension-roll at said rate, in lieu of the pension now paid him, deducting therefrom the amounts already paid him.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to this bill?

Mr. WARNER. I rise to make an inquiry. Is this a unanimous report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. COFFROTH. It is a unanimous report. It is all proper and right.

Mr. WARNER. What is the nature of the disability?

Mr. WHITE. I object to debate.

Mr. COFFROTH. This man lost his leg at Fort Fisher.

Mr. WARNER. I do not object.

Mr. BREWER. I desire to hear the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2180) granting an increase of pension to James H. Reeve, late a captain of Company H, Third Regiment of New York Infantry, and brevet major United States Volunteers, report:

That Major Reeve is now in receipt of a pension at $20, and asks that it be increased to $24, to date from the date of his original certificate.

He bases his claim for increase on section 4698, Revised Statutes, which provides that "all persons who have lost a leg above the knee, and are so disabled thereby that they cannot use an artificial limb, shall be rated in the second class, and receive $24 per month." In this case it is shown that claimant lost his leg at Fort Fisher, January 13, 1865, by the explosion of a shell fired from one of the confederate gunboats lying in Cape Fear River, while leading his regiment to the attack on Fort Fisher, he being the ranking officer present. The lower part of the leg was carried entirely away by a piece of shell, and amputation had to be performed immediately to prevent death from loss of blood. Under these circumstances it was performed hurriedly and improperly, and it was afterward found that the bone was shattered to the knee-joint and should have been cut off above the knee.

The nature of his disability and incapabilities to perform manual labor appears in the report of the board of medical referee, and transmitted by the Commissioner of Pensions, and which is now on file with the committee, as follows, to wit:

Examining surgeon's certificate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 23, 1879.

We hereby certify that we have carefully examined James H. Reeve, late a captain of Company H, Third Regiment New York Infantry Volunteers, in the service of the United States, who is an applicant for an invalid pension by reason of alleged disability resulting from amputation of left leg below the knee.

In our opinion the said James H. Reeve is incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor from the causes above stated.

A more particular description of the applicant's condition is subjoined:

We find amputation of the left leg six inches below the knee; the stump is flexed at an obtuse angle on the thigh, and it cannot be straightened, but can be fully flexed. A bad stump, with deficient covering to bone, the result of sloughing of the whole of the anterior and a portion of the posterior flaps at the time of the operation. The remnant of the tibia is uneven and enlarged, the result of splitting of the bone at the time of wound or the result of subsequent inflammation and thickening. The fibula was also, we believe, fractured at a point above the amputation. Owing to the permanent flexion of the stump, the insufficient covering of the bones, and to tenderness, clearly this man is unable to wear an ordinary artificial limb and is compelled to go on crutches.

So far as his ability to perform manual labor is concerned, he is as badly off as if he had lost his leg above the knee.

N. F. GRAHAM, M. D.
T. B. HOOD, M. D.,
Medical Referee.

Believing the case of Major Reeve to be an exceptional one, and the fact being fully established by the report of the medical referee of his utter inability to wear an artificial limb, and believing his disability is much greater, as it compels him to walk on crutches, having no use of his hands while walking to perform any manual labor whatever, the committee are therefore of the opinion that he should have originally received $24 per month, and recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. BROWNE. The bill ought to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the bill?

Mr. WHITE. None whatever.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

BARK MARY TERESA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2262) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil; reported by Mr. BEALE from the Committee on Commerce.

The bill was read.

Mr. BREWER. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. WHITE. I object to the bill.

Mr. BEALE. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WHITE. I do not withdraw the objection.

CHARLES CLINTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant treasurer at New Orleans; reported by Mr. CARLISLE from the Committee of Ways and Means.

The bill was read.

Mr. ATKINS. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. SPARKS. I object to the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. This bill has been twice examined thoroughly by the Committee of Ways and Means, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] was again instructed to report it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not allowed. Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. SPARKS. It is not.

SAMUEL LORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 62) for the delivery to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, of certain bonds now in the Treasury of the United States.

The bill was read.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is that a Senate bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. DUNNELL. Have we not passed through the House a similar bill?

Mr. EVINS. There was some discussion on this bill in the House on a point of order.

Mr. WHITE. I object, and I can give my reasons for the objection if necessary.

CALVIN BRONSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2269) for the relief of Calvin Bronson; reported by Mr. GIBSON from the Committee of Ways and Means.

The bill was read.

Mr. WHITE. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. WHITE and Mr. HERBERT objected.

PAY OF EXPERTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the (bill H. R. No. 2270) to pay for expert services relating to the metric system rendered the Forty-fifth Congress.

Objected to by Mr. SPARKS.

JOHN N. REED, A. D. ANDERSON, AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2271) for the relief of John N. Reed, A. D. Anderson, John A. Dugan, E. T. Keightley, and George T. Rogers.

The bill was read. It provides that the sum of $2,852.43 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States to pay the claims hereinafter named: to John N. Reed, $1,215.77; to A. D. Anderson, $534; to John A. Dugan, $756; to E. T. Keightley, $166.66; to George T. Rogers, $180; all of the said claims being for services rendered by the claimants to the House of Representatives during the Forty-fifth Congress. And that, whenever the said amount is available, the Clerk of the House of Representatives pay out the said amounts to said claimants respectively.

Mr. BREWER. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee rose informally, Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives to print 5,000 copies of volume 2 of the geological series of the Geological and Geographical Survey of the Rocky Mountain Region, entitled The Geology of the Henry Mountains, with the necessary illustrations and charts.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the resolution to print 15,000 copies of the consular reports showing the rates of wages, hours of labor, prices of food, and general condition of the working classes in the several countries of Europe.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2327) to authorize the renewal of the lease therein named by the joint stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington, District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 243) to authorize the Secretary of War to release certain lands of the United States to the people of the State of New York; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of 2,000 copies of volume 4 of the geological series of the reports of the Geographical and Geological Survey of the Rocky Mountain Region; in which he was requested to ask the concurrence of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar then resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to make a statement to the committee. He feels it to be his duty to state to the committee that the Chair was mistaken in announcing that this was objection day. The Chair was misinformed, and as soon as he is advised of the mistake he embraces the earliest opportunity of correcting it. This is consideration day and the statement of the Chair was erroneous.

Mr. SPRINGER. What will become of the bills that have been passed upon?

Mr. McLANE. I call up the bill which was first objected to.

Mr. CONGER. We have gone nearly through the Calendar as on objection day, and gentlemen upon both sides have left the House on the supposition that this was objection day. I think, therefore, that it would be better that we treat it as objection day for the remainder of the Calendar.

Mr. ATKINS. That can be done by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the committee cannot give that consent; it is a suspension of the rules.

Mr. McLANE. Of course the first bill which was passed over on an objection will take precedence of the other bills. The logical course, from the statement of the Chair, is to go back to the first bill that was objected to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] that the bill before the committee is now pending.

Mr. McLANE. It is pending, but I make the point of order that its consideration must necessarily be arrested.

Mr. SPARKS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would entertain the amendment to the pending bill, but there is a motion now made that the committee rise.

Mr. SPRINGER. In case the committee rise I wish to have my amendment printed.

Mr. ATKINS. What would be the status of the bills which have been considered by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. They certainly have not been considered, but they have been acted upon under a mistake.

Mr. ATKINS. Well, what is their status?

The CHAIRMAN. That would be for the House to determine under the rules; it is not a question for the committee to determine.

Mr. MILLS. If a bill has received unanimous consent, that covers all errors and it might be reported to the House because the indorsement of the majority would have recommended it to the House, and therefore certainly unanimous consent can do it.

Mr. SPARKS. The fact is that the House was acting under the impression that this was objection day, and therefore a great many members were not here, under that impression.

Mr. MILLS. That does not alter the fact.

Mr. SPARKS. That is what I say. The House has been acting under a false impression, under an erroneous statement from the Chair. Now, will that prevent those gentlemen who were not in their seats——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that when the report of the Committee of the Whole is made to the House then will be the time for the point of order to be raised upon the action of the committee, and that will be decided under the rules of the House by the Speaker of the House. It is not for the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to pronounce upon that question.

Mr. BREWER. Has not the committee voted to rise?

Mr. COVERT. I call for a division upon that question.

Mr. WHITE. It is too late to call for a division now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the call.

The question was taken upon the motion that the committee rise; and upon a division there were—ayes 76, noes 9.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. SPRINGER said: It is agreed that my amendment may be received and printed.

Many MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for. The committee has decided to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BRIGHT reported that the Committee of the Whole, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the Private Calendar and had directed him to report sundry bills to the House, some with amendments and one without amendment.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. After the report of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar has been disposed of, the Chair will recognize the gentleman to make that motion.

CHARLES OLIVIER DUCLOZEL.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclozel to certain lands in Louisiana, reported with an amendment.

The amendment was, in line 3, to strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "twelve" before the word "arpents."

Mr. SPARKS. Was that bill approved by the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It was, with an amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. The action taken in Committee of the Whole was upon the statement of the Chair that the House was in Committee of the Whole as of objection day.

Mr. FINLEY. This bill was acted upon by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] objected to the bill, and subsequently withdrew his objection.

Mr. CONGER. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. And no further objection being made, the bill was acted upon by unanimous consent.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES H. REEVE.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 2180) granting an increase of pension to James H. Reeve, reported without amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COFFROTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. P. ZIMMERMAN AND H. P. SNOW.

The last bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2003) for the relief of J. P. Zimmerman and H. P. Snow, of Clinton County, Kentucky; reported with an amendment.

The amendment was to strike out "$100" and insert in lieu thereof "$98;" so as to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $98 to J. P. Zimmerman and H. P. Snow, &c.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FINLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. COX. I hope not; let us do a little business in Committee of the Whole; there is nothing political in it.

Mr. WHITE. I must insist upon the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. WHITE; and upon a division there were—ayes 70, noes 27.

VETO MESSAGES OF THE PRESIDENT.

Pending the announcement of the result of the vote upon the motion to adjourn,

Mr. LAPHAM said: I ask unanimous consent to present the views of the minority of the Judiciary Committee in reference to the veto messages of the President; and I move that they be printed with the majority report, and recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. That is in accordance with the former understanding of the House.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

TESTIMONY IN CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following, received by the Clerk of the House:

Testimony and papers in the contested-election case of Horatio Bisbee, jr., vs. Noble A. Hull, of the second congressional district of Florida; and Testimony and papers in the contested election of Jesse J. Yeates vs. J. J. Martin, of the first congressional district of North Carolina.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that those papers be referred to the Committee of Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal of papers, as follows:

To Mr. MITCHELL, in the case of F. G. Bishop; no adverse report.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested to ask for leave of absence—

To Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, for one week, on account of important business;

To Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, indefinitely, on account of important business;

To Mr. MORTON, indefinitely, from the 20th instant, on account of important business;

To Mr. WELLS, indefinitely, on account of important business;

To Mr. BEALE, for four days, on account of important business;

To Mr. VANCE, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family; and

To Mr. STEELE, indefinitely, from Monday, on account of important and absolutely necessary business.

Mr. DUNNELL. If the leave of absence is granted in these cases it will leave us without a quorum.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. I would like to inquire of the Chair if all these leaves of absence are granted, will there be a quorum left in the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot state definitely.

Mr. DUNNELL. The largest vote yesterday was 161.

Mr. SPRINGER. I must object to all leaves of absence except on account of sickness.

Mr. DUNNELL. All asked for now are for important business.

The SPEAKER. There is but one on account of sickness.

Mr. CONGER. If there is any more important business than for members to stay here and finish the work of this Congress, I would like to have some gentleman state what it can possibly be.

Mr. COX. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ATKINS. These leaves of absence have not been granted yet.

Mr. COX. That is why I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the one on account of sickness will be granted, and the rest will not be granted.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated; and accordingly (at three o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois: The petition of Spaulding & Merrick and other manufacturers of tobacco, of Chicago, Illinois, against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1570) known as the free-leaf tobacco bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. KLOTZ: The petition of Robert E. Hedian, for one month's pay from the date of his discharge from the soldiers' roll of the Doorkeeper, House of Representatives, Forty-sixth Congress—to the Committee of Accounts.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 21, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 913) to provide for the exchange of the trade-dollars for legal-tender silver dollars was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 2019) for the relief of Daniel M. Cook was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 106) providing for the payment of John E. Kelly as messenger to the Committee of Ways and Means was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CONWAY NATIONAL BANK, MASSACHUSETTS.

The bill (H. R. No. 2329) authorizing the Conway National Bank of Conway, Massachusetts, to change its location and name was read twice by its title.

Mr. DAWES. That is a bill of a local character, and I have submitted it to all the members of the Committee on Finance, to which such bills go; and at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, who is entirely satisfied, as are the other members, with the provisions of the bill, I ask the favor that it may be put on its passage at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of this bill? The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of June 17, 1879, the report of the board of naval engineer officers in relation to plans and specifications of refrigerating ships and machinery; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WITHERS presented the petition of William H. Harrison, of Virginia, praying that his claim for compensation for the use and occupancy of certain property in Virginia by United States troops during the late war be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Richard M. Harrison, of Virginia, praying that his claim for compensation for the use and occupancy of certain property in Virginia by United States troops during the late war be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of P. A. Welford, praying that his claim for compensation for certain cotton seized by the United States authorities during the late war be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PENDLETON presented a letter of Joseph C. G. Kennedy in relation to the law for taking the tenth census; which was referred to the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 711) amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to call up the resolution which I reported yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Delaware that that resolution will come up during the morning hour as soon as the routine morning business is through with. Are there further reports from committees?

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

POST-ROADS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. MAXEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom were referred the House amendments to the bill (S. No. 697) to establish additional post-routes in the State of Florida, to report the same back and ask that certain amendments reported by the committee to the House amendments be adopted and that the amendments of the House, as amended, be concurred in.

I will state that there is nothing in the world in the bill except merely establishing post-routes. I ask that the amendments be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senate committee propose certain amendments to the House amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the committee will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendments of the House of Representatives by adding:

MARYLAND.

From Oakland to Fort Pendleton.

TENNESSEE.

From Erin, via William Edwards' on White Oak Creek, to McEwen.

TEXAS.

From Seguin to San Marcos.

From Weatherford, via Dry Creek, Amita, and Black Springs, to Christian, and thence, via Bellew Springs, back to Weatherford.

ALABAMA.

From Town Creek to Bellevue.

The amendments to the amendments of the House of Representatives were agreed to.

The amendments of the House, as amended, were concurred in.

PROFESSOR PETER COLLIER.

Mr. BAYARD. The Committee on Finance instruct me to report a joint resolution to pay Professor Peter Collier for services as chemist in the prosecution of the evasions of the duties on sugar. I ask unanimous consent that it be now considered and put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 38) to pay Professor Peter Collier for services as chemist in the prosecution of the evasions of the duties on sugar was read three times, and passed. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the account of Professor Peter Collier, out of the appropriation for defraying the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, to an amount not exceeding $1,500 for services as a chemist in the prosecution by the Government of parties charged with evasions of duties on sugar.

PARIS MONETARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. WHYTE. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably a concurrent resolution without amendment, and I ask its immediate consideration by the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 12,000 extra copies of the report and proceedings of the Paris monetary conference, held in August last, be printed and bound in cloth; of which number 6,000 copies shall be for the use of the House, 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 for the use of the Department of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Maryland that possibly in order to cover all it might be well to add the words, "and accompanying papers." I know there are some valuable papers which ought to be printed. If the words inserted in the resolution are sufficient to cover them I do not propose to amend it.

Mr. WHYTE. The words used are sufficient.

Mr. ALLISON. I only want it understood that these valuable papers shall be printed.

Mr. WHYTE. I think the word "proceedings" covers all the papers that are connected with the report.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 708) to authorize the State of Illinois to commence and prosecute suits against the United States in the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COKE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 709) for the relief of E. J. Gurley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CHANDLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 710) for the relief of Henry P. Seymour, W. A. Frazer, Alvan N. Sabin, and the heirs of Percy S. Leggett, late supernumerary second lieutenant of the Fifth Michigan Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KELLOGG (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 713) to provide ocean mail steamship service between the United States and South America; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GROVER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 714) for the relief of William H. Barnhart; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. RANSOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 715) for the relief of N. Boyden; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BECK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VANCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 40) authorizing the issue of certain guns and artillery equipments to the State of North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BAYARD, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of the widow and minor children of Michael Meenan, deceased, (Senate bill No. 1359, Forty-fifth Congress, second session,) be withdrawn from the files.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move that the President pro tempore be authorized to fill the vacancies upon the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to fill the vacancy on both those committees in place of the retiring Senator, (Mr. Bell.)

REFRIGERATING SHIP FOR DISINFECTION.

Mr. McDONALD. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, required to report to this body all action and proceedings taken by the National Board of Health under or in connection with "an act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to contract for the purchase or construction of a refrigerating ship for the disinfection of vessels and cargoes, and for other purposes," approved April 18, 1879, to gether with copies of all papers, plans, specifications, and correspondence relating thereto submitted to said board up to the time such report is made.

I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let it say "directed." That is the language we use.

Mr. McDONALD. That is the language.

Mr. SAUNDERS. No; it says "required" now.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the fact that there was a communication on that subject laid on the table this morning from the Secretary of the Navy, which I presume embraces all the information that is called for by this resolution.

Mr. McDONALD. Does it cover all that this resolution calls for?

Mr. GARLAND. I have not had time to look over it, but I would suggest that the resolution lie on the table until we have time to look at it.

Mr. McDONALD. I consent to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or a sub-committee of the same, be, and are hereby, authorized to sit during the recess of the Senate for the purpose of continuing the investigation in the Spofford-Kellogg contest.

The committee omitted to put in the original resolution authority to sit during the recess. This simply covers that defect. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I think that had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. It is only to authorize the committee to sit during the recess.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that there certainly cannot be any objection to the passage of this resolution. The object of it is to correct a defect in the original resolution.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That is all.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to withdraw his objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Has the matter been considered by the committee? Does the resolution come from the committee?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The subject-matter of it was considered by the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I supposed it was a new matter just coming up and that we had no time to consider it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate directing the Public Printer to deliver to the Secretary of the Interior ten copies of the Colonial Charters and Constitutions of the United States from those remaining in his possession.

The message further announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of 250 additional copies of the Observations of the Transit of Venus, made under the direction of the Navy Department in December, 1874, for the use of the Naval Observatory.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for printing 8,000 copies of the eulogies delivered on the late J. E. Leonard, a member of the Forty-fifth Congress from the State of Louisiana, together with a portrait of the deceased; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 10,000 extra copies of House Report No. 14, first session of the Forty-sixth Congress; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1627) authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the Wabash River;

A bill (H. R. No. 2267) providing for the binding of the internal-revenue laws and manual;

A bill (H. R. No. 2003) for the relief of J. P. Zimmerman and H. P. Snow, of Clinton County, Kentucky;

A bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclozel to certain lands in the State of Louisana;

A bill (H. R. No. 2180) granting an increase of pension to James H. Reeve; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 107) authorizing the Secretary of War to use $5,000 of the appropriations for Charleston Harbor for the protection of Sullivan's Island from inroads of the sea.

JAMES H. REEVE.

Mr. VOORHEES. In listening to the announcement of the Clerk of the House I heard a bill granting a pension to James H. Reeve. A bill for the same purpose passed this body at the last session and failed then in the other House for want of time. It was reported by a committee of this body and passed this body; the bill has now passed the House, and I hope there will be no objection to taking it up and passing it and enabling it to become a law. The man is now on the eve of another amputation growing out of the wound he received. The case is exceedingly just and meritorious, and I ask that the House bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 2180) granting an increase of pension to James H. Reeve. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it be read for information.

The bill was read twice by its title.

Mr. VOORHEES. All the explanation necessary is that the Senate passed the bill at the last session on the report of the Committee on Pensions. We passed it through the committee at the last session, and it then passed the Senate, but failed to become a law for want of time. The result is that both branches of Congress have passed this claim for an increase of pension after an examination by the proper committees. All I want is, if possible, to have it pass both branches at the same session so that it may become a law. I am credibly informed that this man is now, perhaps at this very time, suffering or will within the next few years suffer another amputation on account of the wound for which this increase of pension is asked. I like to do things practical. We theoretically helped this man through this branch of Congress and through the other, and now we can in three minutes pass the bill through this body and then we shall practically help him.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator objects the bill cannot be considered.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to say that I shall be compelled to interpose an objection aside from the general rule that bills of this kind should go to the proper committee.

Mr. VOORHEES. Of course if an objection is made that stops it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. This bill contains a provision that the pension shall commence from June 26, 1865.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa objects to the present consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Very well.

INDIAN WARS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no resolutions to be offered, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER] on the 16th instant, calling on the President for information as to how many soldiers and civilians were killed and wounded, the estimated value of property destroyed, with the expenses incurred by the United States, in certain named Indian wars. The Chair does not see the Senator from Arkansas present.

Mr. COKE. I was requested by the Senator from Arkansas to ask for the present consideration of that resolution when called up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It comes up now in the regular order of business. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the matter presented?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A resolution submitted some time ago by the Senator from Arkansas, which will be read.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, how many soldiers and civilians were killed and wounded; the estimated value of property destroyed, with the expenses incurred by the United States in the following-named Indian wars, namely: The war in Southern Oregon and Idaho and northern parts of California and Nevada in 1865-'68; war against the Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Kiowas, and Comanches, in Kansas, Colorado, and the Indian Territory, in 1868-'69; the Modoc war, in 1872-'73; the war against the Apaches of Arizona, in 1873; the war against the Kiowas, Comanches, and Cheyennes, in Kansas, Colorado, Texas, Indian Territory, and New Mexico, in 1874-'75; the war against the Northern Cheyennes and Sioux, in 1876-'77; the Nez Percé war, in 1877; the Bannack war, in 1878; and the war against the Northern Cheyennes, in 1878-'79. And that he be requested further to inform the Senate, as nearly as he may be able, how many Indians have been killed in each of the wars mentioned.

KANSAS SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair now lays before the Senate——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate, as I understand the President now has gone through the morning business and is on the Calendar——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, there is still a resolution in the morning hour, the resolution reported yesterday by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in relation to the investigation of charges against Senator INGALLS; that is now the business regularly before the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I give way to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. ALLISON. I think in the absence of Senators that had better be laid aside for a moment. I do not wish to interfere with the consideration of it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I supposed it was generally understood it would come up.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not know that; I do not wish to interpose any objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think, although I am not certain, that the Senator from Kansas desires to say a word before the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator from Kansas desires to be heard upon it, I certainly shall not ask for its present consideration, but I supposed he was absent because he supposed it might come up.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Not at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I will wait until he comes in. I desire to say, however, that I shall endeavor to call up the resolution at the first opportunity.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There will be no objection to taking up the resolution as soon as the Senator from Kansas comes into the Chamber.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 675) to provide office rooms for the National Board of Health and for the publication of its reports and papers, and for other purposes, which went over yesterday morning with the understanding that it should come up this morning. It will take but a very short time. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has been agreed upon, and it will take but a little while, I apprehend, to dispose of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 675.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. In section 6 of the substitute, at the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, the committee agree to accept an amendment in the following words: After the word "necessary," in line 6, insert "with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to read:

And the Board of Health shall have power, when they may deem it necessary, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, as a means of preventing the importation of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, or into one State from another, to erect, &c.

And in line 8, after the words "to erect," to insert "temporary;" and in line 9, after the word "acquire," to insert "on behalf of the United States;" so as to read:

To erect temporary quarantine buildings and to acquire on behalf of the United States titles to real estate for that purpose, or to rent houses, if there be any suitable, at such points and places as are named in such section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendments of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. Now, in section 7, line 2, after the word "expended," I move to insert "and all contracts made and liabilities incurred;" so as to read:

That all the money hereinbefore authorized to be expended, and all contracts made and liabilities incurred by the National Board of Health, shall be paid out of the appropriation of $500,000, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND. In the first section there is a verbal error in line 12. It reads the "3d day of June." "June" should be changed to "July." I move to make that change.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Arkansas having accepted amendments which I think most important, I hardly feel willing to intrude another amendment, and yet so important do I consider it that I will suggest it at least.

It is only a few years since we adopted the policy of abolishing all our marine hospitals, one in San Francisco, one in Illinois; and in various places of the country the Government has been disposed to part with all the hospitals it has had in its possession. Now, I do not like immediately to again go into the business of having so many of these hospitals on hand as the property of the United States. I would therefore suggest to the Senator from Arkansas the propriety of limiting the amount to be appropriated for the purposes of these hospitals. Evidently it is understood by all having any knowledge upon the subject that the cheap pavilion hospitals, one story, made of boards, are altogether the best hospitals in the world for the purposes that will be required under this bill. I suggest, therefore, an amendment, in line 10 of section 6 to insert "to an amount not exceeding an aggregate of $50,000." I do not offer it as an amendment unless the Senator from Arkansas will accept it. I merely offer it as a suggestion, and hope the Senator from Arkansas will accept it.

Mr. GARLAND. That matter has given the committee a great deal of labor, the very suggestion the Senator has made, and the committee concluded after the best consideration it was capable of giving to the subject that it was impossible to limit this as to amount, because it will be seen at once that from the ravages of this disease at various points the expenditure needed to erect a building at one point would not be adequate at another point; and the board might find themselves with the limitation expended and then not one-half the building erected for the purposes which this bill contemplates. We have agreed to accept the amendment which is already incorporated that this is not to be done unless the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury is given. That is a restriction, to begin with, that we think will secure everything that can possibly be secured in this matter, and further in line 8 we insert words requiring that all the buildings are to be temporary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. GARLAND. It will take but a few minutes to finish this bill, and I ask the consent of the Senate to dispose of it. I have no more to say upon it. I cannot accept the amendment. Let us take a vote.

Mr. WALLACE. The conference committee report is pending, and it is important to get through with it.

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon gave notice of his desire to address the Senate to-day, and the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senate will consent to the disposal of this bill, as I pledged myself that I would not object to its consideration this morning, and I presume it will not take five minutes to close it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont suggests that the consideration of the bill taken up on motion of the Senator from Arkansas be continued for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SLATER. If I can have the floor at the end of that time, I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to continuing the consideration of this bill for five minutes? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRIS. At the end of section 5 I offer, with the consent of the Senator from Arkansas, this amendment:

And the Board of Health may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, pay to its secretary such sum, in addition to his pay as a member of the board, as it may deem proper, not exceeding $100 per month.

The only reason why I offer the amendment is that it may become absolutely necessary under certain contingencies for some small additional allowance beyond the measure of pay of a member of the board. The duties of the office of secretary are exceedingly heavy, requiring the entire time of that officer day and night. That is all I have to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would ask the Senator from Arkansas if there is any appropriation in this bill?

Mr. GARLAND. Not a cent. I stated yesterday that the appropriation was already made, and they cannot spend another dollar.

Mr. ANTHONY. I see by the title that there is provision made for printing the proceedings.

Mr. GARLAND. And that is to be paid out of the appropriation already made.

Mr. ANTHONY. Made for this purpose; not out of the general printing appropriation?

Mr. GARLAND. The appropriation already made, not the general printing appropriation at all.

Mr. ANTHONY. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on adopting the amendment reported by the committee as a substitute as it has been amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APPROPRIATION FOR JUDICIAL EXPENSES.

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALLACE. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me for the purpose of calling up the conference report, which I believe is a privileged report.

Mr. SLATER. Very well.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask that it be taken up and read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania calls up the report of the committee of conference on an appropriation bill, which is a privileged question, and it is now before the Senate. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the report?

Mr. WINDOM. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Chair state; I do not know that the Senate understands distinctly what the question is. I should like to have the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has charge of it, state distinctly what the question before the Senate is.

Mr. WALLACE. The question before the Senate is the adoption of the report of the conference committee by which the second section of the bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriation for certain judicial expenses was changed from the form in which it passed the Senate

Mr. WINDOM. That is the judicial appropriation bill?

Mr. WALLACE. The judicial expenses appropriation bill. As it passed the Senate there was a controlling of the power of any Department or officer of the Government to make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money until an appropriation to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law, except as provided for in section 3732 of the Revised Statutes, which allows the War and Navy Departments to make contracts in certain cases. The committee of conference have amended that section so as to restrict the operation of the section to the cases occurring under title 26 of the Revised Statutes; that is, it controls the Departments and officers of the Government in regard to making contracts or incurring liabilities for the appointment and payment of general or special deputy marshals for service at elections or on election day. That is the whole scope of the amendment. It is restrictive and controlling of the section as it was before. By the section as it now stands, there is no interference whatever with the supervisors, either general or local; they are paid under the general permanent appropriation laws which are found in the Revised Statutes. This simply emphasizes and makes distinct the provision found in the first section of the bill which denies appropriations for special deputies, and it is confined in its scope to that purpose alone.

Mr. WINDOM. I only wanted the Senate to understand distinctly what the issue was, and I think the Senator has stated it so clearly that I need say nothing.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY, (when his name was called.) I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON,] who is absent. I should vote "nay," if he were here.

Mr. MORRILL, (when the name of Mr. EDMUNDS was called.) My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. GROVER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the senior Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WHYTE, (when his name was called.) Upon all political questions I am paired with the junior Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] Consequently I cannot vote. If I could, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WITHERS. My colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] is paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

Mr. JONAS. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] is paired with his colleague, [Mr. BRUCE.] If he were here, Mr. LAMAR would vote "yea."

Mr. BECK. My colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] My colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. PENDLETON. The Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] is paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. BAILEY, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I withdraw my vote and announce that I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.]

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Bayard,	Garland,	Kernan,	Slater,
Beck,	Groome,	McDonald,	Vance,
Call,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hill of Georgia,	Morgan,	Walker,
Davis of Illinois,	Houston,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Randolph,	Withers.
Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—17.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Platt,
Blair,	Chandler,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Booth,	Dawes,	Logan,	Saunders,
Burnside,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Windom.
Cameron of Pa.,

ABSENT—28.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Plumb,
Bailey,	Farley,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Blaine,	Gordon,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,
Bruce,	Grover,	Kellogg,	Teller,
Butler,	Hamlin,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Carpenter,	Hereford,	Morrill,	Whyte,
Conkling,	Hoar,	Paddock,	Williams.

So the report was concurred in.

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Oregon to yield to me for a moment. I desire to make a report on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reports a bill which will be read.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 712) providing for filling vacancies in the Office of Chief of Engineers, United States Army, was read twice. It proposes to repeal so much of the act of June 10, 1872, chapter 426, volume 17, page 382, Statutes at Large, as prohibits promotion in the Corps of Engineers above the rank of colonel, and all other acts prohibiting said promotion.

Mr. MAXEY. I beg to put the bill on its passage with a simple statement that I think will be satisfactory to everybody. The case is thus presented by the Secretary of War and the Chief of the Corps of Engineers:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, December 12, 1878.

The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the United States Senate copy of a communication from the Chief of Engineers dated the 6th instant, in which he states that "under the law as it now stands, if the office of the Chief of Engineers of the Army should become vacant, no appointment to fill that vacancy could be made, although the law requires that there shall be a Chief of Engineers; that his rank shall be that of a brigadier-general, and that he shall do certain acts."

To remedy this, a draught of a bill is herewith transmitted, which is respectfully recommended to the favorable consideration of Congress at this session.

GEO. W. McCRARY,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C., December 6, 1878.

SIR: Under the law as it now stands, if the office of the Chief of Engineers of the Army should become vacant, no appointment to fill that vacancy could be made, although the law requires that there shall be a Chief of Engineers; that his rank shall be that of brigadier-general; and that he shall do certain acts. (See section 1151, and others, Revised Statutes.)

This prohibitory provision should be repealed. It came to be enacted in this way:

Section 6 of the act making appropriation for the support of the Army (3d March, 1869, chapter 124, volume 15, page 318) prohibited promotion and new appointments in the Engineers, the Ordnance, and all staff departments. The act of 10th June, 1872, (chapter 426, volume 17, page 382,) repealed that prohibition so far as it affected the Corps of Engineers; provided that no promotion should be made in that corps beyond the grade of colonel.

I believe that this single prohibition was retained for reasons which no longer exist. It would be unjust and injurious to the engineer service to retain this provision any longer. All the provisions of section 6 of the act of 3d March, 1869, prohibiting promotions and new appointments in the Ordnance and in the staff departments have been repealed since 1872, and the only remaining provision of that section is the one prohibiting promotion in the Corps of Engineers above the rank of colonel. This remaining provision should also be repealed.

I have added the project of a bill for the purpose, which also includes the removal of the prohibition of promotion enacted in the last Army appropriation bill so far as it may apply to the Chief of Engineers.

Should these views meet your approval, I beg leave to ask that the subject be brought to the attention of Congress with your favorable recommendation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. GEORGE W. McCRARY,
Secretary of War.

The whole purpose of this bill is to remedy that evil. The bill was reported at the last session unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs, and was only not passed for want of time. It comes up now to do a simple act of justice to the acting chief of engineers, who has been doing the duty for a considerable time.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Texas whether this was not an amendment to the Army bill, which was rejected?

Mr. MAXEY. It was offered as an amendment to the Army bill, and was rejected.

Mr McMILLAN. Did not the Senator vote against it last night?

Mr. MAXEY. I voted against all the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole and in favor of passing the Army bill precisely as it came from the House. That was the way I voted. But I desire to say to the Senator from Minnesota that he has the perfect power to stop a good officer from getting his proper rank.

Mr. McMILLAN. I did not rise for the purpose of objecting; I merely wished to inquire the state of the facts, whether the Senator had voted against this meritorious measure last night.

Mr. MAXEY. The record states the fact as correctly as it can be stated, and I always stand by the record; I never back from that. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. ALLISON. That was on the Army bill last night and voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, will the Senate by unanimous consent proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to return my thanks to the Senate.

KANSAS SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Oregon consents that I may now call up the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I understand the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] does not wish to be heard upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in reference to charges against Mr. INGALLS.

The Secretary read the resolution; and it was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which has been referred memorials in relation to the election of Hon. J. J. INGALLS, a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Kansas, be, and said committee is hereby, authorized and instructed to investigate the statements and charges contained in said memorials: and for that purpose said committee is empowered to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, employ a stenographer, clerk, and sergeant-at-arms, and do all such acts as are necessary and proper in the premises. And said committee may appoint a sub-committee of its members to take testimony in Kansas or elsewhere in the case, which shall report the testimony taken to the committee in December next; and such sub-committee shall have the same authority to administer oaths and do other necessary acts as are herein conferred upon the full committee; and the said committee, and the sub-committee which it may appoint, may sit during the recess of the Senate for the purpose of making the investigation hereby authorized.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 1627) authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the Wabash River—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 2267) providing for the binding of the internal-revenue laws and manual—to the Committee on Printing.

A bill (H. R. No. 2003) for the relief of J. P. Zimmerman and H. P. Snow, of Clinton County, Kentucky—to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

A bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclozel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 107) authorizing the Secretary of War to use $5,000 of the appropriations for Charleston Harbor for the protection of Sullivan's Island from inroads of the sea—to the Committee on Commerce.

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; and it was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States, (the Senate concurring,) That 10,000 extra copies of House Report No. 14, first session, Forty-sixth Congress, be printed at the Government Printing Office; 2,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 7,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE LEONARD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That 8,000 copies of the eulogies delivered on the late J. E. Leonard, a member of the Forty-fifth Congress from the State of Louisiana, together with a portrait of the deceased, executed under direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, be printed; 6,000 copies thereof for the use of the House of Representatives and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2327) to authorize the renewal of a loan therein named by the joint stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington.

CHINESE RESIDENTS AND VISITORS.

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not suppose the Senator from Oregon wishes a vote on his bill to-day, and I know it has always been a courtesy extended to Senators heretofore to give them the floor when they wish to speak to a bill; but I desire to say to the Senate that the appropriation bill known as the letter-carriers bill is ready, and at the expiration of the speech of the Senator from Oregon I shall call it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. SLATER. I move to take up Senate bill No. 622.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 622) regulating intercourse with the subjects of the Chinese Empire visiting or residing in the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SLATER. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the 1st day of July, 1880, it shall not be lawful for any citizen or subject of the Chinese Empire, then resident or thereafter becoming resident in the United States, to engage in, carry on, or work at any manufacturing or mechanical business, or to own or lease, carry on, or work any mine, or to own or lease any real estate for any purpose other than that of lawful commerce and for places of residence, or to conduct any farm, garden, vineyard, or orchard for agricultural, horticultural, or other like purpose, or to own, have, or keep any herd of cattle, horses, sheep, goats, or swine for the purpose of making profit by the increase, product, or use thereof, or to keep any hotel or restaurant for public entertainment, excepting for the use and accommodation of the citizens and subjects of China, or to work or engage to work as mechanic, artisan, laborer, waiter, servant, cook, clerk, or messenger, or in any other capacity, or at any other kind of labor, skilled or unskilled, except for and in the employ of citizens and subjects of China lawfully engaged in commerce in the United States or traveling or residing therein. And any person being a citizen or subject of the Empire of China who shall, after the 1st day of July, 1880, engage in, carry on, or work at any manufacturing or mechanical business, or who shall own, lease, carry on, or work any mine, or own or lease any real estate for any purpose other than that of lawful commerce or for places of residence, or shall conduct any farm, garden, vineyard, or orchard for agricultural, horticultural, or other like purpose, or shall own, have, or keep any herd of cattle, horses, sheep, goats, or swine for the purpose of making profit by the increase, product, or use thereof, or of either, or shall keep any hotel or restaurant for public entertainment, excepting for the use and accommodation of citizens and subjects of China, or shall work or engage to work as a mechanic, artisan, laborer, waiter, servant, cook, clerk, or messenger, or in any other capacity, or at any other kind of labor, skilled or unskilled, except in the employ of citizens or subjects of China visiting, residing, or engaged in lawful commerce in the United States, or as teacher or interpreter, shall, upon indictment and conviction thereof, be fined in a sum not less than $100 or by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not more than six months, or both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court; and all persons convicted of violating any of the provisions of this act shall, in addition to the fine or imprisonment inflicted by the court, forfeit to the United States all property used or invested in the prohibited business in which such convicted person shall have been engaged at the time of his conviction: Provided, That the citizens of China, as respects the right to travel or reside in the United States, shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions, while so traveling or residing in the United States, and shall be protected in person and property in the same manner, as the citizens of foreign nations are entitled to by treaty stipulations had and made with such foreign nations, and not otherwise.

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1880, it shall not be lawful for any person, corporation, or company to employ any Mongolian being a citizen or subject of China, to work as a skilled laborer at any manufacturing business or mechanical art, or in any department thereof, or as a common laborer, or waiter, servant, cook, or messenger, or in any other capacity, or at any other kind of labor, skilled or unskilled, except as interpreter or teacher of the Chinese language; and any person, corporation, or company who shall, after said date, hire or have in their employ any Mongolian, being at the time a subject of China, laboring as a skilled laborer at any manufacturing business or mechanical art, or in any department thereof, or as a common laborer, or waiter, servant, cook, or messenger, or in any other capacity, or laboring at any other kind of labor, skilled or unskilled, except as interpreter or teacher of the Chinese language, shall, upon conviction thereof upon indictment found, be fined in any sum not less than $100 for each offense: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent citizens or subjects of China residing or traveling in the United States from employing citizens or subjects of China in any business or for any purpose not declared unlawful in section 1 thereof.

The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to try and determine all violations of this act, and of all actions or proceedings for the recovery of forfeitures thereunder.

The President of the United States shall, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, notify the government of China of the provisions of the same in such manner and form as he may determine.

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President, this bill, which was introduced the 22d of last month, has for its object the regulation of the intercourse of the Chinese now residing, or who may hereafter come to reside, in this country with our own people, and thereby the prevention of that hurtful competition in the labor market, wherever these people have come and which is pressing so severely upon the laboring classes of the Pacific States and Territories. The provisions of the bill are, as I conceive, based upon acknowledged and recognized principles of the law of nations, as drawn from the usage and practice of nations, and upon the strong and urgent necessities growing out of the coming of large numbers of cooly emigrants among our people of the Pacific coast. I doubt not the provisions of this bill will be regarded as novel, and, possibly, objectionable to some; but, sir, the main question involved—that which is really sought to be accomplished—is not new here, and I am sure that every Senator regards it as one of very grave importance; and that is, the placing of some limit to Chinese cooly immigration into the United States.

From the very first the coming of this people was met with disapprobation and opposition on the Pacific, not, however, from anticipation of immediate evil, but from a firm conviction that if their first colonists were permitted to gain permanent foothold they would invite a constantly increasing stream of emigration, which in the end would antagonize our civilization and endanger its permanency. Time has only intensified this opposition, which was manifested upon the arrival of the first Chinese immigrants, for it has only served to demonstrate, if demonstration was needed, that, to the body of our population, the commingling of these people with ours in any considerable numbers has been, and is, an unmixed evil, and as such demands, in the interest of society and good order, to be restricted, if not entirely abated; and this bill, if it shall become a law, will most effectually eradicate the evils complained of, as respects the obtrusion of the Chinese into all the channels of labor in the Pacific States and Territories or elsewhere in the United States, and this is precisely what is sought.

Under the Constitution the power to deal with all questions of intercourse with foreign nations is confided to the Federal Government. In the power to grant naturalization and the power to prohibit the "migration or importation" of foreigners after 1808 may be found ample authority to regulate and prescribe the relations of aliens who have been or may be admitted within our limits in any manner or for any purpose.

It is the settled law of nations that each sovereignty has full power and authority to control and regulate its intercourse with other nations according to its own best interest. The safety, integrity, and often the very existence of a people as a separate, distinct, and independent nation or sovereignty, depend upon the assertion and exercise of this highest attribute of sovereign power. Every treaty, which is entered into between sovereign States, is but an additional proof of this proposition. Every concession, by one people constituting a nation to another people or nation, is based upon the admitted fact that the conceding power might refuse to grant the concession made; and this, too, whether the concession respects commercial intercourse, the rendition of criminals, the right of expatriation, the descent of property, or the permission for the citizens of one nation to freely emigrate to, settle, or abide within the territories of the other. As an illustration of this we may take at random any treaty between the United States and any foreign power; as, for instance, our treaty with the Swiss Confederation of 1850—a treaty perhaps the most favorable to foreigners of any we have with any foreign power—the first article of which is as follows:

The citizens of the United States of America and the citizens of Switzerland shall be admitted and treated upon a footing of reciprocal equality in the two countries, when such admission and treatment shall not conflict with the constitutional or legal provisions, as well as state and cantonal, of the contracting parties. The citizens of the United States and the citizens of Switzerland, as well as the members of their families, subject to the constitutional and legal provisions aforesaid and yielding obedience to the laws, regulations, and usages of the country wherein they reside, shall be at liberty to come, go, sojourn temporarily, domiciliate, or establish themselves permanently, the former in the cantons of the Swiss Confederation, the Swiss in the States of the American Union, to acquire, possess, and alienate therein property, (as is explained in article 5,) to manage their affairs, to exercise their professions, their industry, and their commerce; to have establishments; to possess warehouses; to consign their products and their merchandise, and to sell them by wholesale or retail, either by themselves or by such brokers or other agents as they may think proper; they shall have free access to the tribunals and shall be at liberty to prosecute and defend their rights before courts of justice in the same manner as native citizens, either by themselves or by such advocates, attorneys, or other agents as they may think proper to select. No pecuniary or other more burdensome condition shall be imposed upon their residence or establishment or upon the enjoyment of the above-mentioned rights than shall be imposed upon citizens of the country where they reside, nor any condition whatever to which the latter shall not be subject.

The foregoing privileges, however, shall not extend to the exercise of political rights nor to a participation in the property of communities, corporations, or institutions of which the citizens of one party, established in the other, shall not have become members or co-proprietors.

Here, sir, we find the citizens of the contracting parties have conceded to them the most extensive rights and privileges, not merely of commerce, but respecting their personal relations, professions, industries, and business; the right to come and go at pleasure, and to sojourn or permanently abide in the territories of the other with like security and protection as the native citizen. The right to make these concessions presupposes the right to deny them or to grant them upon conditions. The existence of these treaty stipulations have no other or different basis whereon to rest. It is true, that in modern times, civilized nations have rarely exercised the right to exclude the commerce of other nations from their ports, but their treaties and statutes are full of restrictions and conditions based upon the right to do so if interest or necessity required it. Nor has it been customary to shut out emigration or refuse to foreigners the right of entry, settlement, occupation, and naturalization, but in this as in matters of a commercial character in many ways these rights are permitted to be enjoyed only under restrictions and upon conditions.

The same reason which requires that commerce should be permitted, controlled, and regulated with foreign nations by the supreme authority of the State, also requires that the right of foreigners to come, sojourn, or permanently abide within the territories of a nation to whom they are alien should be regulated, controlled, or even denied by the same authority. The right to deny the admission of foreigners upon sufficient reason is beyond question, or if admitted at all, such admission may be conditional or subject to restrictions, such as, that they shall not visit or go into certain parts of the country to which they may be admitted; or will not go beyond certain limits; or that they shall not carry on certain industries, professions, or callings; or to attach any other condition to their admission in the interest of the body of the people or of the State where they seek to come. Upon this point Vattel says:

The sovereign may forbid the entrance of his territory either to foreigners in general or in particular cases, or to certain persons, or for certain particular purposes, according as he may think it advantageous to the state. There is nothing in all this that does not flow from the right of domain and sovereignty. Every one is obliged to pay respect to the prohibition, and whoever dares to violate it incurs the penalty decreed to render it effectual.

And Woolsey, an American author, says upon the same point:

They may be obliged to pay a residence tax; may be restricted as to the power of holding land; may have no political rights; may be obliged to give security in suits where the native is not; may be forbidden to enter certain callings; may be subjected to special police regulations without any grounds of complaint that they are oppressive. But most restrictions upon foreigners have disappeared with the advance of human feeling and the increasing frequency of intercourse between nations, until they are in almost all Christian countries, in all rights excepting political, nearly on a level with native-born persons. It is but just that all private rights be accorded to them as to the native-born citizen for collecting debts and redressing injuries.

It is true, as stated in the last part of the quotation, that the customary course in later times has been to admit the alien, resident in another country, to very nearly the full measure of rights as there enjoyed by the native-born citizen or subject, excepting only such as are merely political, but the author clearly and distinctly affirms the precise point as claimed, that aliens may be subjected to conditions and restrictions.

Mr. President, the law of self-preservation and self-defense is as applicable to nations as to individuals. In fact, the highest duty which the sovereign authority owes to its citizens, individually and collectively, is the preservation of the political entity made up of the body of citizens, called the State or nation, not only as to territorial limits, but in the vastly more important functions and powers which shall enable the nation of collected individuals to work out the highest good to each and all the members of which it is composed, saving and protecting them from foreign oppression, warding off, suppressing, and removing as far as possible all foreign influence and relations out of which evil might come, whether such influence come from the acts or customs of a foreign nation, or from the intrusion of aliens whose race differences, habits, moral instincts, or other characteristics render them obnoxious and dangerous to the prosperity, peace, and good order of the people among whom they come.

To what lengths will not a nation go to protect its citizens from contagions and epidemics when their introduction are threatened from foreign ports through the usual channels of commercial intercourse? The exercise of precautionary power to the extent of interrupting all intercourse with infected foreign districts is often resorted to without hesitation or question, and will it be said that there is no power in the State to prevent the introduction of the seeds of discord, strife, and moral death, to come from the migration and settlement of aliens within her territorial limits, whose very touch is pollution, whose presence is a constant menace to the life of the nation, because of the impossibility of their assimilation into the body-politic and because of the settled and unchanging antagonisms of race distinctions and civilization? The power in the one case is the same as in the other, and is derived from the inherent right in every sovereignty to ward off, suppress, and protect its citizens from evil, whether of a physical or political character, whether coming suddenly or by insidious approaches, in the form of pestilence and contagion, or as aliens who seek settlement and residence within its territories, whose presence for any cause tends to weaken or destroy the State or to the oppression of its citizens. Vattel says on this point:

In vain does nature prescribe to nations as well as to individuals the care of self-preservation and of advancing their own perfection and happiness, if she does not give them the right to preserve themselves from everything that might render this care ineffectual; this right is nothing more than a moral power of acting; that is, the power of doing what is morally possible—what is proper and conformable to our duties. We have, then, in general, a right to do whatever is necessary to the discharge of our duties. Every nation as well as every man has, therefore, a right to prevent other nations from obstructing her perfection and happiness; that is, to preserve herself from all injuries. And this right is a perfect one, since it is given to satisfy a national and indispensable obligation; for when we cannot use constraint to cause our rights to be respected, their effects are very uncertain. It is this right to preserve herself from all injury that is called the right of security.

And Wheaton, speaking of this same matter, says:

Every State has certain sovereign rights, to which it is entitled as an independent moral being; in other words, because it is a State. These rights are called absolute international rights of States, because they are not limited to particular circumstances. * * * Of the absolute international rights of States, one of the most essential and important, and that which lies at the foundation of all the rest, is the right of self-preservation. It is not only a right with respect to other States, but a duty with respect to its own members, and the most solemn and important which the State owes to them. This right necessarily involves all other individual rights, which are essential as means to give effect to the principal end.

Could language be used more decisive than this? A right so high, so valuable and important that "necessarily," says Wheaton, it involves all other individual rights which are essential as means to effect the principal end, because all rest upon the one great right of self-preservation.

But, Mr. President, it may be urged that as we have permitted many thousands of these Chinese to come and scatter themselves through several of the States and Territories, and to enter very many of the industrial avocations, now to deprive them of the means of supporting themselves, by declaring it unlawful for them to engage in or pursue them in this country, would be unreasonable if not cruel and inhuman. Waiving for the present the question of having permitted them to come, I admit that they are here and have obtruded themselves into many of the industrial pursuits of the country. What then? Are they to be to us the old man of the sea? Is there no power, human or divine, that can relieve us from this alien people whom we, as it is claimed, have permitted to come among us and who have fastened themselves upon our country and will not depart from us? Are we, Mr. President, to sit quietly and idly down, fold our hands, and let thousands of white men, to the manner born, be deprived of the means of making an honorable and honest support for themselves and families, by the competition of these hordes of China cooly laborers, who, in their own country do well to get from three to six cents a day, and here in this country can and do work at prices so low as to drive our own people out of many lines of labor into which they obtrude themselves, because, forsooth, if we shall pass this or any other measure of relief which would give back to these thousands of deserving American citizens the means of obtaining a living by honest labor, which was their birthright and of which they have been dispoiled by cooly labor, for fear some John might go hungry or even starve? No, Mr. President, a thousand times no. The very statement of such a proposition ought to be its own refutation. If war was to intervene between the United States and China, what, sir, would be the power of this Government over the hundred thousand of Chinese now in the country, rightfully acting through its proper departments? It will not be doubted or questioned that, in such an event, if the interest of the country required it, they might be put under surveillance, arrest, or even expelled the country. And if this emigration had for its purpose the gathering in this country of immense numbers of the subjects of China in time of peace, to be, at some future day organized into an army of occupation, having for its purpose the subjugation of a portion of it, does any one doubt that their expulsion would be at once determined upon, and that, without regard to whether the Johns might get hungry or even suffer in a worse degree? But, sir, there is no prospect of a war with China, and the cooly subjects of that empire do not come with the avowed purpose of constituting an army of occupation in this country, in a military sense. Nevertheless, sir, her hundred thousand able-bodied cooly men now in the Pacific States and Territories are an army of occupation in a more dangerous sense than if they were armed and drilled for military service. They come to seize upon the industrial pursuits and resources of the country, without the parade of arms or military display, by insinuating themselves into all the industrial avocations of the country at wages which effectually displace our own people. Their success, in thus possessing themselves of the control of the labor of the sections where they are the most numerous, is even now in many departments complete, and their final and complete success in every respect in all the departments of industry and labor is but a question of time.

Sir, if by the acts and management of the Chinese government and its subjects, or either, our merchants were being despoiled of their business or commerce and its profits were being transferred to alien hands, and the evil could be reached by legislation or even by the military arm of the Government, how long, sir, would it be before these halls would resound with eloquent appeals for relief, even to the letting "slip the dogs of war?" In such a case there would be no lack of precedent or authority to preserve the life of the nation. And here, let me ask, has this Government of which we are all so justly proud no powers to be exerted, no offices to be performed, except in behalf of the men who sail their ships and grow rich out of the profits of our commerce, while the honest toiler whose labor loads these self-same ships with the product of his industry, is to be left to shift, as best he may against a crushing and demoralizing competition with alien, cooly labor, without relief or aid from the government that claims his allegiance? No sir, and every laboring-man in America will indignantly answer no.

Mr. President, foreigners do not acquire rights by their use, however long-continued such use may be; prescription has no application between nations or in favor of the citizens or subjects of one residing within the territories of another. Upon this point Vattel says:

As, then, every nation has a right to choose whether she will or will not trade with another, and on what conditions she is willing to do it; if one nation for a time permitted another to come and trade in the country, she is at liberty whenever she thinks proper to prohibit that commerce to restrain it, to subject it to certain regulations; and the people who before carried it on cannot complain of injustice.

And again he says:

A simple permission to carry on commerce with a nation gives no perfect right to that commerce. For, if I merely and simply permit you to do anything, I do not give you any right to do it afterward in spite of me; you may make use of my condescension as long as it lasts; but nothing prevents me from changing my will. As, then, every nation has a right to choose whether she will or will not trade with another, and on what conditions she is willing to do it, if one nation has for a time permitted another to come and trade in the country, she is at liberty whenever she thinks proper to prohibit that commerce, to restrain it, to subject it to certain regulations; and the people who before carried it on cannot complain of injustice.

Now, sir, if it be true that this Government may, in the interest of its commerce and for the protection of its merchants, for sufficient reason, prohibit foreign merchants, who have become domiciled in the United States for the purpose of more effectually carrying on their foreign commerce, from continuing a business in which they have been permitted to engage and in which they may have invested their capital, may it not, for like sufficient reason, protect the laborers of the country by prohibiting alien cooly laborers being employed in competition with them? And again, sir, if the foreign merchant engaged in commerce may not complain, if he be prohibited from continuing a business which has proved detrimental to our interests, ought we to be deterred from passing this measure because the coolies may suffer some hardship, when our own people are so vitally interested in securing the relief it will bring them? There can be but one answer to this question, and that is that the same power which may be exerted in behalf of our merchants engaged in commercial matters is full and complete enough to grant protection to any citizen who suffers by the agency of foreign nations or from their subjects within our own territory as much as if they were on the sea.

Mr. President, I come now to the consideration of another question, which I am very well aware must arise in the discussion of this measure, and that is, whether it conflicts with the rights of the subjects of China as fixed by its treaty with the United States. Thus far I have discussed the question apart from any consideration of treaty stipulations for the purpose of establishing, as far as I might be able to, that aside from the treaty there are no reasons why this measure should not become a law so far as the customs and usages of nations are to be relied upon for such reasons. Now, I shall endeavor to show that, so far as the provisions contained in our treaties with China are concerned, they furnish no sufficient reason which ought not to be overcome by the necessity which calls for the passage of this bill, of which necessity I shall speak more particularly hereafter. In order to a complete understanding of our treaty relations, without cumbering the RECORD to too great an extent, a short statement will be necessary.

The first treaty between the United States and China was concluded on the 3d day of July, 1844. This treaty related wholly to concessions granted to the citizens of the United States, to be exercised by them in China, and to the manner of their exercise and the relations thereby created between the citizens of the United States and the subjects of China. By the terms of this treaty the citizens of the United States were to be permitted to visit and carry on commercial ventures at five ports, therein named, in that empire, and at such others as might be, at any time thereafter, opened to foreign commerce by treaty with any other power. They were granted the right to reside with their families at these ports, and to proceed at pleasure with their vessels and merchandise, from any foreign port to any of the five ports named in China, and from any of these five ports to any other of them, or to any foreign port; that they should be privileged to engage pilots to bring their vessels into port and take them out again, to hire at pleasure servants, compradors, linguists, and writers, passage and cargo boats, laborers, seamen, and persons for whatever necessary service they might desire, and they, while residing or sojourning at any of these ports open to foreign commerce, were to enjoy all proper accommodations in obtaining houses for residence and places of business, or sites upon which to construct them, and also places for hospitals, churches, and cemeteries. They, with their vessels and property, were not to be subject to any embargo or seizure, or to be forcibly detained for any pretense of the public service, but were to be permitted to prosecute their commerce in quiet, without molestation or embarrassment. But if they attempted to trade clandestinely with the ports of China not open to foreign commerce, or to trade in opium or other contraband articles, they were subject to be dealt with by the Chinese government without any countenance from the United States.

Provisions were made for the establishment of consulates of the United States at the ports opened to foreign commerce, clothed with the usual powers conferred upon such establishments. Citizens of the United States peacefully attending to their own affairs were to receive and enjoy for themselves and their property the special protection of the Chinese government, which also engaged to defend them from insult or injury, and their dwellings and property from mobs and incendiaries and other lawless persons. Such, sir, in brief, was the extent of the concessions made in this treaty by the Chinese government to the United States and to her citizens; but we look in vain through its provisions for any concessions to the subjects of China by the United States, to be exercised or enjoyed within the territories of the Union. The concessions are all upon the side of China to citizens of the United States visiting, trading, and residing at the ports of China open to foreign commerce.

On the 18th of June, 1858, there was a new treaty concluded between China and the United States, in which all the former concessions made by China were renewed and other and new ones made. The number of ports open to our citizens was increased to eight. Our ministers were to be permitted to visit the Chinese capital and there confer with the privy council; but such visits were restricted to one each year, and he was not to take advantage of trivial occasions to visit the capital, and his suite, exclusive of Chinese servants, was not to exceed twenty persons, none of whom were to be engaged in trade. Merchants, seamen, and others were to be allowed to freely pass and repass in the immediate vicinity or neighborhood of where their ships were allowed to anchor or our citizens to reside, but they were not to be permitted to go into the country or to the villages or marts to sell goods or carry on trade, and religious toleration was conceded to Protestants and Roman Catholics, their professors, teachers, and converts, whether citizens of the United States or subjects of China. In this treaty, as in the former, we find no concessions to China or its subjects to be exercised or enjoyed within the United States, although at that date very many of them had found their way to the Pacific coast, and were there engaged in mining for gold and in other pursuits; but the treaty is wholly oblivious to that fact, and ignores them in every particular. On the 15th of August of the following year, 1859, another treaty was concluded with China, but as it relates only to a tariff to be charged on merchandise entering China I need not notice its terms here.

On the 18th day of June, 1868, additional articles were concluded between the United States and China, commonly known as the Burlingame treaty. For the first time, in this treaty, concessions were made to the subjects of China on the part of the United States, but the United States acquired no new or valuable concessions from China. That portion of this treaty which has any bearing upon the subject I am endeavoring to present is contained in articles 5, 6, and 7, and is as follows:

ARTICLE V.

The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects respectively from one country to the other for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents. The high contracting parties therefore join in reprobating any other than an entirely voluntary emigration for these purposes. They consequently agree to pass laws making it a penal offense for a citizen of the United States or Chinese subjects to take Chinese subjects either to the United States or to any other foreign country, or for a Chinese subject or citizen of the United States to take citizens of the United States to China or to any other foreign country without their free and voluntary consent, respectively.

ARTICLE VI.

Citizens of the United States visiting or residing in China shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, or exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation; and, reciprocally, Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by citizens of the most favored nation. But nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of the United States in China, nor upon subjects of China in the United States.

ARTICLE VII.

Citizens of the United States shall enjoy all the privileges of the public educational institutions under control of the government of China; and, reciprocally, Chinese subjects shall enjoy all the privileges of the public educational institutions under the control of the Government of the United States, which are enjoyed in the respective countries by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nations. The citizens of the United States may freely establish and maintain schools within the Empire of China at those places where foreigners are by treaty permitted to reside; and, reciprocally, the Chinese subjects may enjoy the same privileges and immunities in the United States.

Mr. President, in my judgment articles 5 and 7, though relating to mutual obligations and concessions, do not in any way touch or affect the subject involved in the pending measure or bill; that is, they do not affect or relate to the right, if such right there be, of the subjects of China visiting or residing in the United States to engage in the avocations sought to be prohibited. In the fifth article each of the contracting powers acknowledges the right of man to change his place of residence and also the mutual advantage of the free as against the forced migration and emigration of their citizens, and having made this declaration proceed to enter into reciprocal obligations to pass laws prohibiting other than free and voluntary immigration. There is no concession that the one country shall furnish an asylum and home for the citizens of the other who may come, but that those who do come shall come freely and voluntarily and not through force. And if we look into the history of that time we shall find abundant evidence that it was an effort upon the part of Secretary Seward to check coolies being brought into the United States, and to that end he procured the obligation of the Emperor of China to prohibit other than the voluntary immigration of his subjects, and the enactment of our statute restraining this class of immigration is clearly in support of this view. The seventh article relates to concessions of reciprocal rights in the public schools under the control of the respective powers and has really nothing to do with this question.

The conflict, if any there be, arises out of the provisions of article 6, and out of this clause:

> Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by citizens of the most favored nations.

This, sir, is the clause upon which the question must necessarily turn. And now, sir, it is important to determine, in the first place, what is to be the measure of the rights or "privileges, immunities, and exemptions" of Chinese traveling or residing in the United States. The clause says that they "shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel and residence as may there be enjoyed by citizens of the most favored nations." Are these rights to be determined by reference to the treaties of this with foreign countries alone, or may they claim to enjoy any and all privileges which are enjoyed by the citizens of most foreign nations who come among us by our sufferance, or, in other words, because we have not forbidden them; such privileges, for instance, as to fish, hunt, labor, work our mines, enter into the industrial avocations, many of the professions, and to contract marriage with our people? These are not ordinarily subjects of treaty stipulations.

It can be readily understood that if we find a stipulation in any one of our treaties with foreign nations conceding the right to travel at pleasure through all parts of the country to foreign citizens, then and in that case such a stipulation would inure to the benefit of the Chinese, or if it was stipulated that foreign citizens might reside wherever they desired throughout the country, this would also in that respect enable the Chinese to reside anywhere they liked, for in the one case it would be "in respect to travel," and in the other "in respect to residence," and it must be remembered that the concession is coupled with the restriction that the privileges, immunities, and exemptions shall be such as may there be enjoyed by the citizens of the most favored nation, and be always "in respect to travel and residence."

Is the privilege of taking gold from our mines, whether granted by treaty stipulation or enjoyed by sufferance, a privilege in respect to residence? Is the right of a foreigner to contract marriage in the United States a privilege having respect to residence? Is the right to work at carpentry, in a manufacturing establishment, as a cook, a servant, or in any other capacity, a privilege "in respect to residence?" If it be claimed that the right to enter all or any of the industrial pursuits of the country is to be considered as a privilege pertaining to, or "in respect to residence," then, sir, I ask, what purpose do the restrictive words in the treaty serve? Why should it not have been put thus: "Chinese subjects visiting and residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may there be enjoyed by the citizens of the most favored nation?" This form, the words of restriction being left out, would have entitled the Chinese to just what rights or privileges could be shown were granted to other foreign nations, but as it stands they are not, for it must not only have been granted, but must be in respect to travel or residence.

Sir, an examination of our treaties with foreign nations will show, I am quite sure, that none of the industrial avocations are ever referred to as in any way relating to residence. We have many instances in our commercial treaties where the right to come with ships and merchandise to our ports is granted. There is but little difference in the wording of them, all being formed, so far as the language is concerned, after one general model, and in all of them the right of residence is drawn to the right to trade, and the calling is not drawn to residence as a privilege depending upon residence or as a consequence of residence. An example may be found in the first article of our treaty with Russia, as follows:

> There shall be between the territories of the high contracting parties liberty of commerce and navigation. The inhabitants of the respective states shall mutually have liberty to enter the ports, places, and rivers of the territories of each party wherever foreign commerce is permitted. They shall be at liberty to sojourn and reside in all ports whatsoever of said territories in order to attend to their affairs; and they shall enjoy, to that effect, the same security and protection as natives of the country wherein they reside, on condition of their submitting to the laws and ordinances there prevailing, and particularly to the regulations in force concerning commerce.

We have treaties in which it is reciprocally conceded that the citizens or subjects of each shall enjoy, in the territories of the other, all the "privileges, immunities, and exemptions of the most favored nation, in respect to commerce and navigation;" but the treaty with China is, I believe, the only one we have in which its peculiar phraseology is used. And, so far as I have been able to learn, no decisions have been made in the courts upon like terms from which light can be drawn. But, sir, it is a recognized rule that in construing treaties some respect is to be paid to the equality or inequality of rights and benefits to be derived by the contracting parties under different constructions in case of doubt. Now, sir, by this treaty the citizens of the United States are permitted to reside at eight ports only of China. The Chinese get an unlimited privilege of residing in any part of the United States; and it must be remembered that the citizens of the United States are not permitted to travel beyond the limits of the cities open to foreign commerce in China, but Chinese are permitted to go everywhere in the United States.

Under the provisions of this bill the Chinese will be restricted to trade and commerce, but may resort to any port or city of the United States. Our citizens are not permitted to enter into the industrial pursuits of their country, certainly not by the terms of the treaty, and why should we put an interpretation upon the treaty that shall give the Chinese that right in the United States, which can only be done by enlarging the import of the express words of the treaty by implication? Upon this point I quote from Vattel, as follows:

> Everything that tends to the common advantage in conventions or that has a tendency to place the contracting parties on a footing of equality is favorable. The voice of equity and the general rule of contracts require that the conditions between the two parties should be equal. We are not to presume without very strong reason that one of the contracting parties intended to favor the other to his own prejudice; but there is no danger in extending what is for the common advantage. * * * For the same reason everything that is not for the common advantage, everything that tends to destroy the equality of a contract, everything that onerates only one of the parties, or that onerates the one more than the other, is odious.

And again:

> The party who endeavors to avoid a loss has a better cause to support than he who aims at obtaining an advantage.

And Woolsey says:

> If two meanings are admissible, that is to be preferred which is least for the advantage of the party for whose benefit a clause is inserted. For in securing a benefit he ought to express himself clearly.

From these considerations, Mr. President, I conclude that the terms of this treaty do not entitle, and are not to be construed by any rule as entitling, the Chinese to enter the avocations from which it is proposed to exclude them. They certainly are not included in the direct terms of the treaty, and no rightful or proper construction can draw them within its purview. To do so, there must be an unwarranted enlargement of the terms by implication, contrary to every rule of interpretation applicable to the construction of treaties, as I understand those rules and their application. Then, sir, if there be no reason based upon the law of nations against the passage of this measure and no provision in our treaty which conflicts with it, the remaining question is one which relates to the necessity of the measure.

Mr. President, it will doubtless be urged, as it was on a former occasion, by those who oppose restrictive measures against Chinese immigration, that there is no need of such measures, that these people do not come to permanently remain in this country, that of late years they have not come in such numbers as formerly, and are constantly returning. But, sir, the facts do not bear out the statement, at least it falls very far short of the true state of the case. It is true, sir, that of late the arrivals have not been so numerous as in some previous years, but there are causes which make this exceptional. It is also true that there are some constantly returning; that, of course, will always be the case, but those returning make no diminution of the numbers in the country, as the influx is always greater than the returning tide. The statistics of emigration from 1851 to 1860 show that 41,379 Chinese arrived in the United States; that from 1861 to 1870 the arrivals of Chinese were 68,059, an increase of more than 40 per cent. over the preceding decade; that from 1871 to 1878, a period of eight years, the arrivals were 106,336, an actual increase of 68 per cent. in eight years as compared with the ten preceding years and at the rate of 85 per cent. for the decade.

It is true that in the last two years, 1877 and 1878, there was a large falling off in the arrivals; but that was wholly owing to the fact of serious opposition which assumed a threatening aspect in those years. It was the same in 1871 before the Burlingame treaty had the effect to reassure China against the opposition which through Staté laws had made it very uncomfortable for John in both California and Oregon. But these statistics, startling though they be, do not reveal all the facts which give significance to the coming of these hordes from the sinks and slums of China. From the very commencement of this emigration it has been in the face of a most persistent and bitter opposition exhibited against the Chinese on the part of the people of the Pacific States and Territories, which was made effective under the operation of statutes imposing severe and onerous taxes prior to 1869, when the Burlingame treaty was ratified, and since then this opposition has been intensified in every conceivable way.

This tide of emigration substantially began in 1851, when the arrivals were 2,716, which was swelled to 18,434 the next year, which produced great excitement and opposition, causing it to drop to 4,316 the following year, 1853; but it rose again to 15,063 in 1854. From that time until after the concluding of the Burlingame treaty the resistance met with kept it between 3,212, the lowest, in 1855, and 7,620, the highest point, reached in 1860—in several of those years the return tide equaling the arrivals. The effect of the treaty which was concluded in 1868 and ratified in 1869 was to excite anew the tide of emigration, reaching 10,642 in 1872 and 19,033 in 1875, when, owing to the threatening character of the opposition, it again declined. But now, sir, since the veto of the bill passed by the last Congress, limiting this emigration, a marked increase is reported by the press to have already set in.

And here let me say, this treaty was entered into in the face of the statutes of the States of California and Oregon, and in the face of the provisions of the constitution of Oregon, which are as follows:

Whites who are or may hereafter become residents of this State, shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and descent of property as native-born citizens, and the Legislative Assembly shall have power to restrain and regulate the immigration to this State of persons not qualified to become citizens of the United States.

No Chinaman not a resident of the State at the adoption of this constitution shall ever hold any real estate or mining claim, or work any mining claim therein.

All these fell before this treaty and the interpretation placed on it. But your treaty was powerless to control or suppress public sentiment against the Chinese, and year after year, as the evils resulting from the coming of these hordes of cooly laborers have become more and more felt and seen, the higher has risen popular resentment and opposition, threatening at times to break out in uncontrolled fury. This antipathy and opposition is not confined to one party or to any particular class of society, but it pervades all parties and permeates all classes of society. It is not merely the outcry of the rabble, hoodlums, or communistic elements, as some suppose, but the well-considered and thoughtful opposition of the best and the most intelligent representative men and women of that whole section. As an illustration of this fact I have here the address of the Portland Board of Trade to the President of the United States. This organization is composed of gentlemen of the highest social standing and character in that city and State—men of wealth, engaged in commercial pursuits, merchants, brokers, bankers, and other avocations of equal importance—just the class of men one would seek to learn of, in respect to a matter affecting the general interests of the community in which they live, and whose statements and opinions are always entitled to weight. This address is as follows:

To the President of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Portland Board of Trade, would respectfully represent that the people of this State have for a number of years greatly suffered by the unlimited and unrestricted immigration of Chinese; that the Chinese who have thus come into our State cannot be classed as immigrants in the meaning of the term generally accepted by the people of the United States, as the great majority do not come of their own free will and accord, but are brought in hordes, and in a condition of at least semi-slavery, being obliged to perform a term of servitude to the companies or masters who bring them; that they seriously interfere with all free labor, as they are able to exist upon a pittance that does not suffice for the merest support of a white laborer and his family; that their crimes and pauperism are a continual source of expense to the State; that they do not in any manner add to the wealth or prosperity of this State by the acquisition of real property, the payment of taxes, or the development of any of its resources; that every dollar they earn that is not absolutely necessary for their support is sent out of the country; and that they have introduced diseases and crimes in our midst entirely unknown prior to their advent.

That while we deprecate and censure any and all forms of violence toward the Chinese or any other class of people brought or immigrating to this country, your memorialists would assure you that the feeling against and opposition to the Chinese are not entertained, as seems to be the prevailing opinion in the Eastern States, by the so-called hoodlum element only, but is held by all classes of our population.

For these and various other reasons your memorialists would respectfully urge upon your Excellency and the Senate of the United States that the interests of this State, as well as all the other States and Territories on this coast, imperatively demand that the now existing treaties with China be so modified and revised as to restrict and decrease the landing upon our shores of these people, and would earnestly ask that steps be at once inaugurated to accomplish that end.

We would also respectfully call your attention to and ask your favorable consideration of the memorial upon this subject adopted by the Legislature of this State at its last session.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Mr. President, this opposition to the Chinese has been recently crystallized in California in her new constitution in a form at once decisive and emphatic, exhibiting the full and set determination of that Commonwealth to suppress this tide of cooly immigration, and also to rid its people of the evils which arise from the oppressive and exasperating pressure of those already within the State. Article 19 of the new constitution of California is as follows:

ARTICLE XIX.

CHINESE.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall prescribe all necessary regulations for the protection of the State and the counties, cities, and towns thereof from the burdens and evils arising from the presence of aliens who are or may become vagrants, paupers, mendicants, criminals, or invalids afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases, and from aliens otherwise dangerous or detrimental to the well-being or peace of the State, and to impose conditions upon which such persons may reside in the State, and to provide the means and mode of their removal from the State upon failure or refusal to comply with such conditions: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed to impair or limit the power of the Legislature to pass such police laws or other regulations as it may deem necessary.

SEC. 2. No corporation now existing or hereafter formed under the laws of this State shall, after the adoption of this constitution, employ, directly or indirectly, in any capacity, any Chinese or Mongolian. The Legislature shall pass such laws as may be necessary to enforce this provision.

SEC. 3. No Chinese shall be employed on any State, county, municipal, or other public work, except in punishment for crime.

SEC. 4. The presence of foreigners ineligible to become citizens of the United States is declared to be dangerous to the well-being of the State, and the Legislature shall discourage their immigration by all the means within its power. Asiatic coolyism is a form of human slavery, and is forever prohibited in this State, and all contracts for cooly labor shall be void. All companies or corporations, whether formed in this country or any foreign country, for the importation of such labor, shall be subject to such penalties as the Legislature may prescribe. The Legislature shall delegate all necessary power to the incorporated cities and towns of this State for the removal of Chinese without the limits of such cities and towns, or for their location within prescribed portions of those limits, and it shall also provide the necessary legislation to prohibit the introduction into this State of Chinese after the adoption of this constitution. This section shall be enforced by appropriate legislation.

It will be seen, Mr. President, from these facts that this sentiment of opposition and antagonism is steadily increasing, that time serves only to intensify and crystallize it, and that the current is sweeping on with resistless tide to more serious complications. And, sir, it must continue so, for it is a conflict between different races, between different and antagonistic civilizations, and is as irrepressible as that other conflict which has caused so much trouble and disaster in this country. Let Senators not deceive themselves in regard to the nature, character, or magnitude of this question. The history of cooly immigration into the United States for the past twenty-eight years most clearly shows that they are not only anxious to come, but are set on coming. Within that time more than two hundred thousand have come, and to-day there are not less than one hundred thousand in the United States, probably very many more, and the tide is constantly swelling in a constantly accelerated ratio, and that, too, in the face of and in opposition to the determined efforts of the people of the Pacific States and Territories to check and restrain it. These facts, and the further fact that they are now coming by every ship that comes to our coast from the open ports of China, in spite of the opposition which they meet, and which is becoming more and more threatening, demonstrates that they are set upon coming. The necessities of an overcrowded population are impelling the Chinese to seek in other climes that sustenance which is so difficult to procure in their own.

It is true, sir, that in past centuries China has been averse to the emigration of her people, but in the light of the events occurring since the opening of the present century, and particularly within the last thirty years, it is not prudent to rely upon the indisposition of her government or her people to seek settlement in foreign lands. Why, sir, she has inundated Cochin China, Anam, Siam, and threatens the Empire of Japan—has invaded Australia, the Sandwich Islands, and Polynesia. Sir John Browning, in his work on The Kingdom and People of Siam, published in 1857, says:

The extraordinary diffusion of the Chinese over all the regions from the most western of the islands of the Indian Archipelago, in the straits settlements, in Siam and Cochin China, and now extending over a considerable portion of Western America, particularly California, and reaching even Australia and Polynesia, is one of the most remarkable of the events of modern history, and is likely to exercise a great influence on the future condition of man; for the Chinese do not migrate to mingle with and be absorbed among other tribes and people; they preserve their own language, their own nationality, their own customs and religious usages, their own traditions, habits and social organization. * * * It is estimated that in the Kingdom of Siam there are more than a million and a half of Chinese settlers; in the city of Bangkok alone there are supposed to be two hundred thousand. In fact all the active business appears to be in their hands.

Mr. President, the evidence is constantly accumulating that they are pressing into every country where they can find a lodgment, even in the face of opposition from the people among whom they thrust themselves. And it is not strange that they are so pressing into other countries, and particularly into the Pacific States and Territories, when it is remembered that even the lowest wages the commonest laborer gets in this country would be a munificent income in China. No, Mr. President, they are eager to come, and to come in much greater numbers than heretofore, whenever all restraining influences shall be removed. If there were no restraint in the shape of a threatening adverse public opinion to their emigration, our shores would be darkened as it were with their coming. The hundred thousand now here is but the vanguard of a million, or ten millions, or may be one hundred millions behind, who want to come and will come, if the most stringent and effective legislation is not had prohibiting them from coming, or annexing such conditions to their coming or staying as will most effectually shut them out from all industrial pursuits of every class and description when here. And this, sir, is precisely what is proposed in the pending bill.

It will doubtless be urged that the provisions of this bill are unusual and harsh. It is true, sir, that in the history of this country no such measure, so far as I am informed, has ever been proposed. We have thrown the doors wide open to the world and invited emigrants from every land to partake of our hospitality. And so long as the emigrants coming to us possessed like characteristics with our people and readily conformed to our institutions, our customs and habits, and possessed the capability and will to become a part of our people, yielding a ready assent and obedience to our laws, no objection was ever made, and none is now made to that class of emigration. But now, our people carrying their institutions and civilization with them, have crossed the continent and find themselves confronting the oldest nation and the oldest civilization of the world. The antagonism of race and civilization forbids any blending of these people of the two nations, and when brought in contact and competition in the race of life, irritation and discontent is the result.

While, then, it is true that no such measure as this has ever been offered in Congress before, it is also true that no like state or condition has ever before existed calling for the exercise of like legislative power. If, then, this measure is unusual, the occasion which demands it is equally exceptional; and whatever of harshness to the Chinese there may be in the proposed legislation, it is inseparable from the condition and the evils proposed to be provided against. The Chinese are here in great numbers. Thousands of deserving white people have been, and now are, deprived of the means of earning an honest livelihood by being driven out of employment by these hordes of Mongolians. What kind of humanity is it that turns a deaf ear to the appeals of our own race for succor and protection from this curse of Asiatic competitors in our labor markets, which is pressing so many of our own people down in the scale of human society to a condition worse than slavery or Russian serfdom, but is ever ready to lend a willing ear to appeals in behalf of these instruments of oppression who are alien to our shores and between whom and our people there is an impassable gulf of race distinction, to say nothing of the vices of their peculiar civilization which they seek to set up in antagonism to our own?

No, Mr. President, the proposed measure is not unnecessarily harsh or proscriptive, it does not go further than the necessity requires it should go; for let me assure Senators that any measure which does not make it unlawful for the Chinese to enter the industrial avocations and the labor markets in competition with our own people, or prohibit their emigrating to this country, will be of no service to our people, and even the prohibition of further immigration would bring no relief against the disastrous influence of the many thousands already here.

Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate longer in the discussion of this measure, but earnestly asking for it that consideration which its importance demands I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GROOME in the chair.) If there be no objection, the bill will be so referred. It is so referred.

INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS AND MANUAL.

Mr. WHYTE. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2267) providing for the binding of the internal-revenue laws and manual, instruct me to report it back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass. I ask for the immediate consideration of it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Public Printer to bind in cloth 3,000 copies of the compilation of the internal-revenue laws and 3,500 copies of the internal-revenue manual for the use of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

SPECIAL IMPROVEMENT ASSESSMENTS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1379, and I desire to say——

Mr. INGALLS. What is the title of the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. It is a bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes.

I desire to say in connection with my motion that if the Senate shall consent now to proceed to the consideration of the bill I will at any moment, if it shall take up any time, (I do not think it will beyond half an hour or three-quarters of an hour,) on the demand of the Committee on Appropriations consent that it be informally laid aside in order that that committee shall have whatever time it needs for the consideration of any one of its bills.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I gave notice this morning that after the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Oregon I would call up what is known as the letter-carriers bill, a House bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations. I shall give way, though, to the Senator from Tennessee for a reasonable time with the distinct understanding that if his bill should extend to any considerable length of time I shall ask that the appropriation bill be taken up.

Mr. HARRIS. I will say that on the demand of the Senator from West Virginia I will at any time consent that it may be informally laid aside, but it is important in my judgment that the bill should be acted on.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 5 of section 1, after the word "which," to strike out the word "they;" so as to read:

That the rate of interest to be collected of any person owing arrearages of general taxes or assessments for special improvements now due to, and the liens for which are held by, the District of Columbia, shall be 6 per cent. per annum, in lieu of the rate and penalties now fixed by law: Provided, This provision shall apply only to taxes and assessments paid on or before the 1st day of October, 1879.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2 of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 2. Where property has been sold under tax sales and bought in by any other party than the District of Columbia, or where any third person has acquired tax-lien certificates or special-assessment certificates, the parties owning the property thus sold, or on which such certificates may have been acquired, may tender to the purchaser or holder of said certificates, on or before the 1st day of October, 1879, the amount due and 6 per cent. interest, which, when received, shall be in full of principal, interest, and penalties attached thereto by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [3] 2, after the word "assessments," in line 15, to strike out the words "for which no special assessment certificates have been issued, and which are not pledged for any existing obligation;" so as to make the section read:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed, upon written complaint being made to them, within sixty days from the passage of this act, by any person or persons who had prior to June 19, 1878, paid their special improvement taxes, prepared under an act of the Legislative Assembly of said District of August 10, 1871, that their said assessment or assessments were erroneous or excessive, to revise and correct such assessment so complained of; and in case the amount of any such assessment is found to be erroneous or excessive, the commissioners shall issue to the person entitled to the same a drawback certificate for the amount of such excessive or erroneous charge, which certificate shall be received in payment of all special assessments and for all general taxes due before the 1st day of July, 1877: Provided, That complaints filed under the act of June 19, 1878, (paid or unpaid,) by a property-holder, his agent or attorney, need not be refiled under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Those are all the amendments of the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee, before we adopt the bill it might be well for him, at least in general terms, to tell us what ground it covers. I do not know, and I presume other Senators do not.

Mr. HARRIS. As the Senator will see by looking at the bill, the first section provides that any person owing general or special taxes, where the liens for the same are not held by third persons, may discharge the same by paying the amount of such taxes with 6 per cent. interest thereon, if the payment is made on or before the 1st day of October next. As a matter of fact there is a large amount of taxes, general and special, due the District of Columbia, that have been due for many years, and there is a large amount of accrued interest, the rate of interest being 10 per cent. under the law as it now stands. It is believed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia that if this favor is extended the tax-payer, to relieve him from the excessive rate of interest, to relieve him from penalty and enable him to pay the amount of the taxes with 6 per cent. interest thereon, it will enable many persons to pay who are wholly unable to pay now the large amount that the existing rate of interest and penalty have reached. It will benefit the tax-payer to that extent, and benefit the revenues of the District by enabling the commissioners to make collections that they could not make otherwise.

The second section of the bill as it now stands amended—it was the third section in the bill as it came from the House—provides for the revision of any special assessments which have been heretofore paid where the party paying the same feels that the assessments were excessive or erroneous. Upon the written application of such person it is made the duty of the commissioners to revise that assessment, and where the assessment made is found to have been erroneous, where the assessing power had no right to make it, or where the party had the power to make it and the assessment was excessive, in either of these cases it is made the duty of the commissioners of the District of Columbia to revise that assessment, and, where found erroneous or excessive, to issue to the parties so assessed a drawback certificate for the amount of such error.

These are the two operative sections in the bill. The other section in the bill simply provides for the advertising for the sale of property in arrears, to conform to the provisions made in the two former sections. The second section as it came from the House, which is stricken out upon the recommendation of the committee, was stricken out because of the fact that if it was intended to require the holder of tax-lien certificates, or the purchaser of property at tax sales, to receive the amount of taxes and 6 per cent. thereon it was what, in the opinion of the committee, Congress had no power to do; if it was intended simply to pass an act of Congress to authorize two persons interested in a business transaction to compromise the matter between themselves, the committee thought it was not necessary to pass an act of Congress for any such purpose, as all persons have at all times and under all circumstances enjoyed the right to do that by contract or agreement whenever they saw fit so to do.

While the bill, in the opinion of the committee, does not go as far as the committee thinks it is necessary to go in dealing with many of the questions growing out of the assessments for taxes in the District of Columbia, it was quite as far as the committee felt authorized to go within the short time they have had for the investigation of the general question. Being right in itself the committee hope that the bill may be passed so that the parties benefited by it may avail themselves of the benefits that it offers, with the hope that at the coming session of Congress the committee may be able to take up the general subject, investigate it thoroughly, and report such measure as may do full justice to all parties in the District of Columbia in reference to the various complications and wrongs that have grown out of general and special assessments in the District of Columbia during the last five, six, or seven years.

Mr. CONKLING. The statement of the Senator from Tennessee certainly does not invite opposition to this bill. On the contrary those who listened to it will be compelled, I think, to agree with him that it is right as far as it goes. I venture, however, not in criticism of anything the Senator says, nor in criticism of the bill, which I must confess I have not even read, to make a suggestion.

The Senator thinks, and I agree with him, that it is right to allow those who have paid excessive taxes to have a proceeding and a mode providing for the return to them of the excess they have paid. The argument which proves that will certainly prove, as I know the Senator from Tennessee thinks because of a previous observation of his, that other persons who have paid excessive assessments, who paid them at an earlier day than those referred to in the pending bill, who received long ago a certificate that they had paid excessive assessments and that they were entitled of their own money to receive back a definite sum, are in point of equitable priority entitled to even more consideration than these, justly treated, no doubt, according to the Senator's statement, in the pending bill.

Therefore I venture once more (I say "once more" because this was the topic of one previous reference, I think) to express the hope that persons who have been reported, who stand tabulated in the official statements made to the Senate, one of which was produced the other day by a neighboring Senator and I read from it to the Senate, as having long ago paid excessive assessments, that fact having been certified, the exact amount which they were entitled to receive having been ascertained, and a certification having been furnished to them, upon which certificate they have not been permitted to receive anything, either of principal or interest, which certificate they have not even been permitted to use to liquidate taxes upon the ground of offset, will some time or other, and that before long, be permitted in some form to receive back not the public money but their own money which they paid and which has all this time belonged to them. If you can put any case of a creditor speaking aloud of equity and of right, I humbly conceive that is the case; and the honorable Senator from Tennessee signified on a previous occasion that he quite agreed with me.

Mr. HARRIS. I do quite agree with the Senator in that expression, and at the earliest day possible, I take pleasure in saying to the Senator, I shall devote my energies and my best efforts to dealing with the question with a hope of arriving at something like justice to that and other classes who have suffered by reason of various complications and irregularities.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to a point in what is the second section of the bill as it is now altered. This section provides that upon the complaint of any party who has paid his special assessment prior to June 19, 1878, he shall have a remedy by authorizing a settlement or adjustment of the case and the issue of certificates. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee why that limitation is confined to those who have paid their special assessment, under the act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of 1871, prior to June 19, 1878. It is all very proper if the assessment is erroneous to issue the certificates to correct the error; but suppose the assessment is erroneous and the party did not pay it previous to the 19th of June, 1878, ought not that also to be corrected just as well?

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me I will call his attention to the act of June 19, 1878, which provides that the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall proceed to enforce collection under the general laws as they stand, with the following proviso:

Provided, That upon complaint being made to the commissioners, within thirty days from the passage of this act, of erroneous or excessive charges in respect to any of said assessments which remain unpaid, said commissioners are hereby authorized to revise such assessments so complained of, and to correct the same; and where certificates of assessment have been issued, they shall issue to the holder of such certificate a drawback certificate for the amount of such erroneous or excessive charges.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the honorable Senator state to the Senate what taxes and special assessments are included in the act of the Legislative Assembly of August 10, 1871, to which this bill now refers?

Mr. HARRIS. I will state briefly to the Senator, and I suppose satisfactorily——

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not want to delay action on the bill at all.

Mr. HARRIS. There was organized under an act of Congress and an act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia in 1871 what was known as the board of public works, with discretionary powers to improve the streets and highways and alleys of this city and authority to assess the private property benefited by any street improvement. The private property on either side of the street was assessed to the extent of one-sixth of the cost of such improvement. In the exercise of that power the board of public works proceeded to make very extensive and extremely expensive works of improvement. They proceeded to assess all the property upon the street without very much regard to whether the property was improved or injured by the work, and without very much regard to actual value in the assessment. In other words, in very many instances where they had a perfect right to assess, their assessments were excessive, possibly 50 or 100 per cent. higher than they ought to have been. In some instances assessments were made which it is believed were wholly unauthorized by any act of Congress or any act of the Legislative Assembly. Very many of these assessments are still outstanding and unpaid. This bill is intended to facilitate the settlement of those long-standing unsettled accounts.

Mr. HOUSTON. The thirty days allowed in the act of 1878, to which the Senator has referred, seems to me to need correction and elongation, as well as a similar limitation in the bill now proposed. A property-owner who may not live in the city would not know probably what the assessment was until after the expiration of thirty days; and the relief that will be obtained by those who are upon the spot and who learned the fact of the assessment in time to file their application within thirty days should be extended to them.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, the thirty-day limitation applies to the filing of the complaint.

Mr. HOUSTON. I know that.

Mr. HARRIS. Allow me to state to the honorable Senator that I am informed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia that at the end of thirty days almost the entire amount of these unpaid assessments were filed formerly. Hence that limitation of thirty days need not be extended. The applications are on file in almost every case in which the payment will be made, if not in all cases, so that the commissioners will meet and determine who have suffered under the malpractice of the board of public works.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not understand the Senator now as saying that relief will be given in a case where the party had not filed his complaint within thirty days, and the word "almost" as used by the Senator indicates that there are some such cases still out. If there are, the limitation should be extended so as to include them.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not prepared to state that every individual against whom special assessments were made has filed his complaint; but it is believed that almost the entire body of them, if not every one, has so filed his application. I have already stated that the general subject is one that the Committee on the District of Columbia propose to take up and thoroughly review at the beginning of the next session of Congress, because there are kindred subjects that are not revised and will require revision. I promise the Senator from Alabama that in December next, provision will be made to meet all the cases that require correction; but for the present it is believed that there is no account that is not amply provided for by the legislation of June, 1878, and the present bill that is pending.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I wish to move to take up a bill for consideration.

Mr. WHYTE. I have moved to go into executive session.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I desire to have action on a small bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have a word to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion for an executive session has preference.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I gave way to the Senator from Tennessee for the purpose of taking up the bill that has just passed. It is well known to the Senate that the appropriation bill is the regular order.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Have you an appropriation bill ready?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly, ready now.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Are you going to insist on it?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Then you will not give way to me?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ought not to have given way to the Senator from Tennessee. I would do anything for the Senator he asks at a proper time; but this is an appropriation bill, and I must insist on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland, under the circumstances, insist on his motion?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have a private bill here which I have tried to get up at various times during this session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland insist on his motion?

Mr. WHYTE. I will only withhold the motion for the purpose of taking up an appropriation bill. If the Senator from West Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, holds the floor and insists upon his appropriation bill, I will give way, but I will not give way for other bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia insist on taking up the appropriation bill?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I have a little bill that I do not think will take many minutes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The appropriation bill of course ought to be passed. I am perfectly willing to submit the question of an executive session to the Senate, but I cannot give way to other bills. My committee has directed me to call this bill up. If the Senate desires to go into executive session, I will not antagonize the motion, and therefore I will give way to test the sense of the Senate, but I wish the appropriation bill to be considered to-day.

Mr. WHYTE. As I understand, the bill that the Senator from West Virginia has in charge is not a regular appropriation bill, but only a bill in regard to letter-carriers or some other employés of the Government.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will state to the Senator that it embraces half a dozen items on different matters.

Mr. WHYTE. But it is not one of the general appropriation bills?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is not one of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. WHYTE. It is a special appropriation bill. I therefore insist on my motion to go into executive session.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 18.

Mr. GARLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Ferry,	Platt,
Anthony,	Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Randolph,
Blair,	Chandler,	Logan,	Saunders,
Booth,	Conkling,	McMillan,	Wallace,
Bruce,	Davis of Illinois,	Morrill,	Whyte,
Burnside,	Eaton,	Pendleton,	Windom.

NAYS—25.

Bayard,	Hampton,	Kernan,	Vance,
Beck,	Harris,	Maxey,	Vest,
Call,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hill of Georgia,	Ransom,	Walker.
Davis of W. Va.,	Houston,	Rollins,
Garland,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Groome,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,

ABSENT—27.

Bailey,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Blaine,	Gordon,	Kellogg,	Sharon,
Butler,	Grover,	Kirkwood,	Teller,
Carpenter,	Hamlin,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Cockrell,	Hill of Colorado,	McDonald,	Williams,
Dawes,	Hoar,	McPherson,	Withers.
Edmunds,	Johnston,	Paddock

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That it is impossible for me to consent to. There is an appropriation bill ready to be acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It looks queer if we should adjourn with an appropriation bill right here ready to be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that it is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 11, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Anthony,	Chandler,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Cameron of Pa.,	Conkling,	Logan,	Windom.
Cameron of Wis.,	Davis of Illinois,	Paddock,

NAYS—40.

Allison,	Ferry,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Bayard,	Gordon,	Kernan,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Groome,	McMillan,	Saunders,
Blair,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Slater,
Booth,	Harris,	Maxey,	Vance,
Burnside,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Vest,
Call,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Walker,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Randolph,	Wallace,
Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,	Whyte.

ABSENT—25.

Bailey,	Edmunds,	Johnston,	Teller,
Blaine,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Thurman,
Bruce,	Gordon,	Kirkwood,	Williams,
Butler,	Grover,	Lamar,	Withers.
Carpenter,	Hamlin,	McDonald,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Dawes,	Houston,	Sharon,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think there is important executive business that we should transact. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, there is an appropriation bill ready.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I know it is not debatable, but this is a strange proceeding indeed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was not agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS, ETC.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2002, which is an appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest that we act upon the amendments as they are reached in the reading of the bill. It will save time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection that course will be pursued.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 13, to strike out "$415,000" and insert "$400,000;" so as to read:

For payment to letter-carriers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and to extend the service of such carriers for said year, under the provisions of the act approved February 21, 1879, entitled "An act to fix the pay of letter-carriers," in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated, $400,000.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill explain this amendment and state what the effect of it is, whether it is to reduce the salaries of the letter-carriers.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I thought it hardly worth while to make an explanation of the bill unless some Senator should request it. The Senator from Nebraska has made that request in regard to this amendment, and I will make a short explanation of it. This item, as it came from the House, is intended to carry out the provisions of the act of February last, which increased the salaries of letter-carriers. No adjustment up to the present time has been made by the Department, so that this is the first appropriation to carry out the law of the 21st of February. No adjustment has taken place in the Department, and the current fiscal year is nearly ended, so that the appropriation is made for the next fiscal year.

The estimate of the Department for the maximum increase of salaries for the coming year was $437,050, and the minimum $377,450. What is meant by the maximum and minimum, as stated by the Post-Office Department, is that the law of February last left it discretionary whether there should be one-half or two-thirds advanced to the increased salary. It should not be less than one-half nor more than two-thirds; so that if two-thirds of the letter-carriers' salaries are advanced it will be $437,000 in round numbers for the coming year, and if but one-half the salaries shall be advanced it will be $377,000. The committee thought, and it was suggested, too, by a letter from the Department, that $400,000 would probably be sufficient to cover the wants of the Department in this respect for the coming year. Therefore the sum was fixed at $400,000 instead of $415,000, as was provided in the bill as it came from the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out from line 14 to line 17, inclusive, in the following words:

For payment of increased salary to letter-carriers, under the provisions of existing law, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, $71,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 17, to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to adjust and settle the claims of the several States under the act of Congress approved September 28, 1850, and the act supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof, for swamp lands, including all claims for swamp-land indemnity under the acts of March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, and other acts, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 25, to insert:

For payment of judgments of the Court of Claims, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COKE. If it is in order, I should like to offer an amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the Senator from Texas to wait until the amendments of the committee are finished, and then offer his amendment.

Mr. COKE. Very well.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 28, to insert:

For salary of the additional associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, appointed under the act of Congress approved February 25, 1879, from the date of his appointment to and including June 30, 1879, $1,122.22, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the paragraph relating to Reform School, in section 3 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by inserting, after the word "improvements," in said paragraph the words, "and support of boys sent to said school."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This concludes the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest now to the Senator from Texas that the amendment he wishes to offer would be in order.

Mr. CONKLING. Before we leave the committee amendments may I ask a question of the chairman? Does the bill as it stands now make provision for the increased pay of the letter-carriers?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will explain that it makes an appropriation for the coming fiscal year, but not for the present fiscal year, as no adjustment up to the present time has taken place. The appropriation of $400,000 is for the next fiscal year, which the Postmaster-General thinks will cover the full amount that will be required.

Mr. CONKLING. For the next year?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. For the coming year.

Mr. CONKLING. What becomes of the same measure of compensation for the fiscal year about to expire?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The act, as the Senator probably knows, was passed in February last, and no appropriation being made at the time no adjustment has taken place since the passage of the act. There has been no classification of the letter-carriers, and for that reason the committee thought it best to make no appropriation for the current year.

Mr. CONKLING. Then, if I understand the Senator aright, it is owing to the action or non-action of the Post-Office Department that the letter-carriers have not been able to avail themselves of the act passed in February last?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is nearly so, with this exception, that the act did not contain an appropriation at the time. The Postmaster-General in a communication to the committee stated that he had made no classification from the fact that he had no money to pay the letter-carriers the increased salary under that act.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not inquire the reason, if the Senator will pardon me, and I will give my reason for asking the question. I received a great number of communications, I received a letter only yesterday signed I think by some thirty or forty persons, seeking my attention urgently to this matter,—persons who believe that the letter-carriers perform very hard service and under recent legislation have received inadequate and reduced pay; and they advised me and begged me to exert myself to have this injustice corrected. If the injustice, provided it be an injustice, has resulted from the omission of the two Houses of Congress in legislation, I should like to know that, and I should like to accept my share of blame. If, on the contrary, it has resulted from departmental action, I should like to be exonerated, and I should like to have the other members of the Senate and of the House exonerated from any measure of blame that might otherwise be ascribed to them.

With this explanation I will leave the matter, if I can state aright the understanding of the Senator from West Virginia, who no doubt knows whereof he speaks. Had the Post-Office Department proceeded, after the act of February last, to make a classification of the letter-carriers, then that act would have taken effect; but inasmuch as the Post-Office Department did not make that classification it has not taken effect. Am I right so far?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. And now the Senator and his committee propose to make appropriations for the coming fiscal year, expecting that the Post-Office Department will make this classification?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator is right in that respect.

Mr. CONKLING. And when the next fiscal year has run out, if it shall turn out that the Post-Office Department has not made the classification, then the letter-carriers will not receive their extra pay, and it will be because of that departmental action and not because of any neglect here. Is that right?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In substance that is right. The committee would have felt it to be their duty to have made the appropriation of $71,000 to pay the letter-carriers for the current fiscal year if the classifications and adjustments had taken place and the money had been due; but no classification having been made, the committee thought they ought not to make the appropriation.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I only desire to say a word. I am not perfectly clear that the Senator from New York understands precisely what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said or that they have got the question fairly stated, if I understand it aright. The law of February 21, 1879, provides for the classification of letter-carriers; and a certain class of letter-carriers, not exceeding two-thirds and not less than one-half, are to receive a salary at the rate of $1,000 a year, while the rest are to receive $800; and after the expiration of a year's service those of the lower grade may be promoted for meritorious service. The act of February 21, 1879, made no appropriation to carry that law into effect. We have laws upon our statute-books prohibiting the Postmaster-General from expending any money in excess of what we have appropriated and from doing anything except in accordance with an appropriation made by Congress. Up to this time there has been no appropriation made to enable him to pay the increased salaries, and therefore he claims that he has had no right to attempt to make classifications of the letter-carriers so as to pay some of them increased salaries over what the present law requires him to pay. If the deficiency appropriated by the paragraph which has been stricken out had been passed he would have been required to make that classification and to pay the increased salaries for the current fiscal year; but not having made the classification at all and as the 1st of July will be here before he can make it now, if we were to make any appropriation for the remainder of the current fiscal year, he could only arbitrarily pay some letter-carriers and refuse to pay others, and that would make heart-burning and bad feeling among many of them. Congress has failed to make the appropriation, and the Postmaster-General was prohibited by law from making the payment and did not order the classification to be made because no appropriation was made to carry it out, and therefore he thought it was best to let it stand until Congress should make the appropriation. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Was the act to be done by the Postmaster-General in making this classification such an act as the Senator thinks he was restrained from doing by the prohibitory statute to which he has referred?

Mr. BECK. I think he was unable to do it, because there was no money appropriated to enable him to do it. The law was passed but there was no money supplied to him, and under the limitation of existing law he could not exceed the appropriations that had been made for his Department.

Mr. CONKLING. So that in short the Senator thinks the Postmaster-General had no legal right?

Mr. BECK. I do; and I think he is not to blame.

Mr. CONKLING. Then, the Senator will allow me, in place of the blame, if blame there be, resting on the Post-Office Department, it does after all rest on the law-making power?

Mr. BECK. I may differ with the chairman of the committee in this matter. I do not know that there is very much blame to be attached anywhere. The Senator will recollect that this act was passed on the 21st of February, 1879, a very few days before the adjournment of Congress. We happened not to make an appropriation then. After the 18th of March perhaps it could have been hurried through a little faster; but to get an appropriation through both Houses is a thing that takes some time, especially at this extra session when there have been some entanglements. The only blame is a delay in not getting the appropriation bills through more promptly so as to enable the Department to comply with the law. That is not unusual in matters of legislation.

I desire to say now that we thought we were right in making the amount for the next fiscal year $400,000 instead of $415,000 or any other greater sum, because by the fourth section of the act of February 21 the provision is that the Postmaster-General may increase the salaries of the letter-carriers in the large cities to a thousand dollars, not exceeding two-thirds nor less than one-half, and he is to fill up those who receive $1,000 from those who receive $800 who are meritorious. If we had placed them all up to two-thirds it would have closed the door against promotions of meritorious men. Therefore we do not appropriate such a sum as will put the number down to one-half nor allow the salaries of two-thirds to be increased; but we put it in between, at $400,000, so as to leave a margin for men who endeavor to exert themselves to get promotion by meritorious conduct. I rather think that the bill now appropriates what is the fair medium between two-thirds and one-half. That is the idea the committee have. I may differ with the chairman on some points about this matter, but I have stated what was my understanding about the matter.

Mr. COKE. I offer the following amendment by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs:

After the word "necessary," in line 28, insert:

For interest due Osages on avails of diminished-reserve land in Kansas for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, this amount to be expended for the Osage Indians in accordance with section 12 of the act of July 15, 1870, being interest at 5 per cent. per annum from March 1, 1879, to March 1, 1880, on $1,206,557.29, aggregate of net avails of Osage trust and diminished-reserve lands sold prior to March 1, 1879, as provided for by section 2 of the act approved May 9, 1872, $60,312.86.

I send to the Clerk's desk to have read letters in explanation of that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letters will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 1, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a letter from Hon. E. A. Hayt, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to this office, dated March 17, 1879, inclosing an estimate of appropriation for interest, at 5 per cent., due the Osages from March 1, 1879, to March 1, 1880, on $1,206,257.29, being the aggregate of net avails of their lands sold by the United States prior to March 1, 1879, amounting to the sum of $60,312.86.

As it appears that provision is made by the second section of the act of Congress approved May 9, 1872, for the payment of the above amount to said Indians, the estimate of appropriation is respectfully submitted for the appropriate action of Congress.

The Commissioner, for certain reasons given in his letter, recommends that Congress be requested to amend the act of May 9, 1872, by changing the date up to which interest on the sales of Osage lands shall be calculated from March 1 to July 1, which latter date shall be the basis of future calculations, and I respectfully request that said act may be so amended.

Very respectfully,

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

Hon. RICHARD COKE,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 17, 1879.

SIR: In accordance with the second provision of section 2 of the act approved May 9, 1872, (Stats. 17, p. 91,) I have the honor to inclose herewith, for transmittal to Congress, an estimate for interest at 5 per cent. due the Osages from March 1, 1879, to March 1, 1880, on $1,206,257.29, being the aggregate of net avails of Osage trust and diminished-reserve lands sold by the United States prior to March 1, 1879, amounting to the sum of $60,312.86.

The act of May 9, 1872, requires that interest shall be calculated upon the net proceeds of these lands up to March 1 of each year. Every other session of Congress closes on the 4th day of March; therefore in those years it is impracticable for this office to submit the required estimate in time to receive the necessary action of Congress thereon before adjournment. For this reason, and in order to enable this office at the proper time to submit the annual estimates for the period of one year, I very respectfully recommend that Congress be requested to amend the act of May 9, 1872, by changing the date up to which interest on the sales shall be calculated from March 1 to July 1, which latter date shall be the basis of future calculations.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HAYT, Commissioner.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This is a letter-carriers bill and I doubt whether it ought to be loaded down.

Mr. ALLISON. My friend will allow me to suggest that I trust he will make no objection to this appropriation being put on the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will state that the amendment is subject to objection as gentlemen know; but I am disposed to let the Senate deal with it upon its merits. At least for the present I will not make objection.

Mr. ALLISON. This matter had entirely escaped my attention or I assure the Senator from Texas that I would have brought it to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations. I had charge last winter of the Indian appropriation bill, and finding that in the bill as it came from the House there was no provision for the payment of this interest, I called upon the Secretary of the Interior in person to know why, and he said under the law the interest account could not be made up until the 1st of March, and inasmuch as that bill was going through in the month of February the exact amount could not be ascertained.

Now, we are indebted to these Indians for this interest absolutely, and they are entitled to receive it during the coming fiscal year, and it is usually paid to them along through the year. It is an obligation which we cannot escape. It was not put in the Indian appropriation bill for the reason that I have named, and therefore I trust, as this seems to be almost the only opportunity, that we shall not do injustice to these Indians, to whom we cannot explain these difficulties by talking of an omission in an appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The amendment hardly comes in place on this bill. The Committee on Appropriations has not considered the amendment, and I am myself probably a little better disposed toward it than some of the other members of the committee. It is subject to objection as I said, but at present I do not make the objection, though any Senator can if he thinks proper.

This is a bill that the House is very anxious about, and it relates entirely to subjects foreign to this matter. I will say to Senators that there is another bill referred to the Appropriations Committee paying certain salaries belonging to the House. Probably gentlemen had better let this matter go to the Committee on Appropriations, and it can be considered on Monday morning, and if the committee think it proper it may be considered in connection with that bill and recommended by the committee. I make that suggestion to the friends of the measure, and submit to them whether they had not better let this bill pass as it is, and, as there has been another appropriation bill from the House referred to the committee to-day, let this be considered in connection with that bill.

Mr. COKE. I cannot accept the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia. The questions involved have been fully considered in the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the amendment is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as shown by the letters read, and I can see no necessity for referring it to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend had better not be positive about it, because his amendment is subject to objection; but I will listen to the Senator for the reasons.

Mr. COKE. What is the objection of the Senator? Will he state any objection he can make?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The committee has not considered it. I have not made any objection. I do not desire to make any fight on the amendment at all. Therefore I said I would not for the present make the objection which it is subject to, but I would hear what the Senator had to say.

Mr. COKE. I have this to say about it, that the Committee on Indian Affairs have maturely considered the proposition in this amendment, and they directed me unanimously to report it and place it upon this bill, if it can be done. It is for interest that has accrued upon the Osage trust fund to the 1st of March last, which could not be included in the appropriation bill of the last session of Congress.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to ask him whether this difficulty has not occurred in previous years? If so, how has it been avoided heretofore?

Mr. COKE. It has not been avoided. It is a difficulty in the law which we shall propose to amend at the proper time, but not now. But as this extra session of Congress has intervened and affords an opportunity of remedying the injustice of the existing law at this time, we have availed ourselves of it. The interest is due, already accrued to the 1st day of March last, and we have asked, because Congress is now in session, that this act of justice be done by making the appropriation now instead of waiting until the next regular session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment fo the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The amendment seems to be for interest due for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880. How, then, was interest due on the 1st of March?

Mr. COKE. Due up to the 1st of March last, as the amendment says.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I do not see that.

Mr. ALLISON. I will explain to the Senator from Minnesota a little further. This diminished reserve is being sold year by year, and as the lands are sold the money is paid into the Treasury. On the 1st of March in each year the Secretary of the Interior by the statute which I have before me is required to make up an account of the amount in the Treasury arising from this fund, and upon that account the interest is to be paid for the year. This account was made up on the 1st of March last, stating the amount, and it is to pay the interest for the second year that this appropriation is to be made. It has been made ever since 1872, and of course the amount varies with each year, because as land is sold the amount is increased. It is a perfectly proper amendment, and ought to be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Secretary of the Treasury, in compliance with a Senate resolution, on the 28th of April last reported a list of accounts of contractors for transporting the mails prior to the 1st of July, 1878, that had not been paid. The accounts were audited, but not paid. I understand that an amendment that was offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has been before the Committee on Appropriations, and they have not reported it. I therefore propose to amend the bill by adding:

To pay the balances which have been duly audited and allowed for transporting the mails prior to July 1, 1876, $22,386.

There is a list of them here which the Secretary can read. I suppose it is in order to offer that amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I dislike to interpose an objection. I say to my friend from Illinois that those items were considered in committee and we declined to put them on this bill, thinking they ought not to go on this bill. It is not a deficiency bill, not in the nature of a deficiency bill. Those items are of the nature of deficiencies, and in the same document with them there was probably twenty times as much as the Senator selects. If one goes on, all ought to go on.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Will the Senator allow me a word? Will he tell me why the Committee on Appropriations refused to report this amendment? When the accounts have been audited by the Department and they are due, why should they not be paid? Why should we put the various other provisions on this letter-carriers bill and not put this? The item in relation to letter-carriers is but a small portion of the whole bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I call my friend's attention to the fact that so far as my knowledge goes there is nothing in the line of a deficiency on this bill. This is a deficiency of last year and other years. There are two railroads entitled to certain amounts. They are deficiencies. There are a large number of cases in just the same condition, and they were considered by the committee and I believe a decided majority thought this was not the proper place for them, even if they ought to be provided for now. We have passed a deficiency bill, and that was the proper bill on which to place all items of this kind. I suppose there were twenty deficiencies that came before the Appropriations Committee and all were refused on the ground that this was not a deficiency bill and that we ought not to take them up now.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. In reply to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I would say that in the twenty-ninth line is a deficiency for the salary of the additional associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. Why did you select that? That is a deficiency.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my friend that that is hardly a deficiency.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Clearly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let me state to my friend what the circumstances are and see if we agree. The act of February last made an additional justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. He is now serving.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I have no objection to it; but it is a deficiency.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is for the salary of a judge now upon the bench in this District under an act of Congress passed in February last.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Still it is a deficiency for this fiscal year. That comprises about one-fourth of this bill. The amounts due these gentlemen for carrying the mails are in the same condition. They have earned the money, and their accounts are allowed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. When I state that the appropriation is for the salary of a judge now on the bench, I mean that it is for the present salary which he is now earning. It is hardly a deficiency; at least the committee hardly thought so. Of course it is with the Senate to determine whether or not to add these railroad deficiencies, for I believe most of them are due railroad companies, small balances from previous years. I hardly think the Senate is disposed to take up that question.

The question of the entire mail service in the Southern States during 1861 came up at the same time, and it was insisted that if we took up one of these mail deficiencies, we ought to provide for them all. The committee thought, and I still think, that we ought not now to provide for a chosen few out of that large number.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The deficiencies in the mail service during the war in the Southern States have been controverted. They are totally different things from the moneys due for service on these mail-routes in the Northern States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. MAXEY. In line 13, in Committee of the Whole, the words "and fifteen" were stricken out, making that appropriation $400,000, and then lines 14, 15, 16, and 17 were stricken out, as follows:

For payment of increased salary to letter-carriers, under the provisions of existing law, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, $71,000.

Now, by reference to an act approved February 21, 1879, and which is now the law, these amounts were computed by the House and the bill passed there in order to comply with existing law in respect to the pay of letter-carriers; and there is therefore no good reason—none has yet been assigned—why that should be stricken out, and it is cutting these letter-carriers out of what, after the most mature consideration, Congress decided they should have, as any one will see by looking simply to the debates pending the progress of that bill.

I ask the Senate to non-concur, believing it to be an act of injustice to a worthy and deserving set of men who have done this work.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The committee and the Senate both almost unanimously voted that these amendments should be made.

Mr. MAXEY. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that I am chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and when the question was up I was not here. My attention had been called to it, and had I been here I should have opposed the proposition of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The bill came here from the committee, as we thought, in a form to which there would be no objection. I have given way both to my friend from Texas [Mr. COKE] and my friend from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] when both of their amendments were subject to objection. I thought it best not to object; and probably because I have given way to them the other amendments of the committee which the committee had properly considered and to which they ask the Senate now to adhere, because we believe them to be right, are to be overthrown. I hope that no further amendments will be made to the bill in any form or manner.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to ask the Senator from West Virginia if because those two amendments have been adopted by the Senate that is any reason why the committee which reported this bill should refuse to provide to carry out a law which increased the salary of letter-carriers?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator could not have been in when this question was discussed. Was he here when the question was discussed very intelligently by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] not saying a word about myself?

Mr. FERRY. I was not in the Senate at the time the Senator alludes to. I participated in the debate when the act of February 21 was passed, and I know that, after a thorough consideration by the Senate, that letter-carriers bill was passed; and it is but just that the Government should provide for the pay of the carriers. This bill, as amended, prevents payment for the past time since that act was approved and only provides for the future fiscal year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator, has there been any classification or adjustment in the Post-Office Department for the present year?

Mr. FERRY. I cannot answer as to that. That is not the fault of the statute; that is not the province of the legislative department. The Post-Office Department should take care of its branch, and doubtless will. The head of that Department is perfectly competent to do so. If the Senator from West Virginia desires to relieve him of his duty, that is one thing. Our responsibility is to provide an appropriation for carrying out a statute that we have passed upon due deliberation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There has been no classification, and there is no one to pay the money to unless you go to work now and make a classification which would date back. It is back pay or a gratuity, whichever you choose to call it. We have appropriated fully for the next fiscal year up to what the Department believe ought to be appropriated.

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to ask the Senator a question. Under the appropriation as now made there is to be a classification, and that classification, as I understand it, rests upon the meritorious conduct or services of these letter-carriers for the number that will be put up. If that be true, when the statute was passed before authorizing these men that are meritorious men that will now be designated by the classification to receive the amount provided for in this bill, why will they not be the ones that would be entitled to this appropriation for the current year had it been made? It is merely a classification to ascertain who of the letter-carriers are entitled to this appropriation that is to meet the larger salary. If that classification is made it will apply as well to the current year as it does to the next year, and there is no reason why this appropriation should not be made.

Now, without referring to the action of the House, the Senator will remember, I presume, by reading the proceedings of Congress that there has been quite a contest over this very provision, and no one has ever denied before that these letter-carriers were entitled to the money that would have been provided by an appropriation under a classification made by the Department under the law. Now the classification has not been made by the Department. The Senator has said it was the duty of the Post-Office Department to make it. I do not so understand——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I did not quite say that.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator said it was on account of a failure of the Post-Office Department to make the classification that no appropriation should be made for the current year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, but I did not say there was any fault.

Mr. LOGAN. Perhaps I used too strong a term; but we will use the word "failure." I do not see very much difference, when a law requires a thing to be done, between saying that the officer fails to do it and saying that he refuses to do it, so far as fault is concerned; but that is immaterial.

It is impossible for the Post-Office Department here at Washington to make this classification, except by communicating with the postmasters at the different cities where letter-carriers are permitted under the law. When this selection is made it can be made with a view to this appropriation, and the appropriation if made for the last year just as well. These men have already by the postmasters in the different cities been appointed, are already known. Although the classification has not been made and they have not been designated by orders for promotion, yet the men who will be placed ahead on this classification are just as well known as they will be after the 1st day of July. They have performed the duty, and they have perhaps made extraordinary exertion for the purpose of being classified number one or whatever it may be, and they are just as much entitled to this money that they have earned under the law as if the appropriation had been made at the time the law was passed. The law requires that they should be paid; and I believe it is the duty of Congress now to make the appropriation, and if the Post-Office Department fails to make or cannot make the classification, that is no fault of Congress; but it will be the fault of Congress if the law stands on the statute-book and we fail to make the appropriation needed to carry it out. I say it is right for us to perform our duty in reference to these men under the law.

Mr. BECK. But one word to the Senator from Illinois, if he will allow me.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. The view I took of it, as one member of the committee, was, that if we appropriated this money for the year ending the 30th of June, when there had been no classification made and no determination by the Postmaster-General as to what men the money should be paid to, there might be arbitrary payments made by him that might be unsatisfactory. I thought that at the next session of Congress when the classification had been made justly, then we could make the appropriation. For example, suppose the Postmaster-General should say that A, B, and C were meritorious and D, E, and F not meritorious, and those men could show they were more meritorious than those to whom he paid the money. While the thing was yet unsettled, while the classification was not made, we thought it safer to withhold the appropriation until the fact was ascertained and the justice of the thing was determined, because if men who were not proper persons were once paid we could not get it back, and when once done and examined then would be the proper time to make the appropriation of $70,000, if it should become necessary for the current fiscal year. That was the idea I had.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not precisely agree with the Senator, for this reason: it is just as easy for the Postmaster-General to suggest to the postmasters of the different cities and towns now to report to him who the persons were who should be classified for the purpose of receiving this appropriation, as it will be next year or any other time. It is just as easy now, and easier. So far as complaint is concerned, there never will be a classification made of persons employed by the Government where one is voted a larger salary than another, without having complaint, and you might as well have it now as at any other time. If these men are entitled to this money, there is no reason why they should not be paid.

I live in a city where we have a great number of letter-carriers. I said nothing awhile ago because I wanted to understand fully what objection there was to this appropriation. I have received a great many letters; there has been a committee here; the matter has been explained before the regular committees of the two Houses, and it seems that it is just and proper that they should have this appropriation, so that the money may be disbursed to them at once, or as soon at least as it can be done. Many of these men may drop out of the service; many things may occur between now and the next year that would prevent a number from receiving that to which they are entitled now under the law. My theory is that when a law provides that a thing shall be done, and requires an appropriation to be made for the purpose of doing it, certainly, at least when there is no conscientious scruple, as has sometimes been said—I have no criticism to make on that—we ought to do it the session when we have the power to do it, and when we can do it. There is no better time to do this than now.

I shall support the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to retain this provision in the bill.

Mr. MAXEY. If I can get the attention of the Senate for a very few moments I think I can make the reason which induced me to move to non-concur with the action of the Committee on Appropriations tolerably plain to Senators.

Section 3866 of the Revised Statutes, approved on the 8th of June, 1872, provides the mode of paying letter-carriers:

The salary of letter-carriers shall be fixed by the Postmaster-General, and shall not exceed $800 per annum; but, on satisfactory evidence of diligence, fidelity, and experience, he may increase their salary to any sum not exceeding $1,000 a year each, &c.

That was regarded as not the right figure. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads thought there should be some incentive, some inducement to get the best class of letter-carriers, and therefore the act of June 8, 1872, was on that point superseded by the act of February 21, 1879, and which was passed in a bill reported by my predecessor as chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.] That, I state here in the presence of the Appropriations Committee, was carefully considered, and the entire theory of paying these letter-carriers was changed by that act so as to put an inducement out for men to do their very best. Hence you will find that instead of the limit of $800 under any state of the case as by the act of June 8, 1872, the second section of the act of February 21, 1879, declared that "the salaries of the carriers of the first class who shall have been in service at least one year shall be $1,000 per annum, and the salaries of letter-carriers of the second class shall be $800 per annum." There is a clear increase of $200 in the first class. Then there is provision made whereby there may be even a third class, drawing not exceeding $400, which it is not necessary to read. That act became the law of this country the very day that it was passed, February 21, 1879.

It is assumed, upon what authority I am not prepared to state, that they have not been classified by the Postmaster-General. I do not know how that is. That, as was well stated by the Senator from Michigan, is not our business. We passed this law and we authorized the rearrangement, and the presumption of the law is that the head of the Post-Office Department has done his duty about it. If so, then these men are entitled under this new law of the 21st of February, 1879, to their pay, the first class $1,000, the second class $800 a year, whereas under the old law the highest pay to anybody was $800 a year. Clearly, I say, the House is right about this. There can be no doubt about it in my judgment. I asked the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations why strike that out of the House bill?

Some complaint was made that amendments had been tacked on by other gentlemen in the Senate. This is nothing of the kind. We simply ask that what was done by the House shall stand. The House fixed $415,000 for the payment of letter-carriers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and then the other appropriation, in lines 14 to 17, for the payment of the increased salary to letter-carriers for this current fiscal year. Why should that have passed the House unless the Postmaster-General had classified the letter-carriers under the act of February 21, 1879? The presumption is that he did do so, and the pay is due to them if it was done.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Allow me to say to my friend——

Mr. MAXEY. In a moment, because I have not finished the explanation I want to make.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I want to make a correction in one particular.

Mr. MAXEY. Very well.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It was stated by the Department to the Committee on Appropriations that they have not classified the carriers.

Mr. MAXEY. How did that come before the committee?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The gentleman in charge of this division came before the committee and stated that. We also had a communication from the Department to the committee stating that no classification had taken place.

Mr. MAXEY. Now I will go into a little law, and I think I know a little more about that than the Senator from West Virginia. He can beat me on banking and mining and making money, but I think I can beat him on a question of law.

Now, in point of fact, although there may have been no formal classification in the act of February 21, 1879, if in point of fact these men have done their work as such, and for want of time or other good cause or in order that the Postmaster-General might determine their relative merits the classification has not yet been made, if it is now made it will retroact and go back to the date of the passage of the act of February 21, 1879, if they were then performing the duties; or, if they were not on that day performing the duties, from and after the day when they did begin to perform the duties. Then, as was stated by the Senator from Illinois, as I think very correctly, if these men are entitled to their money we should pay them, and the mere fact that there has not been a formal classification does not in the slightest degree change the principle, for if they have done the work they are now entitled to the money.

Mr. CONKLING. Without venturing to state the ground on which we ought to stand, I feel warranted in pointing out one ground on which it seems to me we cannot stand. We cannot take the ground that the Post-Office Department does not classify because we fail to pass a law under which it can classify, and then at the same time take the ground that we will not pass any law under which the classification can be made. I submit that that ground is not tenable. To say that because we do not legislate we cannot classify, and we will not legislate because he has not classified, will not hold.

I want to make two other observations only. In the first place, if there be a class of public agents or servants who are meritorious, hard-worked, and underpaid, it is the letter-carriers in the cities. They tramp, tramp, tramp wearily, and earn by hard work and faithful service the money they receive.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from New York permit me to call his attention to one thing by way of supporting his view.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will hear me one moment I will anticipate him.

The other observation I want to make—and I am quite sure it is to that the Senator from Texas rises—is this: the act which the Senator has before him and which I have before me—having sent for it after the colloquy with the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Kentucky, and which I had not before me at that moment—in my judgment, and I think that is the judgment of the Senator from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, itself classifies. The act makes the classification. How?

The salaries of letter-carriers of the first class—

Who are they?—

who shall have been in service at least one year, shall be $1,000 per annum.

Is there any further classification about that? It is a maxim of the law that that is certain which can be rendered certain; and wherever there is a letter-carrier that had been in service one year he is classified and belongs to the first class because the act says so.

Now let me read the first section and the second section of this act. The first section is in these words:.

That for the more equitable compensation of letter-carriers there shall be in all cities which contain a population of seventy-five thousand or more two classes of letter-carriers to be fixed by the Postmaster-General.

If it stopped there, certainly the Senator from West Virginia would be well warranted in saying that a classification must precede the fixing of rates; but I call the attention of that Senator to the fact that the very next section proceeds to declare—

The salaries of letter-carriers of the first class—

Who are they?—

who shall have been in service at least one year, shall be $1,000 per annum.

It seems to me—I will not state it stronger than that—that there is at least a doubt, and a serious doubt, about whether this act does itself make the classification so far that the right has attached that these men by the act itself, without anything more occurring, became entitled to the rate of compensation here fixed. With that doubt, if there be a doubt, with that statutory right, if there is no doubt, I submit again that the Senator is not warranted in taking the ground that the Postmaster-General has not classified, because we passed no law under which he could classify; and now we will not pass any law, because he has not classified. It seems to me that position confutes itself. It is a paradox on which the law-making power of the Government is not warranted in standing. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to add one word only to what has been said. In the next paragraph, in section 2, which was read, you will find this:

In all cities containing a population of less than seventy-five thousand there shall be one class of letter-carriers who shall receive a salary of $850 per annum.

The old salary was $800 per annum. There is an absolute demand that that class of letter-carriers in cities under seventy-five thousand inhabitants shall receive $850, which is an increase per carrier of $50 per annum, and therefore it becomes absolutely necessary under the law to make this appropriation.

Mr. CONKLING. That confessedly requires no classification.

Mr. MAXEY. Certainly not.

Mr. CONKLING. That is a classification itself.

Mr. PADDOCK. And this sum of $71,000 was undoubtedly predicated upon exactly that classification which the law makes.

Mr. FERRY. An additional reason why this amount should be appropriated, which I suggest to the chairman of the committee and other Senators, is that under the former economy of the democratic House in the Post-Office Department, as well as other Departments of the Government, the Postmaster-General, in order to come within the appropriation for the Department, was compelled arbitrarily to cut down the pay of these letter-carriers, cutting them down one year $25 each, the next year adding $5, making the reduction $30 each. The average paid to the letter-carriers before was less than $800, for which they do the vast amount of labor detailed by the Senator from New York. We know that in large cities they earn their money, serving twelve to fourteen hours each day of the secular week and making two collections each Sunday in addition.

It seems but a matter of justice that this appropriation to cover the time since the law was passed up to the close of the fiscal year should be made for these letter-carriers, in order to make up what has been taken from them rightly by the Postmaster-General, because it was his duty to keep within the appropriation for his Department. He was forced to do it by the legislation of Congress. Now there seems to be a disposition to do better justice to these letter-carriers. Their service should be properly recognized. Why now take from them this pittance when it has, perhaps not unlawfully, but probably unjustly, been taken from them? Let us be just and make up this amount, which will be no more than making up what they should have received before.

Mr. MAXEY. I will call the attention of my colleague on the Post-Office Committee to the fact that it is not necessary to go into the question of whether this has been economical or not; it is the law of the land and we ought to make the appropriations accordingly.

Mr. ALLISON. I think this discussion shows that there is very great doubt about the construction of this law as to whether or not these letter-carriers will not be entitled to this pay at some time whether we appropriate for it now or not. I think there is great force in what has been stated by the Senator from Michigan, that owing to the small appropriations, hitherto these letter-carriers have been cut down below their reasonable salary. I think there will be no difficulty in carrying out the House bill in this regard. On a more careful examination of this law than I could make the other day, I think the Postmaster-General can pick out the meritorious letter-carriers who have been in the service more than a year, and properly distribute this money. He must make the selection at some time; he must say who shall be entitled to this increased compensation; and when he makes the selection it is quite as easy for him to say that it shall begin on the 1st day of April or the 21st day of February as to say it shall begin the 1st day of July. I appeal to my colleagues on the committee to let this go.

Mr. BECK. The committee of course had to look at this hurriedly. We had a number of communications from the Postmaster-General varying a good deal in their terms, because it is a very difficult thing for him to obtain accurate information. In one of them he tells us $415,000, the amount allowed by the House bill, is required. He then makes a revised estimate and says it will take $430,000, if they are all put up. He has one estimate in which he says $71,000 will be required as a deficiency for this year; in the last estimate he tells us it will require from $108,000 as the maximum to $87,154 as the minimum to make up the amount. We ascertained that condition of things to exist, because there had been no effort made to classify the carriers because there was no money to pay the increase. I think the idea of the committee was that with those statements, somewhat conflicting, the House having given very full discussion to it, especially on the part of a gentleman by the name of BINGHAM, who seemed to have more intelligence about it than anybody and who explained it very well, we had better make some change here so that if it got into conference we could ascertain what the exact facts were.

There was no disposition on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to cut down the letter-carriers or not comply with this law. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] and myself examined the matter. On comparing all these laws and these letters, we were not sure whether the House was right or that the entire increase was necessary. I am inclined to think the House is too low. According to the last estimate we have, the Postmaster-General says it will require not less than $87,000 and perhaps $108,000, instead of $71,000, as the House bill has it for this year, and that it will require, if they are all brought up, $437,000 instead of $415,000. Our real object was, in view of the non-adjustment, in view of all these matters, to make some amendment here, so that we could look into the matter and put it right in conference.

Mr. FERRY. If I understand the Senator from Kentucky the communication was in reference to the next fiscal year, the future. I do not take exception so far as I am concerned to the medium struck by the committee in regard to the future; but that has no reference to the past since the act of February last became the law. That the committee have not regarded at all, simply because of the difficulty, as stated, of classification. Now it seems to me there is no difficulty. Let this present classification be retroactive, let the same rule be applied to the past that does to the future, simply from the time of the passage of that law from February 21, to the 30th of June.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Michigan will allow me to say one more word. The Postmaster-General in his last letter says:

> The amount ($71,000) stated in my letter is required to pay the increased salaries from the date of the approval of the act (February 21, 1879) to the end of this fiscal year was found to be erroneous, and was corrected in the revised estimate (a copy of which is inclosed) submitted to the sub-committee of the House. From this estimate it will appear that the maximum required is $108,166, and the minimum $87,154.
>
> Very respectfully, &c.,
>
> D. M. KEY,
> Postmaster-General.
>
> Hon. H. G. DAVIS,
> United States Senate.

We struck out that $71,000 so as to open it for a conference, when $87,164 or $108,116 may be inserted. The effort we had was to see how an adjustment could be made and have it made properly and reach the proper men. The Senate will observe that if we agree to the $71,000 the House has given, there will be a deficiency of the difference between that and $87,000 or $108,000 according to the estimate sent us the other day. We thought with these various papers before the committee something should be done by a committee of conference to ascertain what was the true thing to do. I believe every member of the committee desires to carry out the law of February 21, 1879, and not to deprive a man of a dollar in any shape that has been put in. Our amendments will enable the House and Senate to get together. I hope the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] or the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] will be one of the conferees. I do not know enough about it, but I see there was a mistake somewhere and we were endeavoring to get the bill into a shape where we could do justice to all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Kentucky has so well stated the facts before the committee that it is hardly worth while to add anything further than that I agree with what he has said. But if the friends who wish the letter-carriers paid for the current year think it better to let the $71,000 stand, instead of having a conference and making the amount according to the estimate, the Committee on Appropriations will make no objection. The Committee on Appropriations only desire to know what is best, what is right. They have no feeling of course. It is their desire to do for the letter-carriers what is just, and it was thought that the action of the committee would give full control both over the sums for the present year and for the coming year, and therefore they amended each of the sections. Now, I submit to the friends of the letter-carriers' increased pay under the act of February 21 that if they desire to pass the bill just as it came from the House I shall make no objection.

Mr. MAXEY. If the chairman will permit me, I will say that we do not ask one single dollar additional to what the House gave. All we ask is that the bill as it came to us from the House in the regards which I pointed out shall remain as it is; in other words, that the Senate Appropriations Committee's amendment striking out those words shall be non-concurred in. We do not ask any more.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As I have stated on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, they will make no objection if that is the desire of the friends of the letter-carriers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) The question is on concurring in the first amendment of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I hope the Senate will not agree to the report of the committee. The Senator from West Virginia, who has charge of this bill and who is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I think is a little mistaken, to say the least of it, in saying that this is back pay that we are voting from the Treasury. It is in no sense back pay, because it is to be recollected that a large majority of the Senate voted in favor of this measure in February, and it is owing to some mistakes that have been made that the men have not had their pay. I do not think it is in the nature of back pay, but it is money as justly due to them as any money can possibly be due to any parties connected with the Government. I think there are no parties probably who earn more honestly the money that they would receive by this bill and this additional amount than the letter-carriers, so far at any rate as I know.

I only rose to say that I did not view it as back pay at all; if I did I might consider it differently. I believe it was the intention a year ago to give this money, and therefore it is really their due. They have been expecting it, and they would have had it before but for mistakes that have occurred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the first amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the second amendment, striking out lines 14 to 17.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the remaining amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The Chair will put the question in gross unless a separate vote be demanded.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1847) to provide for the appointment of a "Mississippi River commission" for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes near its mouth to its headwaters.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 697) to establish additional post-roads in the State of Florida.

WASHINGTON CITY POST-OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, some time ago there came from the House a joint resolution looking to the selection of a building for a post-office in the city of Washington. On the 19th of May last it was postponed by a vote of the Senate until December. The day after, I moved a reconsideration of that action, and I now ask that the Senate consider that motion to reconsider the vote by which it was postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia calls up a motion made by him on the 20th of May last, to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (H. R. No. 71) authorizing the appointment of a commission to lease a building for a city post-office in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, was postponed until December next.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now, I wish to say, as the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is not in his seat, who requested me to make this motion, that I give notice that on Monday next, immediately after the morning business is through, I will ask that this motion be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks that the consideration of the motion be laid aside informally. The Chair hears no objection.

THOMAS LANGTON.

Mr. GARLAND. There is a bill for the relief of Thomas Langton, of Dundee, Michigan, Senate bill No. 594, reported from the Judiciary Committee unanimously. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration. It is a bill in reference to the succession tax on a piece of land.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 594) for the relief of Thomas Langton, of Dundee, Michigan. It proposes to discharge the southeast fractional quarter of the northeast fractional quarter of section 23, in township 6 south, of range 6 east, in the county of Monroe, State of Michigan, from all lien, claim, or title, on the part of the United States thereon and thereto, under and by virtue of the levy of a succession tax upon the estate of Alfred Potter, deceased, and the sale of the land to the United States for the tax.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, The amount of the tax assessed against said land upon the non-payment of which said land was sold, and interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the day of the sale, be paid into the Treasury of the United States within ninety days from the passage of this act.

Mr. GARLAND. In the year 1871 there was what was called under the law a succession tax assessed against the estate of one Potter, of which there were four heirs. In default of the payment of the tax upon the property the ceremonies provided by law were gone through with in order to reach a sale of that property. When the sale was had the interest of one of these four heirs alone was sold. The whole tax, in other words, was levied upon that, and that was made responsible. There were no bidders, and the United States purchased the property. This bill is simply an effort to relieve that property of the tax upon payment of the amount that is due. Since the committee made the report the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] who introduced the bill has brought the facts to my attention, and upon them he will offer amendments, to which, upon his statement, I shall make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CALL. I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the committee:

In line 3, after the word "that," insert "fifty-two acres of;" in line 5, after the word "Michigan," insert "belonging to Thomas Langton;" in line 10, after the word "provided," strike out the word "the" and insert "that one-half of the;" so as to read:

That fifty-two acres of the southeast fractional quarter of the northeast fractional quarter of section 23, in township 6 south, of range 6 east, in the county of Monroe, State of Michigan, belonging to Thomas Langton, be discharged of and from all lien, claim, or title, on the part of the United States thereon and thereto, under and by virtue of the levy of a succession tax upon the estate of Alfred Potter, deceased, and the sale of the above-described land to the United States for said tax: Provided, That one-half of the amount of the tax assessed against said land upon the non-payment of which said land was sold, and interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the day of the sale, be paid into the Treasury of the United States within ninety days from the passage of this act.

I will explain the relation which these amendments have to the bill, in order that the Senate may vote upon them understandingly. The original transaction was the sale, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas, of fifty-eight acres of land in the State of Michigan, near the town of Monroe; fifty-two acres of the land belonged to a minor, an heir of the estate. The land was bought by the Government, and recently there have been proceedings commenced in ejectment against the share owned by this minor. The amendments now proposed authorize the release by the Government of fifty-two of the fifty-eight acres of land which had been bought upon the payment by this minor of his portion of the succession tax, and they leave four acres of improved land in the vicinity of a town, worth more than the whole amount of the tax to the Government. They leave four acres of the fifty-eight in possession of the Government. The bill as reported by the committee releases the whole fifty-eight acres of land, and the amendments now offered change the bill in so far that they allow the minor heir to take his fifty-two acres of land, leaving the other four, and with the condition attached that he pay his share of the tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT FOUNDATION.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I hope the Senator will withdraw that for a moment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope the Senator from Florida will be allowed to make a motion.

Mr. THURMAN. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 32) authorizing the completion of the foundation of the Washington Monument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the joint commission for the construction of the Washington Monument, created by the act of August 2, 1876, to expend, for the completion of the foundation of the monument now in progress, so much of the appropriation made by that act as may be necessary for that purpose, not exceeding $64,000 above the sum now authorized.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THURMAN. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the Senator from Ohio will give way for an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and forty-eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 21, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

NEW YORK SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. COVERT. I ask unanimous consent to submit, for reference to the Committee on Commerce, the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of three members of this House be appointed by the Speaker to investigate the conduct of the shipping commissioner's office at the port of New York; and that the said committee is hereby empowered to send for persons and papers necessary to the pursuit of the inquiry.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the introduction of that resolution. We have committees enough to examine that subject; the Committee on Commerce have examined it a great many times.

RETURN OF THE TWIGGS SWORD.

Mr. ELLIS introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 108) to authorize the President of the United States to return the Twiggs sword to Mrs. Rowena Guedella; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONTRACT FOR REFRIGERATING SHIP.

Mr. ELLIS. I also ask unanimous consent to introduce for reference a resolution of inquiry asking for information as to proceedings had by the National Board of Health in the matter of awarding the contract for constructing the refrigerating ship.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this body within three days from the passage of this resolution a detailed statement of all action and proceedings taken by the National Board of Health under or in connection with an act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to contract for the purchase or construction of a refrigerating ship for the disinfection of vessels and cargoes, and for other purposes, approved March 18, 1879, together with all action and proceedings of the board of engineer officers appointed to examine and report on that subject, with copies of all papers, plans, specifications, details, and correspondence relating thereto, submitted to each of said boards up to the time such report is made.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the appointment of another committee to investigate this matter. If the object is to refer it to the committee on the subject of yellow fever, I have no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. This resolution contemplates the appointment of no committee. It is a mere resolution of inquiry for the purpose of bringing before the House——

Mr. CONGER. Inquiry by what committee?

Mr. ELLIS. It is offered for reference to the standing committee charged with the duty of inquiring into the origin and prevention of epidemic diseases in this country.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that I have examined the resolution, and think it a proper one. I see no objection to it.

Mr. CONGER. If the National Board of Health so recently appointed and as yet scarcely organized is so soon to be investigated, I greatly fear it will drive every good man from that board.

Mr. ELLIS. Oh, no. We only want to know what that board and the board of engineers have been doing.

Mr. CONGER. I think it must be from the enemies of the Board of Health and those who do not desire to suppress the yellow fever that such a proposition comes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. ELLIS. I repel the insinuation of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] as totally unwarranted. If there be a friend of that board and a friend of the cause in which it is organized, I certainly am one. It is simply to find out what these boards have been doing and to get the truth before the House that I propose this resolution. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a privileged question if I can have the attention of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is it a question of personal privilege?

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir. I send to the Clerk to be read an editorial from the Indianapolis Journal of Friday, June 13, 1879.

The Clerk read as follows:

Representative COBB, of the second district, took the opportunity to reiterate that threadbare lie about the Massachusetts regiment interfering with voters at the elections in this city in October, 1864, on the floor of the House, Wednesday. He found the republican members prepared for him. Representatives BAKER and BROWNE made things quite warm for him.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, the foundation for that article was a discussion which took place upon this floor on the 11th instant between my colleagues [Mr. BROWNE and Mr. BAKER] and myself. In order to present to the House and the country the questions here involved, I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read, a portion of that discussion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, I did not desire to speak upon this occasion at all, and what I shall say will be impromptu of course. I must say that I was very much surprised at the statements of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] who, if I understood him correctly, stated substantially that at no time in the history of this country had the Army been used at the polls except during the war on special occasions. If I understand the history of this country, this statement so made by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio is a very remarkable one. Why, sir, in my own State—it is a historical fact which is true—during the war, in 1864, there was a Massachusetts regiment quartered in the capital of the State when we were in profound peace; and it is a well-kown fact and a matter of history that that regiment voted at the polls in the city of Indianapolis. And the further fact is well known and a matter of history that that regiment stationed there, together with men in sympathy with the republican party, drove democrats from the polls and prevented them from voting, who were as loyal as they were.

Mr. BROWNE. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. COBB. I will allow my colleague to ask me a question.

Mr. BROWNE. Do I understand the gentleman to say it is a conceded fact in Indiana that a Massachusetts regiment voted in 1864 or in any manner interfered in the election at the city of Indianapolis?

Mr. COBB. I did not say it was a conceded fact; for I do not suppose my colleague will concede it; but I say it is a matter of history and a matter of fact that this Massachusetts regiment did what I have stated.

Mr. BROWNE. Let me say to my colleague——

Mr. COBB. I cannot allow my colleague to inject a speech into mine. I will answer his question, but I cannot allow him to make a speech which will come out of my time. I will state further that a distinguished gentleman at the other end of the Capitol, whose word for truth will not be questioned, stated in his place in the Senate, and his speech in which he made the statement is on record, that he knew as a matter of fact, which was within his own knowledge and which occurred under his eye, that these facts did take place as I have stated them.

Mr. BROWNE. I am aware of that. But notwithstanding that, I undertake to say it is not a fact that that did occur.

Mr. COBB. I do not yield. I never heard it disputed before; and I say the gentleman does not know the history of his State and of the times, or he would not say that these facts did not take place.

Mr. BROWNE. I put my denial on record here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] has the floor.

Mr. COBB. Now I want to state one other thing. I have stated what is the fact, notwithstanding my distinguished colleague's denial. He was not there nor was I. The history of the times will prove the correctness of the facts I have stated.

Mr. COBB. I now ask that a portion of the remarks of my colleague [Mr. BAKER] be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Indiana [Mr. COBB] seems to be affected with a nightmare that has haunted him for the last fifteen years in consequence of some terrible outrages that he claims the voters of Indiana were subjected to by reason of the fact that some "boys in blue" from the State of Massachusetts had the impudence to vote at an election somewhere in Indiana during the war and interfere with some democrats who desired to vote.

I wish to say, with all respect to my colleague, that I do not believe a single word of his story. I never heard of it in the part of the State in which I live. I never heard of it until it was retailed by my colleague on the authority of a gentleman speaking elsewhere. My friend has fallen into error, while laboring under this nightmare, by mistaking for Union soldiers from the State of Massachusetts the "Knights of the Golden Circle" led by Milligan, Hersey, and other democratic leaders of Indiana. [Applause on the republican side.]

I think that if in 1864 there were any outrages perpetrated on the voters of Indiana it was by the twenty thousand men, Knights of the Golden Circle, all democrats banded together by oath-bound obligations for the purpose of liberating the confederate prisoners at Camp Morton, sacking the city of Indianapolis and turning the State over to the enemies of the Union. [Applause and cries of 'Vote!" "Vote!"] I have said all I desire to say on that point.

Mr. COBB. I now send to the desk to be read a statement made by Senator MCDONALD on the 26th of May, 1879.

The Clerk read as follows:

In my State, in 1864, a regiment of Massachusetts volunteers stationed at Indianapolis were permitted to leave their encampment on the day of election, and, with arms in their hands, suffered to surround the polls and not only exclude citizens from voting but were permitted to vote themselves, a privilege that they used most freely. This was done in my own view, and I saw these non-resident armed men insult and drive from the polls citizens of the State as loyal as themselves. Similar scenes were enacted in other parts of the State, as I have good reason to know.

Mr. COBB. I now ask the Clerk to read a letter written by John Love to Senator MCDONALD.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, June 14, 1879.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 11th with reference to our general election in this city on the 11th of October, 1864, is just received. Until recently there has been no question among such of our citizens as were eye-witnesses on that day that a regiment of Massachusetts soldiers held, for the greater part of the day, as complete possession of the election grounds as do our legal voters at ordinary elections, and that they voted as often as they pleased. There was nothing to indicate that they were soldiers of Massachusetts or Indiana. I only know that the general understanding was that they were Massachusetts soldiers. Frequent acts of violence occurred, such as taking tickets by force from democrats, and by the use of abusive language.

John R. Elder, esq., one of our most useful citizens then, as now, was driven from the polls because he was trying to exercise his legal right of challenge, was chased through the streets, and his life saved only through the intervention and assistance of personal friends. My own experience recalls some soldiers who, about the middle of the day, attempted by force to wrest my ticket from me; that on each attempt, when a crowd of excited men would quickly assemble, I would retreat, and that finally I was enabled to leave the ground only under cover of a squad of veteran reserves, whose commander I was fortunate enough to impress with the idea that my order (to form his men in line and permit no one to pass) should be obeyed. Under this cover I left the ground. For a democrat, under the circumstances, to have attempted to assert his rights as a citizen would have been of the same order of courage as the bull who faced the coming locomotive.

I have talked to-day with Judge H. C. Newcombe, whose high character you well know. He came to my house very soon after the events just mentioned with a message from Governor Morton, (with whom I had been so long associated in the military affairs of the State,) and with his own assurance that if I would return to the court-house I should have protection. To have returned then would have been useless, as a complete demoralization had taken place, and, as it was reported to me by friends, that there was no longer a democrat on the ground; that is, a democrat in the sense of one contesting the election.

If it is important to you, all that I have said can be corroborated by hundreds of our best citizens.

Very truly and respectfully,

JOHN LOVE.

Senator JOSEPH E. MCDONALD,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. COBB. I now ask to have read a letter upon this subject from John Brooks, addressed to Senator MCDONALD.

Mr. BROWNE. Whose letter is that?

Mr. COBB. It is a letter from John Brooks of Newburyport, Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEWBURYPORT, MASS., June 13.

SIR: Seeing this printed piece in the Boston Journal, I take the liberty of sending it to you, and to say that I belonged to the Sixtieth Massachusetts Regiment and was in Indianapolis when MCDONALD and Morton ran on their respective tickets, and am conversant of many things that occurred that day and there is good evidence that I can get that will agree with my own, and I think that the Journal is mistaken when it says that you have drawn on your imagination. If you think it worth while to inquire into this I should like to hear from you.

Yours, truly,

JOHN BROOKS.

Senator MCDONALD.

Mr. COBB. I now send up to be read a letter addressed to me from the reporters' gallery by C. T. Murray.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPORTERS' GALLERY.

Mr. COBB: I will make oath that I was present, stationed on military duty, at headquarters at Indianapolis at the time the Massachusetts regiment voted, and saw soldiers, in squads and singly, vote—not once, but over and over again, in uniform—and saw the same assault and drive democrats away from the vicinity of the polls for peddling democratic tickets.

C. T. MURRAY.

Mr. COBB. I desire also to have read a short article from the Boston Gazette of June 15.

The Clerk read as follows:

It won't be pleasant to look too closely into the Indianapolis election of 1864 which Senator MCDONALD is talking about in the Senate. We have heard Massachusetts soldiers say that they voted there six times apiece in that year.

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. Speaker——[Cries of "Sit down!"]

Mr. COBB. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order. Gentlemen on the other side, with an impertinence that is to be expected from them, say "Sit down!"

Mr. CALKINS. I beg the gentleman from Michigan not to interpose.

Mr. COBB. I did not say "sit down;" and I did not hear it on this side of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I do not care whence the remark comes. When I rise in a parliamentary way to address the Chair, remarks of that kind are unparliamentary.

The SPEAKER. What remarks does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. CONGER. Telling a member to "sit down."

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear such a remark, and does not think, if such was made, it was intended in any offensive sense.

Mr. CONGER. Now, I make this point of order——

Mr. CALKINS. I beg the gentleman not to interpose.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say that if under the head of "personal explanation" the opinions or judgments of any number of men on political questions can be introduced in this way, there is no end to the amount of hearsay and conjecture that may be brought in under that guise.

Mr. COBB. I insist that the gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] stated, in rising, that he desired to make a personal explanation, and he is proceeding under that condition, although, in fact, no objection was made; and the Chair has already inquired of the gentleman who desired to reply how much time he proposed to take in order to be exactly fair to the two sides by allowing equal time to each side on this question precipitated upon the House during this morning's session.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object to the other side being heard, but I do object to this being any question of personal privilege, because it is no such question, and it does encroach on the time and business of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked distinctly of the gentleman from Indiana when he took the floor whether it related to a question of personal privilege, and he understood the gentleman from Indiana to reply that it was such a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CONGER. I so understood the gentleman that it was a question of personal privilege, but I do not believe it is proper for the gentleman, taking the floor on a question of personal explanation, to take the course he is now pursuing. This is a last year's bird's-nest. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to the question of personal privilege.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I say that the republicans of Indiana are better judges of the propriety of this than the gentleman from Michigan, and I trust he will now allow me to go on with what I have to say.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say now in connection with this short article which I had read from the Boston Gazette that the editor of that paper is Colonel Henry G. Parker, who, I presume, is well known to the republican members on this floor from the State of Massachusetts. He is now, as I have already stated, the editor of the Boston Gazette, from which the extract was read, and he was on the staff of Governor Rice, the late governor of that State, and is at present on the staff of Governor Talbott, the present governor. It will be admitted, therefore, I presume, he is pretty good authority, and I shall not comment any further upon it.

But in connection with this I desire to state one further matter as to the vote in Marion County, in which the city of Indianapolis is located. In 1862, in the vote for secretary of state, and I give the vote of the candidates for secretary of state, the highest office voted for that year, the republican vote in that county was 4,844 and the democratic vote 3,863, making a total of 8,707, or a republican majority of 908. In 1864, the year when I insist these soldiers and others illegally voted, the late Senator Morton was the republican candidate for governor, and the present Senator from Indiana, Mr. MCDONALD, on the democratic ticket, and that Morton's total vote was 9,554, while MCDONALD'S was 3,221, being a total vote of 12,775, or a republican increase of 4,710, and a democratic decrease of 642 votes.

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that vote of itself on its face shows an extraordinary state of facts. It shows an extraordinary increase of the vote in that county during a period when many of the voters must necessarily have been in the war and when they were away from home and of course could not cast their votes. Yet notwithstanding all that we find this large increase in the total vote.

I may state that in 1866, two years afterward, that vote was diminished more than two thousand, although as we have already seen, there was an increase in the figures of more than four thousand votes from 1862 to 1864. These facts are sufficient proof of the truth of all that I have stated. And, besides, sir, it must be remembered that the soldiers, in 1866, had returned to their homes from the war and voted, and yet notwithstanding that the vote of 1866 was two thousand less than it was in 1864 during the absence of these soldiers in the war.

In further vindication of the declarations I have made I may state, Mr. Speaker, there is now upon this floor a distinguished gentleman whom I had the pleasure of meeting during the war at Indianapolis, where he was stationed as an officer, discharging his duties as commander of the post at that place. I remember with great pleasure his action in behalf of my friends and those who needed and deserved his kind treatment. I only regret, sir, I did not know until yesterday morning he was the gentleman who had treated my people with such kindness. I will yield now to him to make such statement with regard to the facts which he may know occurred at that election as he may feel disposed to make. I allude to General WARNER, of Ohio, who I believe is in his seat; he was, I know, when I commenced my remarks.

A MEMBER. Here he is.

Mr. COBB. I should be glad if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] would make a statement in regard to the facts which may be within his knowledge.

Mr. WARNER. My friend from Indiana has appealed to me in relation to certain matters——

Mr. KEIFER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Please state it.

Mr. KEIFER. I submit that it is not in order for a gentleman to take the floor to make a personal explanation and then to appeal to his friends all around him and yield the floor to them to make it for him.

The SPEAKER. It may be a part of the explanation. The gentleman from Indiana has occupied thirty minutes in the personal explanation, and he will be kind enough to remember that two members of the other side are to have the same time in which to make reply.

Mr. SPARKS. When a gentleman has the floor to make a personal explanation has he not the right to call upon a colleague in verification of the fact he states?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a suggestion. I trust that there may be no limitation imposed on my colleague in any statement he may desire to make for the purpose of setting himself right in respect to political events in the State of Indiana during that very memorable year 1864. I ask, however, that whatever time may be accorded to him a like time may be accorded to gentlemen representing the opposite party.

Mr. COBB. Certainly, I have no objection to that.

Mr. SPARKS. Nobody can object to that.

Mr. COBB. If the Chair has not ruled against it, I desire that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] be now heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman can yield to a fellow-member and call upon him to corroborate what he has stated, in the same manner in which he might have a paper read in corroboration.

Mr. COBB. The question here is one simply of veracity between members. I have had the statements made by my colleague and myself read for the purpose of presenting that question. There is a question of veracity between myself on the one hand and my colleagues, Mr. BROWNE and Mr. BAKER, on the other.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the question of veracity to be between the gentleman himself and the newspaper.

Mr. COBB. That was the foundation on which I proceeded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not think it was so serious a matter as a question of veracity between members.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] to proceed with his statement.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I press the point of order. I submit, with all respect to the gentleman interested in this question, that its discussion is a waste of the public time. We can get up controversies of this nature in all the States. I can in the form of a personal explanation get up a controversy with some of my colleagues in Pennsylvania on matters which have occurred there. I press the point on the Chair that this is not in order.

Mr. SPARKS. As I understand this matter, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] has charged as a fact that soldiers not belonging to the State of Indiana voted at Indianapolis. That statement has been questioned. Now the gentleman from Indiana whose statement has been questioned calls upon a Union soldier then present to declare that that was the fact. And these gentlemen do not want to have that fact established.

Mr. WHITE. I will not allow the gentleman from Illinois to make a statement of that kind. I have no objection to these gentlemen fighting their battles on the stump ad nauseam if they want to do so. But we are here to-day to do the business of the country as business men.

The SPEAKER. The personal explanation ought to be confined within reasonable limits. There are gentlemen here desirous of having a morning hour. There are others who desire to have a motion submitted to go to business on the Speaker's table. Others desire to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and yet others desire to be recognized to make reports from committees, which committees may have the right to be recognized at any time. Under those circumstances the Chair reminds gentlemen on both sides that there ought to be some limitation to this debate.

Mr. COBB. So I understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] is not allowed to make a statement?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not said so.

Mr. WARNER. My friend from Indiana [Mr. COBB] has appealed to me as to the truth of certain matters which occurred at Indianapolis in the year 1864——

Mr. KEIFER. I rise to a question of order. Do I understand correctly the Chair as having ruled that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] while making a personal explanation is entitled to yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.] If that is so I think the same time should be allowed to gentlemen on the other side.

The SPEAKER. Whatever is granted to the one side shall be granted to the other as far as the Chair is able to control the matter.

Mr. WHITE. What has become of the point of order?

The SPEAKER. What point of order?

Mr. KEIFER. That it is not proper when one gentleman is making a personal explanation for another gentleman to be called in to testify on his behalf.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] speaks in corroboration as a paper would be read in corroboration of the statements of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PRICE. Is it greenback paper? [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE. If the gentleman will allow me I desire to make a suggestion. I am exceedingly anxious to hear what my friend from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has to say. If these gentlemen who manifest so great an anxiety to proceed with the public business will not interrupt this very pleasant proceeding, we will be through in a very short time. We would have been through already perhaps had it not been for the anxiety of gentlemen to be heard who have such infrequent opportunities of obtaining the ear of this House.

Mr. KEIFER. Consent was given that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] should be heard, not that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] should be heard. And if one gentleman from Ohio is to be heard, I suggest that I may be heard also.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The gentleman from Ohio ought to be heard.

Mr. FINLEY. I think Ohio should have a fair hearing.

Mr. WARNER. In answer to my friend from Indiana, I will confine myself strictly to matters of fact as they came under my own observation or came to me in an official way. I was on duty in the city of Indianapolis at the time referred to. I was not present at the polls myself, at the elections in question, although I believe I passed by the voting place once or twice during the day.

Mr. HAZELTON. Then you are not a competent witness.

Mr. WARNER. You can judge of the evidence when you hear it. Certain reports were made to me.

Mr. HAZELTON. That is hearsay evidence.

Mr. WARNER. The facts were made known to me officially. I am not stating that the facts came under my own observation, because they did not. I am only stating what not only was currently reported at the time, but what came to me in an official way through reports of subordinate officers.

I remember of issuing an order on that day to the guard on duty under my command in the city of Indianapolis prohibiting any interference whatever with the elections.

Mr. HAZELTON. Produce that order.

Mr. WARNER. I could produce the order, I think. But let me proceed. It was reported to me and it was, I think, unquestioned at the time, that men belonging to a certain Massachusetts regiment—the Sixtieth Massachusetts, I believe—not under my command, but on duty near the city, at one of the camps, did vote on that day at the polls, and some of them at least, more than once. Some of these men, too, as reported to me, had arms with them. I say this fact came to me in an official way and was, so far as I know, not denied at the time. One thing in particular I remember about it. It was said that when some of them first went to the polls one of the soldiers asked a well-known officer where they were to vote; he told them, pointing to the voting places, "All along there at all those windows,"—I believe there were then six or seven there where the votes were handed in.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to ask the gentleman a single question. Does he not know, having been conversant with matters at Indianapolis, that there was only one voting precinct, and hence, whether, when he heard that soldier's story, he did not know that it was simply a canard?

Mr. WARNER. My friend is mistaken, there were boxes at six or seven windows in the court-house; that at least was my understanding, and that is my recollection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Was the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] in the city of Indianapolis on the day of election?

Mr. WARNER. I only state what was reported to me and what was current at the time. I know there was much complaint and many republicans denounced it. I remember, too, that report was made of some disturbances, but nothing serious, I believe. I have simply felt it my duty on being called upon, now that this matter has come up as a thing of history, to state what I believe to be true. I think at this distance, when the truth of history is involved, it is better that the truth should stand, no matter who is hurt. I think in all matters relating to the history of the war that we should be willing to have only facts go down to history. Posterity is concerned in that. For my part I prefer that when the history of the war is written it shall be a correct history; not distortions and discolorings of the truth for party purposes.

Mr. CONGER. That is better than hearsay.

Mr. FORT. Then will the gentleman give the facts of what he saw, and not of what has been told to him by a soldier who was perhaps drunk?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] is not entitled to the floor and is not in order.

Mr. WARNER. I think that what I have said is true. I think that what I have stated are the facts, and I think they were unquestioned at the time when they were talked about and all the circumstances were known.

Mr. FORT. Why not correct the circumstances now, if they occurred under your own command?

Mr. WARNER. I remember that I issued a very strict order to the troops under my command not to interfere in any way in the election, or to be at the polls with arms, but to confine themselves to the regular duty of preserving order on the part of the military in the city.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman how he came to issue that order?

Mr. WARNER. I did it from a sense of duty as commander of the post and commander of the troops there. Indianapolis at that time was a sort of general rendezvous for troops. Regiments were organized there and troops were constantly passing to and fro, and at that time I remember there were a large number of soldiers in and about the city. The duty of the guards under my command was to do guard duty and to preserve order on the part of the military, and there was danger I thought of disturbance, and extra precautions were taken on that day. I have answered my friend as to the presence of soldiers at the polls at Indianapolis in 1864, and as to their voting, giving the nature and source of my information. In doing so I have not sought to take any part in the controversy which I think has unhappily been brought here.

But before taking my seat I wish to add that I believe it to have been the experience of every officer during the war that when armed bodies of men or men with arms in their hands anywhere are brought in contact with the civil authority or with civilians there is constant danger that the military will not stand always completely subordinated to the civil authority, and I give it as my solemn testimony, derived from my experience during the war, that the dominion or power of arms ought not to be, and cannot safely be, extended in this country. There is no danger that men in arms in time of war will not assume power enough and authority enough. We need no additional laws to that end.

Mr. ROBINSON. I rise to a point of order. I want to know if a discourse upon the right to use the Army to aid the civil power is a part of the personal explanation of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBB.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not; the Chair thinks the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] should confine himself to the personal explanation.

Mr. WARNER. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] if he desires it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not want the floor, and I think that if the gentleman had kept off the floor it would have been better for him.

Mr. WARNER. My friend seems very anxious on my account. Is all his concern for me?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Let him confine himself to the discussion of the silver bill.

Mr. COBB. In my remarks made on the 11th instant, I stated that it was a matter of history that the Massachusetts soldiers did interfere with the election in Indianapolis in 1864, and that I believed that statement to be a fact. That is the substance of what I said at that time. My colleague, Mr. BROWNE, denied that statement, and my colleague, Mr. BAKER, said that he had never heard of it. Now, I take it that from the high character of the evidence I have presented here and of the witnesses to whom I have referred, I am fully vindicated in what I then asserted. I may state that I am not in the habit of asserting as facts what I do not believe to be true. I then believed what I stated was true, and I think I have shown to the House by the evidence I have introduced that it was true.

I therefore shall not trespass further upon the time of the House, and I thank the House for its kind indulgence toward me. I trust that if my colleagues desire to be heard upon this question the House will hear them.

Mr. BROWNE. I shall ask the indulgence of the House if I can get its attention for but a few minutes. The issue out of which this controversy sprung is this: it has been urged by my colleague, [Mr. COBB,] who simply repeats what was said by a distinguished gentleman in the other end of the Capitol, that at the October election of 1864 the Sixtieth Massachusetts Regiment of Infantry appeared at the polls at that place with arms in their hands, and not only voted themselves but forcibly interfered with legal voters who were seeking to exercise the right of suffrage.

Now I have no desire and I disclaim any purpose to raise an issue of veracity with my distinguished colleague. I do not understand him to assert that he knew personally that the statements he made were true, but he simply made them as a matter of public history which he believed. Now I take issue upon the historical fact, and I am here in the presence of this House, in the presence of the country, and in the presence of thousands of men who still survive and who were at Indianapolis on that day, to deny the truth of those statements.

Mr. COBB. If my colleague will allow me——

Mr. BROWNE. Certainly.

Mr. COBB. I desire to state to him that I read it in as many as a dozen newspapers, and especially in the Indiana State Sentinel published at the capital of the State. I read in those papers the facts in substance as I have stated, but much more in detail of course than I have stated them. I admit that it was denied on the part of the republican journals and is still being denied by the Indianapolis Journal, a leading republican paper published in Indiana.

Mr. BROWNE. I certainly cannot controvert the statement of the gentleman when he says that it was alleged in democratic newspapers all over the country that such statements were true; but I desire now to proceed to the facts.

The House will remember that this controversy originated during the discussion upon the propriety of allowing troops to keep the peace at the polls. The purpose of the statement then made, the object of it, was to have it go to the country with a view of impressing upon the public mind the fact that whatever troops were at Indianapolis were there for the purpose of interfering with the election; that they were taken there by republican authority with the view not only that they should themselves vote illegally, but that they should intimidate others who sought to exercise the right of suffrage.

Now, the fact is, and it forms a chapter in the history of Indiana that my friend will not controvert, that during the preceding spring a conspiracy of the most gigantic proportions had been unearthed, by which it was proposed that at a certain time during the coming summer the confederate prisoners at Camp Douglas, in the State of Illinois, and at Camp Morton, in the State of Indiana, should be released; that the State arsenal should be raided and the arms therein placed in the hands of these confederate prisoners; and that they, acting in conjunction with those who sympathized with them, should proceed to subvert the State government.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BROWNE. And to turn it over into the embraces of the rebellion.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COBB. I deny the fact.

The SPEAKER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. COBB. It is that this has nothing to do with the question now pending before the House, or with my explanation. If the gentleman will allow me, I did not charge, in anything that I have said, that troops were sent there by the authorities with the purpose of interfering with the elections. I simply stated the fact that they were there and that they did interfere, and that is the question at issue here. I take it that what the gentleman is now asserting has nothing to do with that question.

Mr. BROWNE. Does my friend deny the truth of the history I have stated?

Mr. COBB. I do state that it is not true, so far as I know. I will state to the gentleman that so far as I am concerned, I never belonged to any such organization as that to which he alludes. I do not believe there was any such organization in my State, having the purpose to perpetrate what the gentleman states, the overthrow of the Government.

Mr. BAKER. My colleague should wait until he is charged before he denies.

Mr. COBB. My distinguished colleague [Mr. BAKER] who has just spoken never saw anything right except on the republican side; he never saw anything good in a democrat.

Mr. BROWNE. I think my friend is through.

Mr. COBB. I do not allude to the gentleman now occupying the floor.

Mr. BROWNE. I asked my friend if he denied the truth of the history to which I have referred. He says he does not believe it. I ask him now if it was not established by such distinguished democrats as Joseph J. Bingham, the former editor of the Indiana Sentinel, a democratic paper——

Mr. COBB. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. BROWNE. And honest Horace Heffern, for a long time State senator from the county of Washington, and now a constituent of my colleague, [Mr. BICKNELL;] and I see that my colleague during this session has introduced a bill to give Heffern a pension, which I hope is not because of any service he rendered the cause of the Knights of the Golden Circle.

Mr. COBB. I will answer the question the gentleman has put, if he will allow me.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] yield?

Mr. BROWNE. No, sir. I will get through in a moment.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman ought not to ask a question, and then refuse to let me answer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BROWNE. I will allow my colleague an opportunity presently.

Mr. Speaker, I was referring to these facts simply to show the reason why the Sixtieth Massachusetts Regiment was quartered at the city of Indianapolis at that time. It was because we were almost in a state of insurrection in the State of Indiana. It was because more than forty thousand men capable of bearing arms had entered into a conspiracy to subvert the State government and turn its power over to the rebellion. It was because the governor of the State believed it necessary that he should bring troops there in order to keep Indiana in line. This is history. I do not say that these conspirators were democrats. I say the proof of the conspiracy was given by distinguished democrats in Indiana; and I say that all those who were arrested, convicted, and sentenced to death were democrats. I say more, that no republican was implicated.

Mr. COBB. Now, if the gentleman will allow me, I will state——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. I will yield for two minutes.

Mr. COBB. Now, I want to state this fact: the evidence taken before the military commission to which my colleague alludes, the commission before which Milligan and Bowles were tried and convicted, shows that a man by the name of Stidger, who was in the employ of Governor Morton and his republican friends in Indiana, went about organizing this organization called the Knights of the Golden Circle, to which my colleague alludes. He would go into Southern Indiana, organize them there, then go into Kentucky and organize them there, and would then return, as the evidence shows, to Heffern and Bowles, find out what they had done, and then go directly to Governor Morton and report to him all that he had learned. This is what the evidence shows in the case of Bowles and Milligan. When the gentleman says that republicans as well as democrats may have engaged in this matter, or that he does not charge that democrats alone were engaged in it, he speaks truly, because republicans were engaged in it as well as democrats. I have not time to explain the matter further.

Mr. BROWNE. My colleague shall not put words into my mouth that I did not employ. I did not say that republicans were engaged in this conspiracy. I said I should not charge that it was a democratic conspiracy; but I distinctly said that every man who was arrested, every man who was tried, every man who was convicted, every man who was sentenced to death, was a democrat. I said more, that no republican was implicated directly or indirectly in this conspiracy.

Mr. COBB. If the gentleman will allow me——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. I did not interrupt my colleague.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BROWNE. I say that the existence of that conspiracy is not controverted to-day in Indiana by any man of any party, the proof was so conclusive, coming as it did from gentlemen who were themselves implicated in the conspiracy and who were prominent and distinguished members and leaders of the great party to which my friend belongs.

Now, I did not intend to dwell so long upon this point in this controversy. I simply state these facts to show why the Sixtieth Massachusetts Regiment was encamped at Indianapolis at the time of the October election in 1864. Now I come to the question, did they interfere?

Mr. COBB. Will my colleague allow me to ask him one question? [Cries of "Sit down!" on the republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has declined to yield.

Mr. BROWNE. The first evidence my colleague introduces on that subject is the fact that the vote was largely increased from 1862 to 1864. Why, sir, my friend is too familiar with Indiana politics to have forgotten the fact that 1862 was what we call in common parlance an "off year." It was not the presidential year. In that "off year" the vote uniformly falls off—especially the republican vote—sometimes to the extent of 20 or 25 per cent.

I desire to call my colleague's attention to another fact which he will remember when I state it: that in 1862 the election was held just under the shadow of the first draft, when many, including a large number of republicans, refused to vote. Eighteen hundred and sixty-six was another "off year"—not the presidential year. If I had anticipated this controversy this morning I could bring statistics before the House to show that the difference between the vote of 1862, 1864, and 1866 was by no means remarkable in the history of Indiana politics.

What next? A letter is introduced from General Love, a very excellent gentleman. I know him well, and I would not challenge his veracity for a moment. Now, it is true that General Love was a candidate for Congress in that year on the democratic ticket. It is equally true that at the election, and in the latter part of the day, he was interfered with. It is equally true that this interference was by persons wearing the United States uniform. The city of Indianapolis was a military camp during most of the year 1864. It was the point of rendezvous for all the Indiana regiments. They were almost all of them organized there. It was the point where were stationed our convalescent soldiers, and on that day and on every day during that year hundreds of soldiers wearing the United States uniform were in the streets of that city. And my friend ought to know another fact, that in 1864 all of the soldiers who could be spared from the Army were allowed to return to their homes, for the purpose of voting the republican ticket, if you please. They were allowed to come home, sir, to Indianapolis, for Indianapolis had contributed a large quota of troops to the Union Army, and hundreds of men on that day were about the polls and in the streets of that city wearing the uniform of the Government but who belonged to that city.

Now, what were the facts? I ask the Clerk to read two extracts from the paper which I have marked. I send up a statement, published next day after this election of 1864, to show what brought about the interference General Love speaks of in his letter at the time when it was fresh in his mind. General Love gave the following account of it over his own signature on the day after that election.

The Clerk read as follows:

Understanding that a suggestion has been made to some of my personal friends that the cause of the attempt to mob me at the polls yesterday was the distribution by me of spurious tickets, I feel called upon briefly to state the facts. While engaged in pleasant and friendly conversation with two gentlemen of the opposite party I was approached by a crowd headed by one whom I thought from his appearance to be drunk, (and I blush when I say that several of those insulting me were dressed in the uniform I have myself worn for many years with pride,) who demanded the surrender of the tickets in my possession. I told them they could have one each if they would vote it, but no more. Nor did they get more. Seeing a guard of the veteran corps, I claimed the protection I knew I would receive. After the guard were marched from the ground, and having no security of protection from further insult and violence, I left the ground and did not return.

The day after the election the Sentinel, the democratic organ, said:

On yesterday, while the election was progressing quietly, the republicans, seeing the democrats were polling a large vote, commenced crowding round those holding democratic tickets, with the cry of "Take the tickets," "Go for them," &c., and soon compelled such well-known citizens as W. H. Talbott, General Love, Sam Delzell, and others to leave the ground or quit distributing tickets.

Mr. BROWNE. I wish to call the attention of the House particularly to this statement, not that I conceive it in any essential particular differs from the statement General Love has made in his letter; I do not call it in for the purpose of contradicting what he has written, but I do it for the purpose of showing that on the day after the election, over his own signature, all he charged was that on that day it was alleged by some person that in the after part of the day he was peddling spurious tickets, and that some persons wearing the uniform of the United States came to him and demanded he should surrender those tickets. He said he would give to each one a ticket if he would vote it, and he did no more than that; and then that a controversy arose by which it became necessary for him to leave the ground.

It is a fact of history, not to be controverted by General Love or anybody else, that the difficulty between him and the soldiers, whether of an Indiana or Massachusetts regiment, but perhaps some Indianapolis soldiers who knew the facts, was that it was alleged he had taken and printed the regular republican ticket, leaving off the name of the republican candidate for Congress and inserting his own in place of it, and that that created the controversy. It was charged by the republicans that General Love did it. I do not say he did it; I say it was charged that he did it, that he was peddling these tickets, and that led to the controversy by which he was driven from the ground under the circumstances he states.

Now, the second paragraph which was read by the Clerk was not from General Love's card, but is an extract of an editorial of the Indianapolis Sentinel, the leading democratic paper of Indianapolis and of Indiana—a statement which my friend will not controvert. I will read again:

> On yesterday, while the election was progressing quietly, the republicans, seeing the democrats were polling a large vote, commenced crowding around those holding democratic tickets with the cry of "Take the tickets!" "Go for them!" &c., and soon compelled such well-known citizens as W. H. Talbott, General Love, Samuel Delzell, and others, to leave the ground or quit distributing tickets.

The election, said the Sentinel, was progressing quietly. What next? The democrats were polling an unusually large vote. This occurred in the after part of the day at the time when the Sixtieth Massachusetts Regiment was there under arms for the purpose of deterring democrats from voting! That is what the Indianapolis Sentinel says, and the gentleman will not for a moment question its orthodoxy. What next?

Mr. COBB. What paper are you reading from?

Mr. BROWNE. I have the Indianapolis Journal, sir. I am not asking the gentleman or any other gentleman in the House to credit what it says except so far as they may believe its statement to be true. It is hardly probable any paper would publish forged cards and pretended interviews with distinguished citizens of Indianapolis right within sight of their residences and business houses. The gentleman will not insist any paper would publish under the circumstances that which never occurred.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the Senate had passed a resolution that 12,000 extra copies of the report and proceedings of the Paris monetary conference held in August last be printed and bound in cloth; in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced it had agreed to the amendments of the House to a bill (S. No. 697) to establish additional post-routes in Florida, with amendments, in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced it had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2329) authorizing the National Bank of Conway, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.

It further announced the adoption of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BROWNE. Before I refer to the statements of these distinguished gentlemen of Indianapolis, I desire to allude to another fact to which my attention was called by the distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. MCCOOK.]

General Love himself states that when he became involved in this controversy about the charge that was made against him of peddling spurious tickets, when he sought protection he fled under the shadow of the Veteran Reserve Corps soldiers of the Union Army who were present on that occasion and about the polls at the city of Indianapolis.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I will say that I hold in my hand a copy of the Indianapolis Journal of June 19, in which there are to be found interviews with such gentlemen as John C. S. Harrison, one of the leading bankers of the city of Indianapolis; E. G. Cornelius, of the wholesale house of Bryan, Cornelius & Co., on Pearl street, and Mr. Bryan, of the same firm; A. L. Wright, head of the firm of A. L. Wright & Co.; George Sloan, of the firm of Browning & Sloan, the principal wholesale druggists of the city of Indianapolis; W. G. Smock, for a long time clerk of the Marion County circuit court; Colonel W. R. Holloway, postmaster; Colonel Fred. Boggs, present collector of internal revenue; Mr. Vanlaningham, secretary of the Citizens Gas-Light and Coke Company; Hon. Samuel Hanway, treasurer of Marion County; Mr. E. W. Halford, for a long time one of the editors of this paper. My colleague knows many of these men. I know the gentleman who has the honor to represent the metropolitan district of Indiana will bear testimony that, barring their politics, they are most exemplary and reliable gentlemen. They are republicans; they have that political bias which my friend General Love has, and other gentlemen who have testified on the other side, and no more. But they are the peers in all respects of any of the gentlemen whose letters or statements have been put before the House since the beginning of this controversy. And these men are old citizens of Indianapolis. Many of them were born there. They had lived there for years and had taken an interest in the politics of the State. They were present at the polls on that election day from early morning until late in the evening. They state that they saw all that happened in the court-house yard and in that vicinity, and that it was a quiet, orderly, peaceable, well-conducted election, in all respects equal to any that has been held in Indianapolis or any other city, East or West, within a decade.

I do not read their statements; I do not care to encumber the RECORD with them. My friend has them before him. There were simply two disturbances on that day: one which has been spoken of by General Love in regard to peddling the alleged spurious tickets, and another between a soldier and a man who voted a ticket with a butternut attached to it. When this man had put the ticket with the butternut attached to it into the ballot-box, without having been interfered with, he said, "Them's my sentiments;" and the soldier walked up and, hitting him in the butt of the ear, said, "And them's mine." [Applause.] I do not know that the soldier did right; but when a man dared to parade the insignia of disloyalty in the presence of a soldier who was periling his life in the defense of the Government I think he might be pardoned for a little indiscretion of the kind.

I have said all I desire to say. I disclaim any purpose of raising any question of personal veracity with my distinguished colleague, who is as incapable of stating an untruth as I believe myself to be. He has stated what he supposes to have been the facts. I have given some of the evidence on which I base my denial of the imputation made against the Sixtieth Massachusetts Regiment, or any other soldier who was at Indianapolis during the election of that year.

Mr. BAKER rose.

Mr. HERBERT. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HUMPHREY. There is no call of States to-day, and I hope the gentleman from Indiana will be permitted to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The understanding was when this debate commenced that when one side had been heard, the other side should be heard also. It is no more than fair that that understanding should be carried out.

Mr. HERBERT. I thought both sides had been heard.

Mr. BAKER. Charges have been distinctly made against me by name, and remarks made by me on a former occasion have been quoted and animadverted upon on the other side. Under those circumstances does the gentleman from Alabama think it perfectly fair, courteous, and proper that I should not be permitted to say a word in response?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana on the right [Mr. COBB] held the floor for forty-five minutes. There have been already consumed on the other side thirty minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. I wish to say this, that I have no intention or desire to be discourteous to gentlemen on either side of the House. I only demanded the regular order because I supposed both sides had been heard from. According to the intimation of the Chair, the gentleman from Indiana who is now on the floor has fifteen minutes. The time will then have been equally divided between the two sides. At the end of the fifteen minutes, I give notice that I shall demand the regular order.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to say that I hardly think I shall want five minutes. My colleague [Mr. BROWNE] has already gone at length into the question that is involved in the matter brought forward by the gentleman from the Vincennes district, and I have no disposition to go into that matter particularly. But I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that when the gentleman complains about any statement that I made on a former occasion in respect to interference with voters in the State of Indiana I think the mass of the people in Indiana will bear witness to the fact that if there was an interference with the right of the people to vote, that interference did not grow out of the use of armed men wearing the uniform and bearing the colors of the United States.

I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that at the city of Indianapolis and at other points in the State of Indiana in the year 1834, in consequence of the soldiers of Indiana not being enabled by any law to vote in the Army as they were permitted to vote in other States, soldiers were seen at the polls voting. They were sent home by thousands and tens of thousands—soldiers who had been republicans and soldiers who had been democrats in the year 1862 were sent home—and they were found at every polling-place from one end of the State to the other. They were not found armed, but they were found wearing the Army blue. They were democrats and republicans who were wearing the Army blue, and they came back and voted for that great man, the soldiers' friend, Senator Morton, as against that other man, Senator MCDONALD, a gentleman who, whatever he may be called now, was not then claimed to be the soldiers' friend. It was then believed, and I am making this statement for the purpose of showing why a larger vote was polled for Mr. Morton in 1864 than the republican party had polled in 1862, it was believed then, not only by the republicans, but by thousands and thousands of democrats who were in the Army fighting for the flag, that the organization of the Knights of the Golden Circle, if not actually led by the men who are the leaders of the democracy to-day, was known of and sympathized in by the leaders of that party. That was the belief in Indiana at that time. And is it surprising that when men who were fighting to put down treason came home to vote, although they had gone into the Army as democrats, and on thus coming back to our State found the belief was universal that the leaders of the old party to which they had belonged were endeavoring to carry the State into the arms of the rebellion, they should have changed and voted for the man who was giving all his transcendent powers to uphold the flag of the Union?

I read from the RECORD of June 18, 1879, to show what was the belief at that time and what accounts for the change in the vote, so that my friend and colleague need not have been surprised at it:

Jake Thompson thought that sending those soldiers into Indiana prevented the uprising of the "Sons of Liberty" at that particular time, and we have the complaint made here to-day that a Massachusetts regiment was in Indiana for that purpose. Thompson proceeds:

"A large sum of money has been expended in fostering these operations, and it now seems to have been to little profit."

The treason so discovered was exposed in the campaign of 1864, and the democratic party was borne down by the damning and treasonable record that was made by those Knights of the Golden Circle.

And that is not all, Mr. Speaker. The Legislature of Indiana, a democratic Legislature, in the winter of 1863 undertook to pass a resolution for the purpose of sending commissioners to treat with the confederate government with a view to the neutrality of the State of Indiana and the withdrawing of her soldiers from the battle-field in the defense of the country.

A MEMBER. Who was the author of that resolution?

Mr. BAKER. It was George S. Brown, of Wells County, if my memory serves me right.

Mr. COBB. I want to ask whether it is in order for the gentleman to make statements which are not in reply to anything which I said?

The SPEAKER. It is impossible for the Chair to run the line to say what is in the argument and illustrations of the gentleman.

Mr. COBB. But I did not allude to the subject to which the gentleman refers.

The SPEAKER. Oh, that is not a point of order.

Mr. BAKER. The gentleman cannot get up an issue of veracity with me, although he may get up such an issue with history. Those historical facts are too well known. The question is why the democratic party polled a less vote in Indiana in 1864 than it did in 1862.

Mr. COBB rose.

Mr. BAKER. I cannot yield to the gentleman; I am not saying anything about the gentleman.

Mr. COBB. But the gentleman insists that I made a statement which I did not make.

Mr. BAKER. The RECORD will show about that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] declines to yield to his colleague.

Mr. BAKER. The point made against me grew out of the fact that more votes were polled for the republican party in 1864 than in 1862; and I will undertake to show the reason why more votes were polled in one year than the other.

I was undertaking to show the reason why there were more republican votes then polled. There are other reasons I might mention, but it is enough for me to say that whenever the democratic politicians of Indiana want to go back to the war period for the purpose of obtaining garments of loyalty with which to clothe themselves in order to hide their nakedness, they have chosen a time that is peculiarly unfortunate for them. If there ever was a State where there was imminent danger of its being torn from its orbit in the Union and plunged into the mad gulf of rebellion by treason, by conspiracy, by the use of confederate money, it was the State of Indiana under the manipulation of men who then trained in the democratic party and who have voted solidly the democratic ticket from that time to this.

Mr. WARNER. Was confederate money current in Indiana then?

Mr. SAPP. Oh, keep still.

Mr. BAKER. My friend always is speaking on the financial question. If my friend would only give testimony in reference to the arrest of some of his present democratic associates, with whom he then disagreed—I mean the democratic Knights of the Golden Circle—if he had given that testimony when he was giving his testimony to aid my colleague on the other side he would have said something that might have been valuable to history.

Mr. WARNER. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. BAKER. I cannot yield. It may be troublesome for my friend from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] to give testimony on that subject, and I will not be guilty of the cruelty of asking him to do it.

Mr. WARNER. It is no cruelty.

Mr. BAKER. But it would have been fair on his part if he had given the names and pedigree of those eminent Knights of the Golden Circle, those democrats whom, when he was wearing the loyal blue, he arrested among the cohorts of democracy in Indiana. But he could not find time to talk about that.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman allow me now one word on that?

Mr. BAKER. Sit down, please; you have had your day in court. No, my friend could not talk about that; but he had to give a backhanded blow, and hurl a parting dart at the soldiers, the loyal men in blue, with whom he was then acting.

Mr. WARNER. Let me state a fact.

Mr. BAKER. Sit down, if you please; I cannot yield to the gentleman. I regret to see that my friend has so far forgotten the lofty inspirations by which he was actuated at that time that now, in order to put himself on terms of good-fellowship with those he was fighting against then, he must get down humbly before them and hurl back over his shoulders his darts against the loyal soldiers with whom he was then associated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER. I claim the right, Mr. Speaker, to the floor to reply to the gentleman——[Cries of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. WARNER. I demand it as a personal privilege——

Mr. DE LA MATYR. As Indianapolis is my home——[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DE LA MATYR] desires to be heard.

Mr. SPARKS. Common fairness requires that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] should have a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DE LA MATYR] desires a moment.

Mr. SPARKS. To reply to the speech, full of venom, of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with the controversy.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. As Indianapolis is my home and the center of the district I represent, I have listened to this controversy with special interest and intensest pain. I have not risen to add a single word to this controversy, but to utter my earnest protest against uncovering the dead.

A MEMBER. Ah! that is too bad.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Yes, I say it. I gave three years of earnest, devoted work to the war. I have not been fighting ghosts since, and I despise and loathe this fighting of ghosts. [Applause on the democratic side.]

Mr. WARNER. As a question of privilege——

Many MEMBERS. Regular order! Regular order!

Mr. WARNER. I claim the floor on a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question to the House.

Mr. WARNER. I ask for only five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] has charged that in bearing the testimony I have borne here this morning——

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. Objection is made, unless time is given to reply.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this personal explanation has occupied a good deal of the time of the House.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] has placed me in a false position, and I ought to be allowed a moment to reply.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There have been reflections cast upon the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] and the House should grant him that privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no objection.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, and others. Regular order!

Mr. WARNER. My friend from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] has sought to place me in a false position. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"] In rising to answer the appeal of my friend from Indiana [Mr. COBB] as to a matter of fact I deny that I said—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. KEIFER. I insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will suspend for a moment. Objection is made to his proceeding. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The regular order is demanded.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a point of order. I submit that if the gentleman from Ohio rises to a question of personal privilege, as he states, the objection of his colleague [Mr. KEIFER] cannot take him off the floor.

The SPEAKER. The understanding was that each side should have equal time. Each side has had forty-five minutes, making one hour and a half in all. The Chair thinks this is the extent to which the House gave its consent.

Mr. KENNA. I have no reference whatever to any understanding on the part of the House heretofore. I refer to the attitude of the gentleman from Ohio in rising now to a question of personal privilege. I submit that if he does so at this time he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WARNER. An attack of a personal nature has been made upon me.

Mr. SHELLEY. I move that the House adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SHELLEY, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 66, noes 78. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio claims the privilege of rising to a personal explanation. How much time does he desire?

Mr. WARNER. Three minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I object.

Mr. ACKLEN. The objection cannot avail in a case of this kind. The gentleman from Ohio distinctly states that he rises to a question of personal privilege. That is a right possessed by every member of the House which no other member can take from him.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read from the rule on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

A matter of privilege arising out of any question, or from a quarrel between two members, or any other cause, supersedes the consideration of the original question, and must be first disposed of.—Manual, p. 75.

Whenever the Speaker is of the opinion that a question of privilege is involved in a proposition, he must entertain it in preference to any other business.—Journal, 1, 29, p. 724. [Such opinion, of course, being subject to an appeal.] And when a proposition is submitted which relates to the privileges of the House, it is his duty to entertain it, at least to the extent of submitting the question to the House as to whether or not it presents a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit to the House the question whether this is a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CONGER. And I suppose the question of consideration at this time can be raised?

Mr. KENNA. I would like to know what question the Speaker is to submit to the House?

The SPEAKER. The question whether the gentleman from Ohio shall be heard.

Mr. KENNA. Upon what?

The SPEAKER. On a question of privilege.

Mr. KENNA. The question to be submitted to the House should be whether the question is one of privilege, and how can that question be submitted to the House until the gentleman has stated it?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman stated it.

Mr. KENNA. He simply stated that he rose to a question of personal privilege; he has not yet stated what that question is.

The SPEAKER. The House heard the statement.

Mr. KENNA. I do not know whether the House heard it or not.

The SPEAKER. It was made in the presence of the House.

Mr. KENNA. The gentleman from Ohio has not made such a statement. I do not know, and the House cannot know, what the gentleman's question of privilege is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] was not here, perhaps, when the statement was made.

Mr. KENNA. I have heard what has happened; but I do not know and the House cannot know whether the question of privilege on which the gentleman now rises is the question that has been before the House or another question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this matter has already occupied the full extent of the time which the House wished to give to it; and the House, if it wants further time occupied in the discussion of the subject, must take the responsibility. The Chair is unwilling longer to do it.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the question of privilege insisted upon to be this: my colleague [Mr. WARNER] put himself into the jaws of a discussion, and somebody disputed something he said. Now he wants to get up and carry on the controversy upon the claim that it is a question of privilege.

Mr. WARNER. No, sir; I ask no such privilege.

Mr. HAZELTON. The gentleman has had his day in court as a volunteer witness; and he cannot come in here now as a matter of privilege to explain what he has said. He is discharged from further attendance upon the court.

Mr. WARNER. A gentleman on the floor has made a charge which I denounce as untrue and unfair. Do gentlemen on the other side think they can afford to take the position of refusing me three minutes to answer that charge?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question to the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman from Ohio wishes only three minutes; I hope he may have that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman three minutes?

Mr. CONGER. With the understanding that there shall be three minutes for a reply.

Mr. KEIFER. I make no objection if an equal time be allowed for a reply.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] because in response to an appeal made to me by his colleague as to the truth of certain matters in controversy I stated what I believed to be the facts, and nothing more, has taken it upon himself to reflect upon the consistency of my doing so, if not upon my motives. I repel the imputation as uncalled for. I am quite willing to compare records with the gentleman, both during the war and since. Is it because the truth hits or because facts militate against the gentleman's present notions of what his party requires that he objects to having the truth stated? Does he prefer that what is not true should go down to history as the truth? I know nothing of the gentleman's military record, or whether he has any or not, but I have noted often that the less conspicuous one was during the war the more ready he is likely to be to charge inconsistency upon those who chance to differ with him now.

I prefer to have those who knew me then and have known me since to judge of my course. I stand now where I stood then, the reflections of the gentleman to the contrary notwithstanding. As to other matters which the gentleman has referred to in connection with the presence of troops at the polls, I said nothing.

Mr. HAZELTON. What were the tenets of the order? [Laughter on the republican side.]

Mr. WARNER. If I could go into that matter, or if called upon to state what I knew respecting it, I think I should be able to establish some facts and at the same time to dispel a vast amount of fiction. But as the mere mention of these incidents is so likely to give the nightmare to gentlemen on that side I think that it better be left to the cooler treatment of the historian rather than be brought in here. This is all I wish to say now.

Mr. BAKER rose.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let us have the regular order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. ACKLEN. Let the other side have three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The understanding was that the other side should have three minutes to reply.

Mr. BAKER. I am not going to occupy three minutes nor one minute. All I wish to say is that the gentleman is in the condition of a man who, waking from a sleep, thinks he occupies the precise situation to-day he did in 1864; that there are very few men in this country who will not regard him simply as a political Rip Van Winkle who has gone to sleep in the vanguard of liberty in the ranks of the republican party and waked up on the other side. [Laughter and applause on the republican side.]

PROHIBITION OF POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been demanded, the morning hour now begins at two minutes past two o'clock, and the unfinished business is the bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes.

Mr. WILSON. Is it in order to move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana in charge of the bill has demanded the previous question, and the Chair recognizes that gentleman as having charge.

Mr. WILSON. Is it in order for me to make that motion?

The SPEAKER. It is not, as the previous question is pending.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to the reference of this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I have made the proposition on several occasions.

Mr. CONGER. I object to discussion.

Mr. HOSTETLER. Let it go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it can be discussed. I have made that motion several times, but I understand gentlemen on the other side object to it. I now withdraw the demand for the previous question and move the reference of the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, if that be the wish of the other side.

Mr. CONGER. Has the gentleman from Indiana the right to make that motion?

The SPEAKER. He has a right to withdraw the demand for the previous question, and then to make the motion which he has made.

Mr. HOSTETLER. And on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. We will take the previous question on that as well as the other, or we will try. [Laughter.]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, none in the negative.

Mr. CONGER. There is no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point there is no quorum voting, and in consequence the Chair will order tellers, and appoints Mr. HAYES and Mr. HOSTETLER.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is unnecessary to go through this formula again.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a proposition to the other side that if this bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union it cannot be reached for consideration at this session.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order will be proceeded with.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman wishes, then, to obstruct all general business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and that cuts off debate.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the gentleman interjecting remarks when the regular order is demanded.

The House divided; and there were ayes 66, and none in the negative.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made of the want of a quorum there are two motions only in order, one that the House adjourn and the other that there be a call of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I again renew the request to the other side that this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHITE. I object to debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not debating it at all, but I wish to make the proposition that this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House [cries of "Regular order!"] until next session.

Mr. WHITE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. No motion has been made.

Mr. FINLEY. I move there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. By the sound the "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. WHITE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 5.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Aldrich, N. W.	Dick,	Ladd,	Singleton, J. W.
Atherton,	Dickey,	Lay,	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Bailey,	Dunn,	Le Fevre,	Speer,
Ballou,	Dwight,	Lewis,	Starin,
Barlow,	Einstein,	Lindsey,	Stephens,
Belford,	Fisher,	Loring,	Stone,
Beltzhoover,	Frost,	Miles,	Talbott,
Bingham,	Frye,	Miller,	Thomas,
Bland,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Tucker,
Bliss,	Godshalk,	Money,	Turner, Thomas
Blount,	Goode,	Morse,	Valentine,
Boyd,	Hall,	Morton,	Van Voorhis,
Bragg,	Harmer,	Muller,	Waddill,
Brigham,	Harris, John T.	Newberry,	Washburn,
Buckner,	Hawk,	O'Brien,	Weaver,
Butterworth,	Hayes,	O'Reilly,	Wells,
Cabell,	Heilman,	Pierce,	White,
Camp,	Hooker,	Prescott,	Wilber,
Carlisle,	Hunton,	Reed,	Williams, C. G.
Chalmers,	James,	Rice,	Williams, Thomas
Chittenden,	Kelley,	Richardson, D. P.	Wood, Fernando
Claflin,	Ketcham,	Robeson,	Wood, Walter A.
Clark, Alvah A.	Killinger,	Rothwell,	Young, Thomas L.
Cox,	Kitchin,	Ryan, Thomas
Crowley,	Knott,	Sherwin,

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CLYMER.) The call of the roll shows that 189 members are present.

Mr. CONGER. Have the names been read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not usual to report the names. The names of the absentees have been called. The Doorkeeper will now close the door.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question being put, the Speaker pro tempore announced that from the sound the "noes" had it.

Mr. CONGER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 52.

So the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was agreed to.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Tuesday next.

The question being put, the Speaker pro tempore announced that by the sound the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Several members called for a division.

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw the motion.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Public Lands. The purpose of the bill is to equalize citizens and soldiers in their rights to the public lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No request of that kind is entertained during the morning hour.

Mr. CONVERSE. If I can get unanimous consent, would it not be in order to make such a report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order even to ask unanimous consent during the morning hour.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2252) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses.

PROHIBITION OF POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on seconding the demand for the previous question upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] to refer the bill he has reported to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By the sound the "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 96, noes 57.

Mr. COVERT and Mr. SPRINGER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 83, nays 100, not voting 103; as follows:

YEAS—83.

Aldrich, William	Barber,	Bowman,	Carpenter,
Anderson,	Bayne,	Brewer,	Caswell,
Armfield,	Bicknell,	Briggs,	Conger,
Atkins,	Blake,	Browne,	Cook,
Baker,	Bouck,	Cannon,	Cowgill,
Crapo,	Hawk,	Mills,	Ryon, John W.
Culberson,	Hazelton,	Mitchell,	Shallenberger,
Daggett,	Henderson,	Myers,	Shelley,
Davis, George R.	Herndon,	Neal,	Sherwin,
Deering,	Horr,	Norcross,	Slemons,
Errett,	Hubbell,	O'Connor,	Thomas,
Farr,	Humphrey,	Orth,	Thompson,
Field,	Joyce,	Osmer,	Updegraff, Thomas
Forney,	Lapham,	Overton,	Upson,
Forsythe,	Marsh,	Poehler,	Urner,
Fort,	Martin, Joseph J.	Pound,	Voorhis,
Garfield,	Mason,	Price,	Wait,
Hammond, John	McCoid,	Reagan,	Wellborn,
Hammond, N. J.	McCook,	Richardson, D. P.	White,
Harris, Benj. W.	McKenzie,	Russell, Daniel L.	Yocum.
Haskell,	McKinley,	Russell, W. A.

NAYS—100.

Acklen,	Evins,	Manning,	Singleton, O. R.
Aiken,	Felton,	Martin, Benj. F.	Smith, A. Herr
Bachman,	Ferdon,	Martin, Edward L.	Smith, William E.
Beale,	Finley,	McGowan,	Sparks,
Blackburn,	Geddes,	McLane,	Springer,
Bliss,	Gibson,	McMahon,	Steele,
Bright,	Gillette,	McMillin,	Stevenson,
Burrows,	Gunter,	Monroe,	Talbott,
Caldwell,	Hatch,	Morrison,	Taylor,
Clardy,	Hawley,	Murch,	Tillman,
Clark, John B.	Henkle,	New,	Townshend, R. W.
Clymer,	Henry,	Nicholls,	Turner, Oscar
Cobb,	Herbert,	O'Neill,	Updegraff, J. T.
Colerick,	Hill,	Persons,	Van Aernam,
Converse,	Hiscock,	Phelps,	Vance,
Covert,	Hostetler,	Phister,	Ward,
Cravens,	Houk,	Richardson, J. S.	Warner,
Davidson,	House,	Richmond,	Whiteaker,
Davis, Joseph J.	Hull,	Robertson,	Whitthorne,
Davis, Loundes H.	Johnston,	Robinson,	Willis,
De La Matyr,	Jones,	Ross,	Willits,
Deuster,	Jorgensen,	Samford,	Wilson,
Dibrell,	Keifer,	Sawyer,	Wise,
Dunnell,	Klotz,	Scales,	Wright,
Elam,	Lowe,	Simonton,	Young, Casey.

NOT VOTING—103.

Aldrich, N. W.	Dick,	Kimmel,	Rothwell,
Atherton,	Dickey,	King,	Ryan, Thomas
Bailey,	Dunn,	Kitchin,	Sapp,
Ballou,	Dwight,	Knott,	Singleton, J. W.
Barlow,	Einstein,	Ladd,	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Belford,	Ellis,	Lay,	Speer,
Beltzhoover,	Ewing,	Le Fevre,	Starin,
Bingham,	Fisher,	Lewis,	Stephens,
Bland,	Ford,	Lindsey,	Stone,
Blount,	Frost,	Loring,	Townsend, Amos
Boyd,	Frye,	Lounsbery,	Tucker,
Bragg,	Godshalk,	Miles,	Turner, Thomas
Brigham,	Goode,	Miller,	Tyler,
Buckner,	Hall,	Money,	Valentine,
Butterworth,	Harmer,	Morse,	Van Voorhis,
Cabell,	Harris, John T.	Morton,	Waddill,
Calkins,	Hayes,	Muldrow,	Washburn,
Camp,	Heilman,	Muller,	Weaver,
Carlisle,	Hooker,	Newberry,	Wells,
Chalmers,	Hunton,	O'Brien,	Wilber,
Chittenden,	Hurd,	O'Reilly,	Williams, C. G.
Claflin,	James,	Pierce,	Williams, Thomas
Clark, Alvah A.	Kelley,	Prescott,	Wood, Fernando
Coffroth,	Kenna,	Reed,	Wood, Walter A.
Cox,	Ketcham,	Rice,	Young, Thomas L.
Crowley,	Killinger,	Robeson,

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey, and my colleague, Mr. MULLER, is paired with Mr. HEILMAN, of Indiana.

Mr. BEALE. My colleague, Mr. HUNTON, is paired with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island.

Mr. MULDROW. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York.

Mr. WHITEAKER. I am requested to announce that Mr. COX, of New York, is paired with his colleague, Mr. MORTON.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. My colleague, Mr. KITCHIN, is paired with Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. FORNEY. My colleague, Mr. LEWIS, is paired with Mr. LORING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. CALDWELL. My colleague, Mr. CARLISLE, is paired with Mr. MILLER, of New York.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. LADD, of Maine, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with his colleague, Mr. LINDSEY.

Mr. HURD. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CLAFLIN. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, is paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut.

Mr. HILL. My colleague, Mr. ATHERTON, is paired with Mr. NEWBERRY, of Michigan.

Mr. ELLIS. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. HARMER. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. PHISTER. My colleague, Mr. THOMAS TURNER, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. My colleague, Mr. KNOTT, is absent from the House by reason of sickness, and is paired with Mr. FRYE, of Maine.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. Mr. ATHERTON, of Ohio, is paired with Mr. NEWBERRY, of Michigan.

Mr. MANNING. My colleague, Mr. MONEY, is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan.

Mr. RICHMOND. My colleague, Mr. GOODE, is paired with Mr. GODSHALK.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My colleague, Mr. HARRIS, is paired with Mr. CROWLEY, of New York.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, is paired with Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York.

Mr. WAIT. My colleague, Mr. MILES, is paired with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois; both gentlemen are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. LORING, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama.

Mr. HASKELL. My colleague, Mr. RYAN, is paired with Mr. CONVERSE, of Ohio.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that Mr. FINLEY is paired with his colleague, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, and also that my colleague, Mr. MORSE, is paired with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. McGOWAN. My colleague, Mr. STONE, is paired with Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi; and Mr. STARIN, of New York, is paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.

Mr. WARD. My colleague, Mr. GODSHALK, is paired with Mr. GOODE, of Virginia.

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleagues, Mr. WASHBURN and Mr. POEHLER, are paired.

Mr. PHISTER. I was requested this morning by Mr. COX, of New York, to announce to the House that he has been called home because of the illness of his mother.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. FROST, is detained at home by sickness in his family.

Mr. SAPP. I am paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama.

Mr. BREWER. My colleague, Mr. NEWBERRY, is paired with Mr. ATHERTON, of Ohio.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I desire to announce that Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, is paired with Mr. HUNTON, of Virginia.

Mr. GUNTER. My colleague, Mr. DUNN, is confined to his room by sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 2327) to authorize the renewal of a loan therein named by the joint stock company of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, his secretary, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 1369) to relieve the churches of the District of Columbia and to clear the title of the trustees of such property;

An act (H. R. No. 2251) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved March 3, 1879, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 34) to print 5,000 copies of the final reports of the United States centennial commission upon the international exhibition and centennial celebration of 1876; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 87) relating to a bridge across the Detroit River, at or near Detroit, Michigan.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 2267) providing for the binding of the internal-revenue laws and manual.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 675) to provide the necessary room for the National Board of Health and for the publication of its reports and papers, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 712) providing for filling vacancies in the office of Chief of Engineers, United States Army; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 38) to pay Professor Peter Collier for services as chemist in the prosecution of the evasions of the duties on sugar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move now to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. McGOWAN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McGOWAN. The House, by unanimous consent, yesterday ordered that to-day (after the morning hour) should be for the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Infectious and Contagious Diseases. That is now the regular order, and I ask that it be taken up.

The SPEAKER, (having resumed the chair.) The Chair thinks that when that order was made yesterday, unanimous consent was not given that it should cut off the motion to go to business on the Speaker's table. The rule, which will be read, provides that at the expiration of the morning hour shall be the only time when the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ROBERTSON,] to proceed to business on the Speaker's table shall be in order; and it provides that it shall be in order at that time, even to the extent of taking a member off the floor. The rule will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After one hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees and resolutions, it shall be in order, pending the consideration or discussion thereof, to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to dispose of the business on the Speaker's table.—Rule 54. [The "hour" known as the "morning hour" is construed to begin from the announcement by the Speaker to the House that reports of committees are in order, and it is not necessary that resolutions shall have been called for. It is an invariable practice, too, to permit a member, upon the expiration of the morning hour, to take the floor, even though another may be occupying it, to make the motion to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.]

The motion to go to business on the Speakers's table being decided in the affirmative, the Speaker shall dispose of it in the following order.

The SPEAKER. In the order prescribed by Rule 54.

Mr. McGOWAN. Then I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The proper way to do that is to vote down the motion to go to business on the Speaker's table. Those who are opposed to proceeding to business on the Speaker's table of course will vote "no;" and that will raise practically the question of consideration.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. After we get to the Speaker's table, is there any way of raising the question of consideration as between two bills?

The SPEAKER. No, sir; the bills will be taken up in their order on the Speaker's table; in the order prescribed by rule 54.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question being taken on the motion to go to business on the the Speaker's table, there were—ayes 70, noes 42; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VAN AERNAM and Mr. ROBERTSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 107, noes 38.

So the motion was agreed to.

POST-ROADS.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 697) to establish additional post-roads in the State of Florida.

Mr. COOK. I move that the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House be concurred in.

Mr. BAKER. Is there any legislation in this bill except the establishment of post-roads?

Mr. COOK. None whatever.

The amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House were concurred in.

Mr. COOK moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I believe the title of this bill was amended when last before the House so as to read "An act to establish post-roads in certain States therein named."

The SPEAKER. That amendment to the title is now concurred in.

PORTRAITS, ETC., FROM BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1989) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, at the request of a Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, the head of a Department or bureau, art association, or library, be and he is hereby authorized to furnish impressions from any portrait or vignette which is now or may hereafter be a part of the engraved stock of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, at such rates and under such conditions as he may deem necessary to protect the public interests.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to ask whether this measure meets the approbation of the Treasury Department?

Mr. DUNNELL. It does.

Mr. McMAHON. I think it would be very dangerous indeed to allow impressions of these vignettes to go out for any purpose whatever. I know that a proposition of this kind, when made some ten years ago, did not meet the approbation of Mr. Clark, then the head of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, who entered his protest against it, stating that to allow these impressions to be issued would be in the interest of counterfeiters. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask permission to make a single statement. A week or two ago I was at the Treasury Department, and speaking to the chief of this bureau, I expressed my desire for a set of these vignettes for the library of an institution in my own district. He replied that if this bill passed he would be very happy to furnish them, but that he could not do so otherwise. I understood him to say that he thought the bill a very proper one. This is all I know about the matter. I cannot see any impropriety in the passage of the bill.

Mr. McMAHON. In 1867 this matter was brought to the attention of a Senate committee then investigating the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and the report of that committee embraces a letter from Mr. Clark to Senator EDMUNDS denouncing this proposition as very dangerous. I do not think we ought to allow these impressions or vignettes to go out. There have been some rumors, at any rate, about some of these impressions going out and about some plates being missing. We ought not to authorize by law anything of this kind.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. This is nothing more than any one can get by getting a bank-bill.

Mr. McMAHON. But there is this difference, (and that is the very point which Mr. Clark makes:) If, for example, a man wants to counterfeit a five-thousand-dollar gold note, he must, in order to get a genuine impression to be used in connection with that counterfeit, invest $5,000 in a genuine note. That makes the difference.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. These will be printed on different paper.

Mr. McMAHON. I think this is a dangerous bill to be passed in this shape.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. It is only proposed to print the picture, not the whole note.

Mr. McMAHON. I withdraw my motion to lay on the table, and move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has already made that motion.

The motion of Mr. ATKINS was agreed to; and the bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. McMAHON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the passage of a bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes, with amendments in which concurrence was requested.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 1847) to provide for the appointment of a "Mississippi River commission" for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes near its mouth to its headwaters, with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Senate will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 2, strike out the word "five" and insert "seven."

Page 1, line 4, strike out "five" and insert "seven."

Page 1, line 6, strike out "and two from civil life" and insert "one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and three from civil life, two of whom shall be civil engineers."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "Army," insert "and the Coast and Goedetic Survey."

Page 1, line 13, strike out "two" and insert "three."

Page 2, line 8, after the word "necessary," insert "and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, when requested by said commission, in like manner detail from the Coast and Geodetic Survey such officers and men as may be necessary, and shall place in the charge and for the use of said commission such vessel or vessels and such machinery and instruments as may be under his control and may be deemed necessary."

Page 2, line 8, after the word "necessary," strike out the word "and" and insert "And."

Mr. CONGER. I ask, Mr. Speaker, those amendments be read in connection with the bill as amended, so we may understand them.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask that the bill be read as amended.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read as it is proposed to be amended by the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a commission is hereby created to be called "The Mississippi River commission," to consist of seven members.

SEC. 2. The President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint seven commissioners, three of whom shall be selected from the Engineer Corps of the Army, one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and three from civil life, two of whom shall be civil engineers. And any vacancy which may occur in the commission shall in like manner be filled by the President of the United States; and he shall designate one of the commissioners appointed from the Engineer Corps of the Army to be president of the commission. The commissioners appointed from the Engineer Corps of the Army and the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall receive no other pay or compensation than is now allowed them by law, and the other three commissioners shall receive as pay and compensation for their services each the sum of $3,000 per annum; and the commissioners appointed under this act shall remain in office subject to removal by the President of the United States.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of said commission to direct and complete such surveys of said river between the Head of the Passes near its mouth to its headwaters as may now be in progress, and to make such additional surveys, examinations, and investigations, topographical, hydrographical, and hydrometrical, of said river and its tributaries, as may be deemed necessary by said commission to carry out the objects of this act. And to enable said commission to complete such surveys, examinations, and investigations, the Secretary of War shall, when requested by said commission, detail from the Engineer Corps of the Army such officers and men as may be necessary, and shall place in the charge and for the use of said commission such vessel or vessels and such machinery and instruments as may be under his control and may be deemed necessary. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall, when requested by said commission, in like manner detail from the Coast and Geodetic Survey such officers and men as may be necessary, and shall place in the charge and for the use of said commission such vessel or vessels and such machinery and instruments as may be under his control and may be deemed necessary. And the said commission may, with the approval of the Secretary of War, employ such additional force and assistants, and provide, by purchase or otherwise, such vessels or boats and such instruments and means as may be deemed necessary.

SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration and mature such plan or plans and estimates as will correct, permanently locate, and deepen the channel and protect the banks of the Mississippi River; improve and give safety and ease to the navigation thereof; prevent destructive floods; promote and facilitate commerce, trade, and the postal service; and, when so prepared and matured, to submit to the Secretary of War a full and detailed report of their proceedings and actions, and of such plans, with estimates of the cost thereof, for the purposes aforesaid, to be by him transmitted to Congress: Provided, That the commission shall report in full upon the practicability, feasibility, and probable cost of the various plans known as the jetty system, the levee system, and the outlet system, as well as upon such others as they deem necessary.

SEC. 5. The said commission may, prior to the completion of all the surveys and examinations contemplated by this act, prepare, and submit to the Secretary of War, plans, specifications, and estimates of costs for such immediate works as, in the judgment of said commission, may constitute a part of the general system of works herein contemplated, to be by him transmitted to Congress.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of War may detail from the Engineer Corps of the Army of the United States an officer to act as secretary of said commission.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $175,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of the salaries herein provided for, and of the necessary expenses incurred in the completion of such surveys as may now be in progress, and of such additional surveys, examinations, and investigations as may be deemed necessary, reporting the plans and estimates, and the plans, specifications, and estimates contemplated by this act, as herein provided for; and said sum is hereby appropriated for said purposes out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BAKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. State it.

Mr. BAKER. And that is whether that bill is open to amendment now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] has charge of the bill, and the Chair does not know what motion he submits.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move the amendments of the Senate be concurred in, and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. BAKER. I observe by this bill seven commissioners are created who are given a life tenure of office, and I should like to amend so this motion should not run for more than one year without further legislation. I think it is a dangerous precedent, involving the country in the expenditure of millions of dollars of money.

Mr. GIBSON. It is competent for the next session of Congress to repeal this law if it be deemed necessary so to do.

Mr. SPARKS. Why not correct this and have it right at the beginning.

Mr. BAKER. This creation of seven commissioners with a life tenure of office involves an annual expenditure of $21,000 and is dangerous in its character.

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. BAKER. The commissioners are to remain in office during the discretion of the President, and that means life tenure.

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman is mistaken; some are to be taken from the Army and the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and those commissioners are to receive no additional pay.

Mr. ELAM. My colleague has demanded the previous question, which is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to concur in the amendments of the Senate, on which the previous question has been demanded.

Mr. BAKER. I move to lay the bill and amendments upon the table.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope the gentleman from Louisiana will withdraw the demand for the previous question, so we may have some explanation of these amendments.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have no objection to that, and will withdraw the demand for the previous question. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana. How long does he want?

Mr. BAKER. I desire first to hear some explanation of the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. I can explain it in a few moments.

Mr. DUNNELL. This bill underwent a very thorough discussion.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Louisiana want?

Mr. GIBSON. Five minutes will be enough.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to my colleague for five minutes.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I will endeavor in a very few words to explain the scope of the bill as originally passed by this House and the modifications made by the amendments of the Senate.

Let me say that the bill was passed by this House nearly three weeks ago, with only twenty votes against it, and was returned to us from the Senate with only four adverse votes of that body. As it passed the House, it provided for the appointment of a commission to be called "The Mississippi River commission" to consist of five members, three of whom were to be selected from the Engineer Corps of the Army and two from civil life, and the President was authorized to designate one of the commissioners from the Engineer Corps to be the president of the commission. Now, the amendments made by the Senate provide that in addition to these five members one shall also be appointed from the Coast and Geodetic Survey and one from civil life.

It is proposed to concur in these amendments of the Senate. I should prefer the bill as originally drawn, but I can see no weighty objections to the proposed alterations. It will be seen that they relate merely to the commission, increasing its number from five to seven members. No changes have been made in the duties imposed upon the commission.

Mr. Speaker, I am persuaded that every gentleman in this House who has made himself acquainted with the vast interests of the Mississippi Valley and with the difficulties to be overcome in the protection and advancement of those interests will hesitate long before he will throw himself in opposition to this bill.

The Mississippi River is a national river, the grandest highway of commerce in the world. And yet while the Federal Government has with unstinted liberality made appropriations for our ocean front and lakes and upland rivers, nothing has been done for our great inland sea. You have expended enormous sums for harbors and water-gaps upon our eastern seaboard and you support a navy to protect our foreign commerce upon every sea under the sun. You have established sheltering harbors and piers upon the lakes at the cost of millions. You appropriated ten millions to unite the Wisconsin and Fox Rivers and four and a half millions to build a canal around the Des Moines Rapids. These are but a few instances. I believe every dollar so expended adds to the wealth, comfort, and happiness of the American people.

But why is it that nothing, absolutely nothing, in comparison with the interests involved, has been done for the Lower Mississippi, from Cairo to New Orleans, a distance of one thousand miles, making a coast front of two thousand miles on our great inland sea, whose commerce and trade even now exceed in value our whole foreign commerce? It is only within the last three years that we have been able to secure deep water at the mouth of the river. Experiment after experiment was made until finally a plan was suggested and adopted that proved successful. We are to-day confronted with difficulties apparently as invincible along the route of the river as those that barred its gateway. What are they?

In the first place, official reports show that during several months in every year immense sand-bars and snags close the navigation of the river as effectually as if artificial dams were constructed across its channel.

In the second place, official reports show that at other seasons the river rises over its banks throughout the alluvial region and spreads out over the country for forty to sixty miles—becomes a mighty, roaring torrent—destructive not only to human life and property upon its borders, but destructive to the commerce and trade upon its waters. The report of the engineers show that these floods cause changes of the channel itself, and the towns of Vicksburgh, Vidalia, and Natchez are now threatened with being cut off entirely from the main channel of the river, and unless something be done to correct its course these once thriving towns will be isolated and become interior towns, not on the banks of the river, but upon quiet inland lakes without communication with the river.

In such seasons the largest boats propelled by steam are sometimes destroyed and often detained several days by the extraordinary obstacles they encounter, but that countless fleet of smaller boats, barges, and flatboats, propelled by the current of the river itself, are absolutely at its mercy and are sometimes borne into the adjacent forests and wrecked, or whelmed and destroyed in the furious eddies and counter-currents.

At night and in storms, there is absolutely no protection. It is estimated that these extraordinary perils impose a tax of not less than $10,000,000 annually in the increased rates of insurance alone. We know what the difficulties are. They have been surveyed and reports made of them to Congress. But no complete and comprehensive system for their removal has been submitted to this House or to the country.

This commission is created with the hope that they may devise some plan, economical, feasible, and complete, that shall give us deep water at all seasons of the year and prevent these destructive floods so ruinous not only to the country through which it flows, but to the mighty commerce that carries the productions of the teeming millions who inhabit the great valley to the markets of the world and brings back in exchange the wealth of other countries.

Mr. Speaker, I do not, I cannot believe any gentleman will be disposed to vote against reasonable and just appropriations for wing-dams, jetties, and levees, should this commission, after a thorough and scientific examination of the subject, report that these are the appropriate and necessary instrumentalities to deepen and correct the channel, to prevent destructive floods, to afford safety and ease to navigation, and facilities to trade and commerce upon our great inland sea; that they are, in fact, to the Mississippi River what water-gaps, sheltering piers and harbors, and light-houses and beacons and buoys are to the sea and lake coasts.

Would you decline such appropriations so clearly constitutional under the power to regulate commerce, when they are smaller in proportion to the commercial interest at stake than upon the ocean or the lake, because at the same time they would protect the hard-working and industrious people in the mighty valley against overflows, or because they would reclaim the most productive region on this continent and secure to it a busy, vigorous, population to develop its inexhaustible resources and contribute to the strength and glory of our country?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER.]

Mr. BAKER. I trust I may have a little more than five minutes allowed me. I may possibly get through in ten minutes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield the gentleman ten minutes.

Mr. BAKER. I am one of those who believe that it is the duty of Congress and within its constitutional competency to make improvements of rivers and of harbors where those improvements are of national concern. I believe in the improvement, the proper improvement, of the navigation of the Mississippi River, of the Missouri, of the Ohio, and of all great national river thoroughfares that we have within the limits of the United States. But I desire here, Mr. Speaker, to enter my solemn protest against any attempt at a gigantic system of internal improvements looking to the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands.

Mr. GIBSON. There is not a word about overflowed lands in this bill.

Mr. BAKER. I will speak about that presently; but under the guise of improving the navigation of the Mississippi River this scheme is presented. I want to say to the gentlemen here that they have, in my judgment, studied the laws governing the deposit of matter in the bottom of the Mississippi River and other navigable rivers in vain if they believe that any permanent improvement can be effected by keeping up levees along its banks from the source to the mouth of the river. Sir, that will occasion a deposit of material in it, and there will be a necessity of continuing the improvements by raising the dikes higher and higher as the years go by. It is starting a scheme which will be as endless as the flow of the river, and I say that there is no more justice, no more wisdom, in putting our hands into the Federal Treasury either in initiating or in carrying out this scheme for the protection by levees of the lowlands of the Lower Mississippi than there is in appropriating money for the purpose of taking the mountain streams and bringing them into the desert lands all over the interior part of the continent by immense ditches carried through those lands, and reclaiming them and bringing them within the domain of cultivation.

I say that this scheme of a survey from the headwaters to the mouth of the Mississippi looks (and that is the primary object of it) to a system of dikes and levees that will not improve the navigation of the river, but will relieve the States from the duty which belongs to them of protecting and reclaiming their own overflowed lands.

Mr. McCOOK. I desire to ask the gentleman one question. Does this bill appropriate any money except for the payment of the commissioners?

Mr. GIBSON. Not a dollar.

Mr. BAKER. I have lived to little purpose if I have not learned that it is the first step that costs.

Mr. ATKINS. Does this bill contemplate any particular plan of improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. BAKER. Oh, no, sir; it looks to a survey with the end in view of recommending a general levee system or some other system for the improvement of the Mississippi River and the reclamation of the lands along its borders from its headwaters to its mouth.

Mr. KENNA. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether he is in favor of any system for the improvement of the Mississippi River?

Mr. BAKER. The gentleman has listened to me to very little purpose, indeed, if he has not heard me lay down what I believe is the old democratic doctrine on the subject of internal improvements.

Mr. KENNA. The gentleman can answer my question very easily.

Mr. BAKER. My answer is this: I am in favor in respect to rivers and harbors that are national in their character of using for the single purpose of improving them for navigation so much of the money of the people, having reference each year to the wants of other departments of the Government, as may be requisite. I would not spend a dollar for reclaiming swamp and overflowed lands except it might be incidentally accomplished in making necessary improvements to the navigation of the river.

Mr. KENNA. My question is whether the gentleman is in favor of any general system for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and I propose to follow that question up by another, and it is: If he is in favor of such a system, what better system can be suggested for ascertaining the best plan to be adopted than by the passage of this bill?

Mr. BAKER. I cannot yield further. It is not a matter of very much moment to the country either what my views in reference to a system of internal improvements may be or the views of the gentleman from West Virginia; hence I will not detain the House by talking about what my views are and contrasting them with the views of the gentleman.

I have stated what I believe is the true constitutional rule on the subject, and I say that this bill proposes to go far beyond that and launch this country into a system of improvements not limited to the improvement of the navigation of the river, but looking to the reclamation of the swamp and overflowed lands bordering the river, a measure which if carried out in accordance with the gigantic system projected here will cost hundreds of millions of dollars; and, when you have expended that amount, other millions will have to follow in order to keep raising and raising the dikes along the river's banks.

So far as surveys for the improvement of the navigation of the river are concerned, I want to say that it has been surveyed time and time again. The committee-rooms of this House are filled with the reports on that subject. So far as that is concerned, there is absolutely no use for a survey having that single object in view. No, no, it is not that you want; you do not want a further survey for the purposes of navigation. The Engineer Corps of the Army, who are competent to perform that duty, have surveyed it repeatedly and have repeatedly reported the result of their surveys. Nay, more; you have passed special bills directing special surveys, and the reports of those surveys lie as dead and idle matter here. And now we have before us another—I will not say job, although I confess it looks like that to me, but another scheme for another survey to draw more money out of the people's Treasury. Why not use the information you have got? Wherein is the information you now have defective? In what respect have the Army engineers shown themselves to have been misinformed in their former surveys? No, gentlemen, you do not want to pass this bill for the purpose of obtaining information so that you can improve the navigation of the Mississippi River. It is but the entering-wedge of a scheme to dike and dam that river so that, at the expense of Uncle Sam, the swamp lands may be made productive of sugar and cotton in order that southern planters may be enabled to cultivate a larger area of those crops. If you want to pass this bill, all right; I have done my duty when I have protested solemnly here against this gigantic scheme that looks, I will not say to the robbery of the people, but to taking the people's money by the million for a purpose which I believe in their righteous wrath they will rise up and condemn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.]

Mr. ROBERTSON. I believe I have charge of the bill, and I desire to yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] first applied to the Chair to be recognized, and the Chair notified the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] of that fact, and the gentleman acquiesced, as the Chair understood. The Chair will afterward recognize the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say but a few words in reference to this bill as it comes to us from the Senate. As I understand, it has been amended by the Senate with a view of giving additional scientific aid for the purpose of furthering the objects of the bill. It proposes that a gentleman from the Coast Survey of the Government of the United States shall be made one of the board of engineers who are to determine the question as to what is the proper method of developing the resources of this great river.

I think I may be pardoned if I say that the information has come to me that a gentleman will probably be indicated for this service by the Government, should this bill become a law, who to-day occupies in American science and in American engineering a position as distinguished as that of any other man in this country. I allude to Professor Hilgard, occupying a position second in the Coast Survey of the country to that of Captain Patterson, its head.

The Coast Survey originated when men frowned upon it with contempt and contumely, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] has just done upon this proposition, and who said that a survey of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, North and South, was an idle scheme. Yet to-day that survey stands among the scientific achievements of this country so pre-eminent with regard to the development of the great resources of the country and the protection of the commerce which lines our shore, both on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, that the Old World has copied our system and made it its own. And there is no man who has rendered so distinguished service in the Coast Survey as the gentleman who stands at its head, Captain Patterson, and his second in command, Professor Hilgard, of that Survey.

This is simply a proposition to ascertain how we may utilize not only the Mississippi River from its sources among the mountains to where it debouches with the waters of its thousand tributaries into the Gulf of Mexico, but it is a question as to how we shall utilize all the great streams that flow into that river.

I remember that some years ago it was my fortune to be in the city of New Orleans when a commercial convention was assembled there. As delegates to that convention there were men from the mountains of Virginia, from Pennsylvania, from Tennessee, from regions of country where they never lived except in sight of some lofty mountain pointing its summit to the skies, or some gigantic hill, evidencing the fact that no flood had ever gone over it. In company with members of that convention I proceeded to the mouth of the river; and as we went down past the magnificent plantations which lined its bank we saw it pouring out on either side vast floods which devastated the orange groves and the rice and cotton plantations. The question was then suggested, long before Eads had conceived the idea of confining the river by jetties into a narrow channel, what could be done to make its commerce of universal importance?

When we got to the mouth of the river we found that the bar which formed there at the meeting of the waters of the river with the great Mexican flood-tide that came up to its shores presented an impediment to commerce which not only affected the mouth of the Mississippi River itself, but affected every tributary along its course.

This is a simple proposition as to how we shall make this great highway a universal highway of travel for ships and vessels, so far as they enter the mouths of the many channels of the river. It was said in former times, by a great and eminent politician of Mississippi, in order to illustrate something about which he was speaking, that there were some things which were subject to the laws of science: that there were some things which could be controlled by man's ingenuity and man's devices; but that the Mississippi was not one of those things. He said that God Almighty, when he made the Mississippi River and bade its great floods flow from the mountains to the sea, said, "Let her rip; there is no law to govern it." [Laughter.] But I say that since his demonstration there has been established in our day the law that man's ingenuity and man's science can answer the question as to how that river can be best navigated, and as to whether the tributaries of that great stream can be made navigable.

Allow me to say that this is not a question of the navigation of the Mississippi River alone, but a question of the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, with fifteen thousand miles of navigable waters flowing into that great current, and five thousand miles of operative railroads contributing to its commerce.

Allow me to say, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the argument of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] that this is not a question as to the development of a single stream; it is a question of the development of the resources of twenty-five great States of this Union and six Territories, embracing in the aggregate nine-tenths of the population of this country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I should oppose this bill very decidedly if it committed us at this time to any plan or theory of managing the Mississippi River; and I think the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] warning us against committal in any such direction are wise. But I have looked the bill over with what care I could, and it does not seem to me that by its passage we commit ourselves to anything further than the purpose to obtain accurate official information touching the present condition and needs of this great stream. I admit that we have already had examinations and explorations of the Mississippi, some of them scientific and very valuable; but everybody will concede that one important experiment has been made in recent years which, though against the opinion of the majority of engineers, has proven, apparently, a great success. I mean the jetty system at the mouth of that river. I say "apparently," because it is possible that in the long run it may not prove a success; but at the present moment it appears to be a great and striking success in the management of the mouths of that river. If it prove to be permanently so, all our calculations and indeed all our theories concerning the improvement and management of other portions of that river need to be reconsidered in view of the new light that the jetty system will throw upon the question. Hence a proposition to turn on the light, to get information, and to get it from the best scientific advisers that we can call to our aid, is a step in the right direction. I have always favored measures which will result in giving us information upon all questions about which we are called upon to legislate. What shall be done with this knowledge when it comes, will be for us or our successors to say. We do not commit ourselves or them to any scheme at this time. But for myself, I believe that one of the grandest of our material national interests—one that is national in the largest material sense of that word—is the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries. It is the most gigantic single natural feature of our continent, far transcending the glory of the ancient Nile, or of any other river on the earth. The statesmanship of America must grapple the problem of this mighty stream. It is too vast for any State to handle; too much for any authority less than that of the nation itself to manage. And I believe the time will come when the liberal-minded statesmanship of this country will devise a wise and comprehensive system that will harness the powers of this great river to the material interests of America, so that not only all the people who live on its banks and the banks of its confluents, but all the citizens of the Republic, whether dwellers in the central valley or on the slope of either ocean, will recognize the importance of preserving and perfecting this great natural and material bond of national union between the North and the South—a bond to be so strengthened by commerce and intercourse that it can never be severed. [Applause.]

One of our early Presidents went so far as even to exceed his early preconceived opinions of the constitutional power of the Executive in order to buy from France a mighty empire to be added to the Union; and he did it for this reason chiefly, that the young Republic could not permanently endure as a nation without owning and controlling the mouths of that mighty stream. The whole continent west of the Mississippi was bought to make the Union perpetual by bringing every foot of the shore of the Mississippi under our flag. If I did not think it almost unworthy of so great a theme I would say that if there had been no patriotic impulse higher than any consideration of material welfare which moved twenty millions of Americans to resist the attempt to break the Union in pieces, and impelling them to hold it together by all the cost of blood and treasure that our late war cost, if there had been no higher national sentiment inspiring them, the immense material stake which the people of the great north and west and center of this country had in the free use of that river from its sources to its mouth, that their commerce might go southward to the sea under the one flag unvexed by conflicting nationalities, this material stake alone would have made all the people of the upper valley of the Mississippi forever resist to the last the dismemberment of the Union.

This great river which our fathers made such sacrifices to acquire, and which the present generation made so much costlier sacrifices to redeem from disunion and to hold within the grasp of the nation, we have held, not in obedience to mere sentiment alone, not with a view of keeping it as a vast and worthless waste of water, but to utilize it by making it the servant of all the people of this country. How shall we utilize it, unless at some time and in some wise way we bridle it by the skill of man and make it subservient to the interests of commerce?

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there is another reason why I am in favor of this measure. I rejoice in any occasion which enables Representatives from the North and from the South to unite in an unpartisan effort to promote a great national interest. [Applause.] Such an occasion is good for us both. And when we can do it without the sacrifice of our convictions, and can benefit millions of our fellow-citizens, and can thereby strengthen the bonds of the Union, we ought to do it with rejoicing; for in doing so we inspire our people with larger and more generous views, and help to confirm for them and for our children to our latest generations the indissoluble Union and the permanent grandeur of this Republic. I shall vote for this bill. [Applause on both sides of the House.]

Several MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say, so many gentlemen have desired to speak on this occasion, and while it has been my desire to accommodate them, that I cannot yield to any other gentleman for fear I might be considered partial. Therefore, as the House is ready for the vote, I must consequently insist on my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. BAKER. Unless by consent we can have a yea-and-nay vote, I shall be compelled to ask for adjournment. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. BAKER. I ask that the gentleman from Louisiana allow a yea-and-nay vote on the passage of this bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. It is for the House to determine whether the yeas and nays shall be called.

Mr. BAKER. I move, then, that the House adjourn.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the request of the gentleman from Indiana will be granted, and that we take a yea-and-nay vote.

The SPEAKER. If there be a sufficient number to demand the yeas and nays, they can be ordered.

Mr. BAKER. With that understanding I withdraw the motion to adjourn, and I will state further that I shall make no point on there not being a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The call of yeas and nays rests under the Constitution with one-fifth of those present. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. BAKER. I demand the yeas and nays only on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The only question before the House is on concurrence in the Senate amendments. If the amendments are concurred in that passes the bill.

Mr. BAKER. Very well; then I demand the yeas and nays on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 166, nays 11, not voting 109; as follows:

YEAS—166.

Acklen,	Conger,	Farr,	Henry,
Anderson,	Converse,	Felton,	Herbert,
Armfield,	Cook,	Ferdon,	Herndon,
Atkins,	Covert,	Field,	Hill,
Bachman,	Cowgill,	Finley,	Hiscock,
Barber,	Crapo,	Ford,	Hooker,
Beale,	Cravens,	Forney,	Horr,
Bicknell,	Culberson,	Forsythe,	Hostetler,
Blake,	Daggett,	Garfield,	House,
Bliss,	Davidson,	Geddes,	Hubbell,
Brewer,	Davis, George R.	Gibson,	Hull,
Bright,	Davis, Joseph J.	Gillette,	Humphrey,
Burrows,	Davis, Loundes H.	Gunter,	Hurd,
Caldwell,	Deering,	Hammond, John	Jones,
Cannon,	De La Matyr,	Hammond, N. J.	Jorgensen,
Carpenter,	Dibrell,	Harris, Benj. W.	Keifer,
Caswell,	Dunnell,	Haskell,	King,
Clardy,	Elam,	Hatch,	Klotz,
Clark, John B.	Ellis,	Hawk,	Lowe,
Clymer,	Errett,	Hawley,	Manning,
Coffroth,	Evins,	Hazelton,	Marsh,
Colerick,	Ewing,	Henderson,	Martin, Benj. F.
Martin, Joseph J.	Overton,	Scales,	Updegraff, J. T.
Mason,	Persons,	Shallenberger,	Updegraff, Thomas
McCoid,	Phelps,	Shelley,	Upson,
McCook,	Phister,	Sherwin,	Van Aernam,
McGowan,	Poehler,	Simonton,	Vance,
McKenzie,	Pound,	Singleton, O. R.	Voorhis,
McKinley,	Price,	Slemons,	Wait,
McMahon,	Reagan,	Smith, A. Herr	Ward,
McMillin,	Richardson, D. P.	Smith, William E.	Warner,
Mitchell,	Richardson, J. S.	Sparks,	Weaver,
Monroe,	Richmond,	Springer,	Wellborn,
Morrison,	Robertson,	Steele,	White,
Murch,	Robinson,	Stevenson,	Whiteaker,
Myers,	Ross,	Talbott,	Whitthorne,
New,	Rothwell,	Taylor,	Willis,
Nicholls,	Russell, W. A.	Thomas,	Wilson,
Norcross,	Ryon, John W.	Thompson,	Wise,
O'Connor,	Samford,	Tillman,	Young, Casey.
Orth,	Sapp,	Townsend, Amos
Osmer,	Sawyer,	Townshend, R. W.

NAYS—11.

Aldrich, William	Bowman,	Cobb,	Turner, Oscar
Baker,	Briggs,	Fort,	Yocum.
Bouck,	Browne,	Neal,

NOT VOTING—109.

Aiken,	Deuster,	Knott,	Russell, Daniel L.
Aldrich, N. W.	Dick,	Ladd,	Ryan, Thomas
Atherton,	Dickey,	Lapham,	Singleton, J. W.
Bailey,	Dunn,	Lay,	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Ballou,	Dwight,	Le Fevre,	Speer,
Barlow,	Einstein,	Lewis,	Starin,
Bayne,	Fisher,	Lindsey,	Stephens,
Belford,	Frost,	Loring,	Stone,
Beltzhoover,	Frye,	Lounsbery,	Tucker,
Bingham,	Godshalk,	Martin, Edward L.	Turner, Thomas
Blackburn,	Goode,	McLane,	Tyler,
Bland,	Hall,	Miles,	Urner,
Blount,	Harmer,	Miller,	Valentine,
Boyd,	Harris, John T.	Mills,	Van Voorhis,
Bragg,	Hayes,	Money,	Waddill,
Brigham,	Heilman,	Morse,	Washburn,
Buckner,	Henkle,	Morton,	Wells,
Butterworth,	Houk,	Muldrow,	Wilber,
Cabell,	Hunton,	Muller,	Williams, C. G.
Calkins,	James,	Newberry,	Williams, Thomas
Camp,	Johnston,	O'Brien,	Willits,
Carlisle,	Joyce,	O'Neill,	Wood, Fernando
Chalmers,	Kelley,	O'Reilly,	Wood, Walter A.
Chittenden,	Kenna,	Pierce,	Wright,
Claflin,	Ketcham,	Prescott,	Young, Thomas L.
Clark, Alvah A.	Killinger,	Reed,
Cox,	Kimmel,	Rice,
Crowley,	Kitchin,	Robeson,

So the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. SLEMONS. My colleague from Arkansas, Mr. DUNN, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. COVERT. My colleague from New York, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey. My colleague, Mr. MULLER, is paired with Mr. HEILMAN, of Indiana.

Mr. WHITEAKER. Mr. COX, of New York, is paired with his colleague, Mr. MORTON.

Mr. HERBERT. My colleague from Alabama, Mr. LEWIS, is paired with Mr. LORING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. My colleague, Mr. KITCHIN, is paired with Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. TALBOTT. My colleagues from Maryland, Mr. MCLANE and Mr. URNER, are paired. If present, both would vote "ay."

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. FROST, is paired with Mr. BAYNE, of Pennsylvania. I presume if present both would vote "ay." I know my colleague would do so.

Mr. DICKEY. I am paired with Mr. BARLOW, of Vermont. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. COFFROTH. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. BELTZHOOVER, is paired with my colleague, Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am paired with my colleague from Tennessee, Mr. HOUK. If he were here, Mr. HOUK would vote "ay," and I therefore vote "ay."

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. LADD, of Maine, is absent by leave of the House. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. HURD. I am paired with Mr. CLAFLIN, of Massachusetts. Nevertheless, I vote "ay," as I know that, if present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. ELLIS. I am paired with Mr. HARMER, of Pennsylvania. I know him to be a friend of this measure, and on consultation with some of his colleagues I vote "ay."

Mr. RICHMOND. My colleague from Virginia, Mr. GOODE, is paired with Mr. GODSHALK, of Pennsylvania. My colleague, if present, would vote "ay," and I presume the other gentleman would do so likewise.

Mr. BEALE. My colleague from Virginia, Mr. HUNTON, is paired with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Mr. MULDROW, of Mississippi is paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York.

Mr. MANNING. My colleague from Mississippi, Mr. MONEY, is absent by leave of the House. He is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan. If Mr. MONEY were here, he would vote "ay." I do not know how Mr. STONE would vote.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. LORING, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama. I believe if they were present they would both vote "ay."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, is absent by leave of the House. He is paired with Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York. If present, Mr. CHALMERS would vote "ay."

Mr. O'NEILL. I am paired with Mr. HENKLE, of Maryland. If he were present, I would vote "ay," and I think he would also vote "ay."

Mr. WARD. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. GODSHALK, is paired with Mr. GOODE, of Virginia. If present, I believe both would vote "ay."

Mr. McGOWAN. Mr. STARIN, of New York, is paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.

Mr. SAPP. I am paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama, on all political questions, but as this is not a political question I vote "ay."

Mr. WILLITS. I am paired with Mr. BLACKBURN, of Kentucky.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. HOUK, of Tennessee, is paired with his colleague, Mr. TAYLOR. If present, Mr. HOUK would vote "ay."

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleague, Mr. WASHBURN, is paired with my colleague, Mr. POEHLER, on all political questions. Mr. POEHLER has voted "ay;" Mr. WASHBURN, if present, would also vote "ay."

Mr. BREWER. My colleague from Michigan, Mr. NEWBERRY, is absent by leave of the House. He is paired with Mr. ATHERTON, of Ohio.

Mr. POUND. On all political questions I am paired with Mr. DUNN, of Arkansas. Not regarding this as a political question I have voted "ay."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. MORSE, of Massachusetts, and Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, are paired.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. ROBERTSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2329) authorizing the Conway National Bank of Conway, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submits the following requests for leave of absence:

To Mr. MORTON, indefinitely, on account of important business;

To Mr. PRICE, for one week.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object to any leave of absence being granted.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. HAZELTON, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of A. C. Helmenstine, there being no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Dr. Locky Murray, no report having been made to the House.

REFORM SCHOOL, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the appointment of Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, as trustee for the Reform School of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: The petition of the Union Labor Trades' Assembly of Cincinnati, Ohio, against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1505) which permits the payment of employés of tobacco manufacturers in tobacco or cigars—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of T. R. Spencer and 30 others, manufacturers and dealers in tobacco, of Cincinnati, Ohio, against the passage of the bill known as the free-leaf tobacco bill—to the same committee.

By Mr. CASWELL: The petition of M. E. Mosher and 99 others, citizens of Columbia County, Wisconsin, for a commission to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic—to the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. DEUSTER: The petition of Myra Grange, No. 402, of Washington County, Wisconsin, for the passage of the Reagan interstate-commerce bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JOYCE: Papers relating to the claim of David Ward for reimbursement of amount of a Treasury note destroyed by fire—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Merritt Barber to be released from a charge of $50 alleged to be improperly charged against him on the books of the Third Auditor of the Treasury—to the same committee.

By Mr. MONROE: The petition of Wehrle, Werk & Son, to be refunded moneys collected from them as income tax—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. ROBINSON: The petition of Leopold Karpeles, for arrears of bounty—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 23, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of John E. Wiley and others, citizens of Edwards County, Kansas, praying for the passage of a law permitting homestead and pre-emption settlers to be absent for one year without losing their liens; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, reported it with amendments.

STEAMER B. P. CHENEY.

Mr. ALLISON. I report from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. No. 2264) to amend section 1, page 234, volume 20, of the United States Statutes at Large, Forty-fifth Congress, and, as it is very brief, I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It repeals so much of section 1, page 234, of the twentieth volume of the United States Statutes at Large, passed at the Forty-fifth Congress, and approved June 20, 1878, as relates to the steamer B. P. Cheney.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the Senator explain the object of the bill briefly. I should like to hear the reasons why this bill should pass.

Mr. ALLISON. In 1878 an appropriation was made in the sundry civil act covering certain items of claims. After the appropriation was made, and during the same session of Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury sent a letter to the Committee on Appropriations of the House, saying that this claim or allowance ought not to be made; and the Congress at that session passed a provision in the legislative bill prohibiting payment for this steamer until further action of Congress. That was a year ago at the session in June. Since that time the claim has been re-examined by the Third Auditor and the Second Comptroller, and they recommend its payment. The Secretary of the Treasury sent a letter to the Speaker of the House of Representatives recommending its payment.

Mr. HEREFORD. The bill has passed the House.

Mr. ALLISON. It passed the House at this session, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, has been carefully considered and examined by that committee, and they unanimously recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT COURT IN CONNECTICUT.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration the bill (S. No. 498) changing the time of holding the November term of the United States district court in the district of Connecticut, and have instructed me to report it back with an amendment striking out the last five words. It is merely for holding terms of the court, and it is very important that it should pass now, as well as one or two other bills that I have here from the same committee.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary was, after the word "December" in line 6, to strike out "as now provided by law;" so as to make the bill read:

That the term of the United States district court for the district of Connecticut, at Hartford, now held on the fourth Tuesday in November, shall hereafter be held on the first Tuesday of December.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN KENTUCKY.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a similar bill to prescribe the times for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States in the district of Kentucky, with two amendments striking out the second and fourth sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir. I ask for its present consideration. It is merely as to the time of holding courts.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 609) to prescribe the times for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States in the district of Kentucky.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out section 2 in the following words:

SEC. 2. Either of said courts may be adjourned from time to time to meet the necessities and convenience of business.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 4, in the following words:

SEC. 4. By consent of all parties interested, either of said courts may be held at any time or place for the trial of civil suits at law or in equity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. A similar bill on this subject, Senate bill No. 391, to regulate the holding of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] introduced, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee. Inasmuch as we have passed the House bill, I move that this Senate bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WALLACE. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives fixing the day for the final adjournment of Congress, with an amendment, and ask that it be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported as proposed to be amended for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out "twelve o'clock noon on Tuesday, the 17th," and insert "five o'clock on Wednesday, the 25th;" so as to read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at five o'clock p. m. Wednesday, the 25th of June instant.

Mr. WINDOM. I object to the consideration of the resolution to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over until to-morrow.

Mr. WALLACE. Does a single objection carry over a resolution for adjournment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution requires the concurrence of both Houses, and goes over upon objection.

Mr. HEREFORD. This is the report of a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule is express that no report of a committee shall be considered on the same day it is made, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALLACE. This is a privileged question, so held, I believe, in all parliamentary works. Questions of adjournment are questions of privilege; and I believe the resolution does not come within the rule referred to by the Chair, but that it comes within the same rule that a simple adjournment resolution would come.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A simple adjournment may be different; but in the opinion of the Chair a concurrent resolution fixing a day for the final adjournment of the two Houses does come within the rule. But the Chair will submit the question to the Senate, if it be desired.

Mr. WALLACE. I will let the resolution lie over, if that is the opinion of the Chair.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. MORGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to report back the following resolution, and I ask for its adoption:

Resolved, That Rule No. 60 of the standing rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto "judges of the Court of Claims."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It simply gives judges of the Court of Claims the privilege of the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I make no objection to it. I think the judges of the Court of Claims ought to have the privilege of the floor.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

NUMBER AND SALARIES OF SENATE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to ask the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have authority to print the testimony and statements taken in relation to the number of the employés of the Senate and the equalization of their salaries.

There will be no objection to this resolution. The statements referred to comprise but a few pages, and the committee prefer to have them in print.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE LEONARD.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives authorizing the printing of copies of eulogies delivered on the late J. E. Leonard, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives. (the Senate concurring,) That 8,000 copies of the eulogies delivered on the late J. E. Leonard, a member of the Forty-fifth Congress from the State of Louisiana, together with a portrait of the deceased, executed under direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, be printed; 6,000 copies thereof for the use of the House of Representatives and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

PRINTING OF REPORT ON METRIC SYSTEM.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives and recommend its passage. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States, (the Senate concurring,) That 10,000 extra copies of House Report No. 14, first session Forty-sixth Congress, be printed at the Government Printing Office; 2,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 7,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONKLING. What report is it? I should like to know.

Mr. WHYTE. I will state for the information of the Senate that it is a short report made by the chairman of the Committee on Coinage of the House in regard to the metric system. It is a brief matter; it will take but two or three hundred dollars.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS AND MANUAL.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, to report back the same and to ask for its indefinite postponement, because a similar resolution from the House has already been adopted by the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows, and postponed indefinitely:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Public Printer is hereby authorized to bind in cloth 3,000 copies of the compilation of internal-revenue laws and 3,500 copies of the internal-revenue manual for the use of the Treasury Department.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 716) to provide for the conveyance of the low grounds in the city of Washington, under the provisions of the act of Congress, chapter 96, approved May 7, 1822; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 41) authorizing Rear-Admiral John J. Almy, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the King of the Hawaiian Islands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 42) to provide for the speedy payment of the workingmen of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. There is a letter accompanying the joint resolution, and I move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Printing have leave to sit during the recess of Congress.

CONWAY NATIONAL BANK, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 2329) authorizing the Conway National Bank of Conway, Massachusetts, to change its location and name was passed on Saturday. I am informed that there is a slight mistake in the title of the bank.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. What is it?

Mr. MORRILL. It is a change of the location of a bank at Holyoke, and there is a misnomer about the name of the bank.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that a message be sent to the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

REFRIGERATING SHIP FOR DISINFECTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further routine business the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MCDONALD] on the 21st instant requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish certain information.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, required to report to this body all action and proceedings taken by the National Board of Health under or in connection with "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to contract for the purchase or construction of a refrigerating ship for the disinfection of vessels and cargoes, and for other purposes," approved April 18, 1879, together with copies of all papers, plans, specifications, and correspondence relating thereto submitted to said board up to the time such report is made.

Mr. GARLAND. Last Saturday, at my suggestion, the resolution went over. I was then under the impression that the report already submitted from the Navy Department covered the inquiry that is made; but I find I was mistaken, and I have no objection to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM NEPHEW KING, JR.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If there is no further morning business, I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 696) for the relief of William Nephew King, jr. It is a small matter.

The bill was read.

Mr. ALLISON. From what committee does that come?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. From the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not reported favorably.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The bill was not reported favorably; but I have the indorsement of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was reported without recommendation.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I can state to the Senate, if it is desired, the facts. This young man with fifteen others——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I hope there will be no objection.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to empower the President of the United States to allow William Nephew King, jr., to withdraw his resignation, and to restore him to the Naval Academy at Annapolis as a cadet-midshipman in the Navy of the United States.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will state that this young man entered the Naval Academy by appointment from the first district of Georgia in 1875. He remained there three years, and in 1878, under a misapprehension as to the marks of demerit against him, he and fifteen others resigned. The other fifteen were restored by the Secretary of the Navy because they acted in consequence of a misapprehension. There were a certain number of marks of demerit that they thought would cause their dismissal, but it turned out on investigation that the marks of demerit were trival and immaterial, and that therefore they had resigned under a misapprehension. In consequence of that, the Secretary of the Navy restored the other fifteen. This young man was not restored because in the mean time his father had moved to the State of New York and Mr. Hartridge, the then member from the first district, filled the appointment from the first district of Georgia, thinking that he ought not to restore this man as his father had removed from the State. In consequence of that, this young man alone was not restored. I hold in my hand a statement of these facts, and the following indorsement by the Secretary of the Navy:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, June 17, 1879.

I have read the accompanying statement and I find that, in so far as it refers to the action of this Department, it is correct.

The statement to which he refers is that the Secretary of the Navy desired to restore him but for the action I speak of.

If the vacancy occasioned by Cadet-Midshipman King's resignation had not been filled by the Representative in Congress from his district, I should have revoked my acceptance of it and permitted him to return to the Academy. I did this in other cases and was not aware of any reason why the same indulgence should not be extended to him. Nothing prevented his return but the fact of the vacancy having been filled.

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

It occurred in that case alone, because, as I said, the father of this gentleman had removed to the State of New York after his appointment, and Mr. Hartridge filled the vacancy. He has but one year to remain. He is a very promising young man, very much devoted to his profession, and is anxious to return and complete his studies. The Secretary desires that he should return, but he says in consequence of this reappointment it cannot be done except by permission of Congress. The bill simply authorizes the President to restore him to his class for one year. He is a most promising young man, very anxions to return, most exemplary in every respect. I hope, therefore, the Senate will pass the bill without objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. How did he get so many marks of demerit, and why has he been so long in applying for permission to return, over a year, now?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The reason is because he did not know there was any way for him to be returned. He did not know that he had to apply to Congress for permission until recently. The facts are here set forth, and I can read them to the Senate, explaining everything to the entire satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy. The young man did not know that having lost his place by this accident he could be restored; but he was informed by the Secretary that he can be restored in this way. He is exceedingly anxious that he may be restored.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to know of the Senator from Georgia if there is any precedent for this action? This evidently adds one to the regular number of cadet-midshipmen at the academy, and if we restore this young man by act of Congress, and place him back where he would have been if he had not resigned, it seems to me it will make a precedent that may trouble us hereafter.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will say to the Senator that I do not think the precedent can trouble us, for the reason that it is an unprecedented accident that causes the difficulty.

Mr. ALLISON. It was simply an accident by which a young man resigns, and another young man took his place; then he comes back a year or two afterward, and wants to re-enter the academy. That may occur at any time.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. After he was appointed from the State of Georgia, and before his resignation under a misapprehension, his father removed to another State, to the State of New York. That was the reason why he was left out, and the Representative from the district filled the appointment with another. But he is only to remain one year. The Secretary desires him to be restored, and it is purely from this accident that the misfortune occurred. It would be a hardship on a young man, a most promising young man, anxious to be restored and exemplary in every respect. The bill only authorizes the President to restore him under all the statement of the facts. It is an accident that cannot do harm, because it cannot be repeated perhaps in ten years. It is desired to correct that mistake. It would be unfortunate for the young man if he should not be restored. It will do the public service no harm whatever. The bill only authorizes the President to restore him; it does not require him to do it.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there a report? I should like to hear the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs read.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The committee made no report at all.

Mr. ALLISON. They made no report upon the case?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. No, sir; because the matter was before them only a short while. I am authorized by several members of the committee to say that had they seen this statement of the Secretary of the Navy they would have reported the bill favorably. We could not get a meeting except here in the Chamber; but this indorsement of the Secretary of the Navy was procured, which has satisfied every member of the committee that I have seen. The committee now do favor the bill, so far as my information goes, without exception.

Mr. MAXEY. It seems to me that this case does present an equity that should be considered by the Senate. A young man being under twenty-one years of age, his father's domicile is the son's. If his father chooses to change his domicile, his son's domicile necessarily goes along with it. Therefore without volition on his part it seems his residence was changed. The statement of the Secretary of the Navy to my mind is very conclusive upon that point. The nature and character of the demerits were laid before the Secretary of the Navy; and the fact that they were trivial and not important is stated by him. I can say myself that if getting demerits was any thing to condemn a man I should have gone by the board long ago when I was a cadet at West Point, because I was remarkably good at getting them, being in almost every party to Benny Havens; and I know this thing of getting demerits as a boy at the Naval Academy amounts to very little. My friend from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] "knows how it is himself," for he and I were at West Point together, and his demerit-roll was not much better than mine. The very fact that the Secretary of the Navy desired to restore this young man is conclusive that his shortcomings for which he received demerits were trivial. I trust the young man will be restored.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not desire to delay or postpone action on the bill. I simply desire to say that I consider the principle involved in it an exceedingly vicious one and exceedingly improper for the Senate to act upon. The bill has been before a committee. That committee has refused to take any responsibility whatever. That committee has handed it back to the Senate and said to the Senate "do as you please with this bill;" and we are called upon to vote on the bill.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I think that is not exactly fair, because the committee have told me since that they have no objection to the bill after seeing the indorsement of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Senator from Georgia has made the statement, and I do not dispute it; but I refer to the committee officially as a committee. This is not the proper way I think to take action upon such cases. I simply state that I am opposed to it for one.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURES.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2274.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2274) concerning the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

An amendment was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the provisions of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1878, pertaining to government in the several Territories of the United States, shall not be so construed as to impair or shorten the tenure of office of any member of such legislative assemblies until the redistricting and reapportionment of such Territories as is therein provided, nor until at the next regular election thereafter the twelve members of the council and twenty-four members of the house of representatives of such Territories shall have been elected and their term of office begun.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for an explanation from the Senator reporting the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to hear from the chairman of the Committee on Territories the effect of this bill.

Mr. GARLAND. In the general legislative appropriation act of June last this provision was inserted under the head of "Government in the Territories:"

That from and after the adjournment of the next session of the several territorial Legislatures the council of each of the Territories of the United States shall not exceed twelve members and the house of representatives of each shall not exceed twenty-four members, and the members of each branch of the said several Legislatures shall receive a compensation of $4 per day each during the sessions provided by law, and shall receive such mileage as the law provides; and the president of the council and the speaker of the house of representatives shall each receive $6 per day for the same time. And the several Legislatures at their next session are directed to divide their respective Territories into as many council and representative districts as they desire, which districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable, taking into consideration population, except "Indians not taxed:" Provided, The number of council districts shall not exceed twelve and the representative districts shall not exceed twenty-four in any one of said Territories; and all parts of sections 1847, 1849, 1853, and 1922 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in conflict with the provisions herein are repealed.

That provision was a general one relating to all the territorial governments. It seems that in the Territory of Montana the Legislature failed to comply with that provision and did not redistrict or reapportion the Territory so as to have the representation provided by this act, and a bill has passed the House relating solely to the Territory of Montana. But it transpired within the knowledge of a number of us that the Territory of Idaho is in exactly the same condition, and for fear there may be other Territories situated in that way the Judiciary Committee that reported this bill brings in a substitute extending the provisions that are set forth in this House bill to all the Territories that may be similarly situated, which is, in short, extending this provision in the appropriation bill of last June until another meeting of the Legislative Assemblies that they may then make the reapportionment and redistricting. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. BECK. I remember we had a good deal of trouble about that last session. Suppose when these Legislatures meet again they still refuse to do it, what then? Why strike out the House provision which gives the governor the authority? The Legislatures do not want to do it, and they only meet once in two years. The Senate committee's amendment, as I understand, makes no provision for its being done otherwise than by the Legislature of the Territory, and they may continue to do as they have been doing. Why not give power to somebody to force them to act?

Mr. GARLAND. I was coming to that.

Mr. BECK. I thought the Senator was done.

Mr. GARLAND. The House bill, after reciting that the provisions of the legislative, executive, and judicial act of last year shall not be so construed as to impair or shorten the tenure of office of any member of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana until the redistricting and reapportionment of the Territory, goes on to say:

And if in any case the reapportionment and redistricting of any Territory shall not be done by the Legislative Assembly thereof, it shall be the duty of the governor of such Territory, before the next general election to be held in such Territory, to divide such Territory into proper council and representative districts, upon the basis of the census of A. D. 1880.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask but a little while to dispose of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to continue the consideration of this bill until it is disposed of. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary were unanimously of the opinion that this was not a proper power to vest in the executive of a Territory—the redistricting and reapportioning of the Territory under this act. If it were such a power as could be vested in the executive, the committee were very doubtful of the propriety of leaving to any one who might be the executive of a Territory the power to make up a Legislature to suit his own convenience or his own purposes.

My proposition would be—but that was not discussed particularly before the committee—if these Legislatures do not perform this duty at the next meeting, let Congress perform it itself, which it has the power to do, to redistrict and reapportion these Territories on the information which it may get here. I would not vote and I do not believe any member of the committee who investigated this would vote to give this power to the executive. After this opportunity twice given them, if the Legislatures fail to do it, my proposition would be that Congress should make the reapportionment and redistricting itself.

Mr. BECK. Is that in the bill?

Mr. GARLAND. No, it is not. We meet in December in time to remedy the difficulty if such a failure takes place.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas whether this bill extends the term of office of the present Legislature of Montana?

Mr. GARLAND. It extends the term of office with the same power which was given them under the act of last June.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary as a substitute for the original bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill concerning the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories of the United States."

CONVEYANCE OF LOW GROUNDS.

Mr. WHYTE. If there is no objection I should like to make a report from a committee. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report back, without amendment and favorably, the bill (S. No. 716) to provide for the conveyance of the low grounds in the city of Washington, under the provisions of the act of Congress, chapter 96, approved May 7, 1822.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask for the present consideration of that bill. It is a bill that passed the Senate once before on the recommendation of the committee, and now has been recommended by the committee again. I ask for its present consideration. It simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to sign a deed for a widow lady who desires to convey a piece of property, and it is found by the committee to be all right.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The powers and duties heretofore in and by the third section of the act of Congress approved May 7, 1822, devolved upon and vested in "the mayor of the city of Washington for the time being," are by the bill vested in and devolved upon the Secretary of the Interior, who shall execute the deeds thereby required, under his hand and official seal, when it shall appear to him that the persons applying for such deeds are duly entitled to have the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON CITY POST-OFFICE BUILDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of its unfinished business, which is the motion made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] on the 20th of May last to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (H. R. No. 71) authorizing the appointment of a commission to lease a building for a city post-office in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, was postponed until December next.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the motion to reconsider will prevail. The proposition is indorsed by the Postmaster-General. The resolution was reported by a meeting of the Joint Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds unanimously, passed by the House, and came here, and I trust now that it will be reconsidered and passed as a proper thing to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which this joint resolution was postponed to December next.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONWAY NATIONAL BANK, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. MORRILL. On further examination, I move that the order of the Senate of this day, requesting the House of Representatives to return the bill (H. R. No. 2329) authorizing the Conway National Bank of Conway, Massachusetts, to change its location and name, be rescinded.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is nothing further moved, the Calendar is before the Senate. The Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at three o'clock and twenty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 23, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at fifteen minutes past twelve o'clock. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories, commencing with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to appropriate committees, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider. Under this call joint resolutions and memorials of State and territorial Legislatures are in order. Under this call, also, resolutions calling upon the Executive Departments for information will be in order for reference to appropriate committees.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the call be continued until all the States and Territories shall have been called.

Mr. CONGER. Let us see whether we shall need any more time than the hour for that purpose.

THOMAS SIGGINS.

Mr. ROBINSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2332) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Siggins, late of Company D, Forty-ninth Regiment Infantry, Massachusetts Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

NOAH D. CLARK.

Mr. VAN AERNAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2334) granting a pension to Noah D. Clark, of Fredonia, Chautauqua County, New York; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN HAMER.

Mr. COFFROTH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2335) granting a pension to John Hamer, of Company B, Fifty-fourth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN THOMAS.

Mr. COFFROTH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2336) granting a pension to John Thomas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

REPORT OF CENTENNIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. COFFROTH also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) to print additional copies of the report of the centennial commission; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

IMPORTATION OF CATTLE.

Mr. TALBOTT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2337) to allow John Merryman and Frank Brown, of Maryland, to import and land cattle for breeding purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

PAY DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

Mr. JOHNSTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2338) to correct an appointment in the Pay department of the Army; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DUTY ON QUININE.

Mr. HERBERT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2339) to remove the duty on quinine, and all materials for its manufacture; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAMFORD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2340) to remove the duty on quinine imported into the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a resolution to change the title of the Committee on the Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, and to extend the jurisdiction thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ACKLEN. How does that resolution come in under this call?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it is an amendment to one of the rules.

Mr. ACKLEN. Is it proper to introduce a resolution to amend the rules under this call?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ACKLEN. All right; I have one that I will introduce hereafter.

WEHRLE WERK & SON.

Mr. MONROE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2341) for the relief of Wehrle Werk & Son, of Middle Bass Island, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

LIEUTENANT BENJAMIN H. BUCKINGHAM.

Mr. McKINLEY introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 110) authorizing Lieutenant Benjamin H. Buckingham, of the United States Navy, to accept a decoration conferred upon him by the President of the French Republic; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

EDWARD DEMPSEY.

Mr. McMAHON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2342) granting an increase of pension to Edward Dempsey; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MRS. SALLIE B. M'CAMPBELL.

Mr. CALDWELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2343) for the relief of Mrs. Sallie B. McCampbell of Jessamine County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

JOHN A. LOUDON.

Mr. CALDWELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2344) to place on the pension-roll the name of John A. Loudon, a private in Company A, Twelfth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2345) for the relief of John A. Loudon, of Butler County, Kentucky, a private in Company A, Twelfth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LOUISA CHEEK.

Mr. KNOTT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2346) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa Cheek, of Breckinridge County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

WILLIAM A. WALTHEN.

Mr. KNOTT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2347) for the relief of William A. Walthen, of Marion County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, his Secretary; who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed a bill of the following title:

An act (H. R. No. 2175) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

PER DIEM OF SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. DIBRELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2348) to prevent the payment of per diem to Senators and Representatives in Congress when absent, except in case of sickness; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CONGER. Let that bill be read.

The bill was read at length, and referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL GILL.

Mr. TAYLOR introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2349) for the relief of Samuel Gill; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

DAVID C. JACKSON.

Mr. HOUK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2350) granting a pension to David C. Jackson, of Morgan County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JAMES A. DOUGHTY.

Mr. HOUK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2351) granting a pension to James A. Doughty, of Sneedville, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HENRY BINNAMON.

Mr. CALKINS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2352) to increase the pension of Henry Binnamon, of Porter County, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ST. MARY'S RIVER, MICHIGAN.

Mr. HUBBELL presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking Congress to appropriate money for the improvement of St. Mary's River, in that State.

Mr. CONGER. Let that resolution be read.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. HUBBELL also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan for protection of settlers under the general homestead laws in the counties of Oceana, Mason, Charlevoix, and Emmet, in said State.

Mr. CONGER. Let that be read.

The joint resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

RIVER AU SABLE, MICHIGAN.

Mr. HUBBELL also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking an appropriation to improve the navigation at the mouth of the river Au Sable, Iosco County, Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to have that read.

The joint resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SARATOGA NATIONAL MONUMENT.

Mr. HUBBELL also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking for an appropriation of condemned cannon to aid in the construction of the Saratoga national monument.

Mr. CONGER. Let that be read.

The joint resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EDWARD BRADEN AND J. W. ANGUS.

Mr. UPSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2353) for the relief of Edward Braden and J. W. Angus; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GEORGE H. BAILEY.

Mr. CULBERSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2354) for the relief of George H. Bailey, of Texas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

WILSON A. GREEN.

Mr. CULBERSON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2355) for the relief of Wilson A. Green; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

IMPORTATION OF QUININE.

Mr. CULBERSON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2356) to make the introduction of quinine free of duty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TIMBER ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. DUNNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2357) to increase the growth of timber upon the public lands of the United States under the homestead and pre-emption laws; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CONGER called for the reading of the bill; and it was read at length.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF JOHN COOK.

Mr. DUNNELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2358) for the relief of the estate of John Cook; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

WILLIAM D. OYLER.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2359) for the relief of William D. Oyler; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

C. H. HOWARD.

Mr. HASKELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2360) for the relief of C. H. Howard, postmaster at Osage Mission, Kansas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, requested the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. No. 2329) authorizing the Conway National Bank of Conway, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 498) changing the time for holding the November term of the United States district court in the district of Connecticut; and

An act (S. No. 594) for the relief of Thomas Langton, of Dundee, Michigan.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 32) authorizing the completion of the foundation of the Washington Monument.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia, introduced a bill to reduce and reorganize the Army of the United States and to make rules for its government and regulation.

Mr. CONGER, and Mr. MARTIN of West Virginia, called for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill. Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia, said: Mr. Speaker, in order to save time, as this bill is very long, I withdraw it.

The call of States having been concluded,

The SPEAKER said: Gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called will now be recognized for the introduction of bills, joint resolutions, &c.

WATER-FLUME OVER UMATILLA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. BRENTS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2361) granting the right of way for a water-flume over the Umatilla Indian reservation to William S. Byers, Lot Livermore, and William M. Beagle; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. ACKLEN submitted the following resolution to amend Rule 112; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Rule 112 be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:
Insert after the closing words of said rule:
Provided, however, That the provisions of this rule shall not apply to any use of the contingent fund of this House by any order or resolution thereof.

Mr. ACKLEN also submitted the following resolution to amend Rule 79; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Rule 79 be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:
After the closing words of said rule add:
And this committee is hereby authorized to have printed such reports or matters referred to them as they may deem necessary for the use of the committee without special order or leave of the House.

Mr. ACKLEN also submitted the following resolution to amend Rule 52; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Rule 52, and any other rule of this House which requires the Speaker to begin with the State of Maine and end with the Territory last organized, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read: "That the Speaker shall call the States in alphabetical order, and then afterward the Territories in the same order."

WILLIAM B. CONNER.

Mr. WISE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2362) granting a pension to William B. Conner, a soldier in the late war; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

REPORTER OF SUPREME COURT.

Mr. FINLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2363) defining the duties of reporter of the Supreme Court; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONTRACT FOR REFRIGERATING SHIP.

Mr. ELLIS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Introduction and Prevention of Epidemic Diseases:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this body within three days from the passage of this resolution a detailed statement of all action and proceedings taken by the National Board of Health under or in connection with an act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to contract for the purchase or construction of a refrigerating ship for the disinfection of vessels and cargoes, and for other purposes, approved April 18, 1879, together with all action and proceedings of the board of engineer officers appointed to examine and report on that subject, with copies of all papers, plans, specifications, debates, and correspondence relating thereto, submitted to each of said boards up to the time such report is made.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT, SALTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2364) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls to the Soldiers' Monument Association at Saltsburgh, Indiana County, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

G. W. GRIFFIN.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2365) for the relief of G. W. Griffin, late second lieutenant Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer a resolution by instruction of a committee, and move the suspension of the rules for the purpose of putting it on its passage.

The SPEAKER. It is not now in order, as the morning hour has not yet expired.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT, FRANKLIN, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. OSMER introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 111) granting condemned cannon to the Monumental Association of Franklin, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CYRUS B. INGHAM.

Mr. CARPENTER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2366) for the relief of Cyrus B. Ingham; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SUSAN TAYLOR.

Mr. HAZELTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2367) granting a pension to Susan Taylor; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHRISTOPHER SCHOLL.

Mr. HAZELTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2368) for the relief of Christopher Scholl; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

D. G. STREETER.

Mr. HAZELTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2369) for the relief of D. G. Streeter; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

CHRISTOPHER SILVER.

Mr. HAZELTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2370) granting a pension to Christopher Silver, survivor of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

SAMUEL HAYS.

Mr. HAZELTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2371) to grant a pension to Samuel Hays; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BUILDING, MILWAUKEE.

Mr. DEUSTER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2372) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a custom-house and bonded warehouse at Milwaukee, Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

LEWIS HOLMES.

Mr. OVERTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2373) granting a pension to Lewis Holmes, of Ulster, Bradford County, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

FIRST LIEUTENANT HENRY METCALFE.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 112) authorizing First Lieutenant Henry Metcalfe, of the Ordnance department, United States Army, to accept a decoration from the Sultan of Turkey; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

A. S. BLOOM.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2374) for the relief of A. S. Bloom, late a major in the Seventh Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking from the Speaker's table——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that the mornnig hour has expired, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] to move to suspend the rules. Pending that the Chair will present a message from the President of the United States.

VETO OF JUDICIAL EXPENSES BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

After careful examination of the bill entitled "An act making appropriations for certain judicial expenses," I return it herewith to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with the following objections to its approval:

The general purpose of the bill is to provide for certain judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, for which the sum of $2,690,000 is appropriated. These appropriations are required to keep in operation the general functions of the judicial department of the Government, and if this part of the bill stood alone there would be no objection to its approval. It contains, however, other provisions, to which I desire respectfully to ask your attention.

At the present session of Congress a majority of both Houses favoring a repeal of the congressional election laws embraced in title 26 of the Revised Statutes, passed a measure for that purpose, as part of a bill entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes." Unable to concur with Congress in that measure, on the 29th of May last I returned the bill to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, without my approval, for that further consideration for which the Constitution provides. On reconsideration the bill was approved by less than two-thirds of the House, and failed to become a law. The election laws, therefore, remain valid enactments, and the supreme law of the land, binding not only upon all private citizens, but also alike and equally binding upon all who are charged with the duties and responsibilities of the legislative, the executive, and the judicial departments of the Government.

It is not sought by the bill before me to repeal the election laws. Its object is to defeat their enforcement. The last clause of the first section is as follows:

And no part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any salaries, compensation, fees, or expenses under or in virtue of title 26 of the Revised Statutes, or of any provision of said title.

Title 26 of the Revised Statutes, referred to in the foregoing clause, relates to the elective franchise, and contains the laws now in force regulating the congressional elections.

The second section of the bill reaches much further. It is as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sums appropriated in this act for the persons and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and no Department or officer of the Government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money under any of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment or payment of general or special deputy marshals for service in connection with elections or on election day, until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law.

This section of the bill is intended to make an extensive and essential change in the existing laws. The following are the provisions of the statutes on the same subject which are now in force:

SEC. 3679. No Department of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

SEC. 3732. No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments, for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year.

The object of these sections of the Revised Statutes is plain. It is, first, to prevent any money from being expended unless appropriations have been made therefor; and, second, to prevent the Government from being bound by any contract not previously authorized by law, except for certain necessary purposes in the War and Navy Departments.

Under the existing laws the failure of Congress to make the appropriations required for the execution of the provisions of the election laws would not prevent their enforcement. The right and duty to appoint the general and special deputy marshals which they provide for would still remain, and the executive department of the Government would also be empowered to incur the requisite liability for their compensation. But the second section of this bill contains a prohibition not found in any previous legislation. Its design is to render the election laws inoperative and a dead letter during the next fiscal year. It is sought to accomplish this by omitting to appropriate money for their enforcement and by expressly prohibiting any Department or officer of the Government from incurring any liability under any of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes authorizing the appointment or payment of general or special deputy marshals for service on election days until an appropriation sufficient to pay such liability shall have first been made.

The President is called upon to give his affirmative approval to positive enactments which in effect deprive him of the ordinary and necessary means of executing laws still left in the statute-book, and embraced within his constitutional duty to see that the laws are executed. If he approves the bill and thus gives to such positive enactments the authority of law, he participates in the curtailment of his means of seeing that the law is faithfully executed while the obligation of the law and of his constitutional duty remains unimpaired.

The appointment of special deputy marshals is not made by the statute a spontaneous act of authority on the part of any executive or judicial officer of the Government, but is accorded as a popular right of the citizens to call into operation this agency for securing the purity and freedom of elections in any city or town having twenty thousand inhabitants or upward. Section 2021 of the Revised Statutes puts it in the power of any two citizens of such city or town to require of the marshal of the district the appointment of these special deputy marshals. Thereupon the duty of the marshal becomes imperative, and its non-performance would expose him to judicial mandate or punishment, or to removal from office by the President, as the circumstances of his conduct might require. The bill now before me neither revokes this popular right of the citizens nor relieves the marshal of the duty imposed by law, nor the President of his duty to see that this law is faithfully executed.

I forbear to enter again upon any general discussion of the wisdom and necessity of the election laws or of the dangerous and unconstitutional principle of this bill, that the power vested in Congress to originate appropriations involves the right to compel the Executive to approve any legislation which Congress may see fit to attach to such bills, under the penalty of refusing the means needed to carry on essential functions of the Government. My views on these subjects have been sufficiently presented in the special messages sent by me to the House of Representatives during their present session. What was said in those messages I regard as conclusive as to my duty in respect to the bill before me. The arguments urged in those communications against the repeal of the election laws and against the right of Congress to deprive the Executive of that separate and independent discretion and judgment which the Constitution confers and requires are equally cogent in opposition to this bill. This measure leaves the powers and duties of the supervisors of elections untouched. The compensation of those officers is provided for under permanent laws, and no liability for which an appropriation is now required would therefore be incurred by their appointment. But the power of the National Government to protect them in the discharge of their duty at the polls would be taken away. The States may employ both civil and military power at the elections, but by this bill even the civil authority to protect congressional elections is denied to the United States. The object is to prevent any adequate control by the United States over the national elections by forbidding the payment of deputy marshals, the officers who are clothed with authority to enforce the election laws.

The fact that these laws are deemed objectionable by a majority of both Houses of Congress is urged as a sufficient warrant for this legislation.

There are two lawful ways to overturn legislative enactments. One is their repeal; the other is the decision of a competent tribunal against their validity. The effect of this bill is to deprive the executive department of the Government of the means to execute laws which are not repealed, which have not been declared invalid, and which it is, therefore, the duty of the Executive and of every other department of Government to obey and to enforce.

I have in my former message on this subject expressed a willingness to concur in suitable amendments for the improvement of the election laws; but I cannot consent to their absolute and entire repeal, and I cannot approve legislation which seeks to prevent their enforcement.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1879.

Mr. MCMAHON. I move we proceed to the consideration of the vetoed bill immediately; and on that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill? on which the Constitution requires the yeas and nays shall be taken; and, in obedience thereto, the Clerk will now call the roll.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 102, nays 78, not voting 106; as follows:

YEAS—102.

Acklen,	Deuster,	King,	Simonton,
Aiken,	Dibrell,	Klotz,	Singleton, O. R.
Armfield,	Dickey,	Manning,	Slemons,
Atkins,	Elam,	Martin, Benj. F.	Sparks,
Bachman,	Evins,	Martin, Edward L.	Springer,
Beale,	Ewing,	McKenzie,	Steele,
Bicknell,	Felton,	McMahon,	Stephens,
Blackburn,	Finley,	McMillin,	Stevenson,
Bliss,	Forney,	Mills,	Talbott,
Bouck,	Gibson,	Morrison,	Taylor,
Bright,	Goode,	Myers,	Thompson,
Caldwell,	Gunter,	New,	Tillman,
Clardy,	Hammond, N. J.	O'Connor,	Townshend, R. W.
Clark, John B.	Hatch,	Persons,	Turner, Oscar
Clymer,	Henkle,	Phelps,	Upson,
Cobb,	Henry,	Phister,	Vance,
Coffroth,	Herbert,	Reagan,	Waddill,
Colerick,	Herndon,	Richardson, J. S.	Wellborn,
Converse,	Hill,	Robertson,	Whiteaker,
Cook,	Hooker,	Ross,	Whitthorne,
Covert,	Hostetler,	Rothwell,	Williams, Thomas
Cravens,	House,	Ryon, John W.	Willis,
Culberson,	Hull,	Samford,	Wilson,
Davidson,	Hunton,	Sawyer,	Wise.
Davis, Joseph J.	Johnston,	Scales,
Davis, Lowndes H.	Kimmel,	Shelley,

NAYS—78.

Aldrich, William	Davis, George R.	Humphrey,	Richardson, D. P.
Anderson,	Deering,	Jorgensen,	Robinson,
Baker,	Dunnell,	Joyce,	Russell, W. A.
Barber,	Errett,	Keifer,	Ryan, Thomas
Bayne,	Farr,	Killinger,	Sapp,
Blake,	Ferdon,	Marsh,	Shallenberger,
Bowman,	Field,	Martin, Joseph J.	Sherwin,
Brewer,	Fisher,	Mason,	Smith, A. Herr
Briggs,	Fort,	McCoid,	Thomas,
Browne,	Garfield,	McCook,	Townsend, Amos
Burrows,	Hammond, John	McGowan,	Tyler,
Butterworth,	Harris, Benj. W.	McKinley,	Updegraff, J. T.
Calkins,	Haskell,	Mitchell,	Updegraff, Thomas
Cannon,	Hawk,	Monroe,	Van Aernam,
Carpenter,	Hawley,	Neal,	Wait,
Caswell,	Henderson,	Norcross,	Ward,
Conger,	Hiscock,	O'Neill,	Williams, C. G.
Cowgill,	Horr,	Orth,	Willits.
Crapo,	Houk,	Osmer,
Daggett,	Hubbell,	Overton,

NOT VOTING—106.

Aldrich, N. W.	Einstein,	Lewis,	Russell, Daniel L.
Atherton,	Ellis,	Lindsey,	Singleton, J. W.
Bailey,	Ford,	Loring,	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Ballou,	Forsythe,	Lounsbery,	Smith, William E.
Barlow,	Frost,	Lowe,	Speer,
Belford,	Frye,	McLane,	Starin,
Beltzhoover,	Geddes,	Miles,	Stone,
Bingham,	Gillette,	Miller,	Tucker,
Bland,	Godshalk,	Money,	Turner, Thomas
Blount,	Hall,	Morse,	Urner,
Boyd,	Harmer,	Morton,	Valentine,
Bragg,	Harris, John T.	Muldrow,	Van Voorhis,
Brigham,	Hayes,	Muller,	Voorhis,
Buckner,	Hazelton,	Murch,	Warner,
Cabell,	Heilman,	Newberry,	Washburn,
Camp,	Hurd,	Nicholls,	Weaver,
Carlisle,	James,	O'Brien,	Wells,
Chalmers,	Jones,	O'Reilly,	White,
Chittenden,	Kelley,	Pierce,	Wilber,
Claflin,	Kenna,	Poehler,	Wood, Fernando
Clark, Alvah A.	Ketcham,	Pound,	Wood, Walter A.
Cox,	Kitchin,	Prescott.	Wright,
Crowley,	Knott,	Price,	Yocum,
De La Matyr,	Ladd,	Reed,	Young, Casey
Dick,	Lapham,	Rice,	Young, Thomas L.
Dunn,	Lay,	Richmond,
Dwight,	Le Fevre,	Robeson,

So (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the bill was not passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. NICHOLLS. For reasons I have already given, I decline to vote.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. WILBER, of New York. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. HILL. My colleague, Mr. ATHERTON, is paired with Mr. NEWBERRY, of Michigan; and my colleague, Mr. WARNER, is paired with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island.

Mr. MANNING. Mr. MONEY is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan. If Mr. MONEY were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. MULDROW. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey; and my other colleague, Mr. MULLER, is paired with Mr. HEILMAN, of Indiana.

Mr. DICKEY. My colleague, Mr. GEDDES, is paired with Mr. BARLOW, of Vermont.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. PRICE. If he were here, I should vote "ay" and he would vote "no."

Mr. COX. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. MORTON. If he were present, I should vote "ay" and he would vote "no."

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. My colleague, Mr. KITCHIN, is paired with Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. HURD. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CLAFLIN. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. CALDWELL. My colleague, Mr. CARLISLE, is paired with Mr. MILLER, of New York. If Mr. CARLISLE were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. COFFROTH. My colleague, Mr. BELTZHOOVER, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. BINGHAM. If Mr. BELTZHOOVER were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. MCLANE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. URNER. I suppose he would vote "no;" I should vote "ay."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, is paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut. If Mr. SINGLETON were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. LADD, of Maine, is absent by leave of the House. If he were here, he would vote "ay."

Mr. ELLIS. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. HARMER. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BAILEY. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. PHISTER. My colleague, Mr. THOMAS TURNER, is paired with Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. If present, my colleague would vote "ay."

Mr. KNOTT. I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. FRYE.

Mr. HUNTON. My colleagues, Messrs. TUCKER and CABELL, are detained from the House by sickness and are paired respectively with Messrs. LAPHAM, of New York, and BOYD, of Illinois.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. BUCKNER, is paired with Mr. CHITTENDEN, of New York. If present, Mr. BUCKNER would vote "ay."

Mr. RICHMOND. I am paired with Mr. PRESCOTT, of New York. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. BOUCK. My colleague, Mr. BRAGG, is paired with Mr. JAMES, of New York. If Mr. BRAGG were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. JOHNSTON. My colleague, Mr. HARRIS, is paired with Mr. CROWLEY, of New York. If Mr. HARRIS were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, is paired with Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York. If present, Mr. CHALMERS would vote "ay."

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am paired with Mr. LORING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. POUND. I am paired with Mr. DUNN, of Arkansas. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. ROBINSON. My colleague, Mr. MORSE, is paired with Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LAPHAM. On all political questions I am paired with Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia.

Mr. HISCOCK. My colleague, Mr. WALTER A. WOOD, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama, and Mr. REED, of Maine, is paired with Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. If present, Messrs. WOOD and REED would vote "no;" and Messrs. LEWIS and WELLS "ay."

Mr. WAIT. My colleague, Mr. MILES, is paired with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois.

Mr. MCGOWAN. My colleague, Mr. STONE, is paired with Mr. MONEY. If present, Mr. STONE would vote "no." Mr. STARIN, of New York, is paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleagues, Messrs. WASHBURN and POEHLER, are paired.

Mr. MCCOOK. My colleague, Mr. EINSTEIN, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. O'BRIEN. If Mr. EINSTEIN were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. HAWK. My colleague, Mr. HAYES, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I am paired with Mr. VALENTINE, of Nebraska.

Mr. SAPP. My colleague, Mr. PRICE, is paired with Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. If Mr. PRICE were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. TYLER. Mr. BRIGHAM, of New Jersey, is absent by leave of the House. If he were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. WHITE. I am paired with Mr. THOMAS TURNER, of Kentucky. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. COWGILL. My colleague, Mr. HEILMAN, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with Mr. MULLER, of New York. If present, Mr. HEILMAN would vote "no."

Mr. BLAKE. My colleague, Mr. ROBESON, is paired with Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, of New York.

Mr BREWER. My colleague, Mr. NEWBERRY, is paired with Mr. ATHERTON, of Ohio. If present, Mr. NEWBERRY would vote "no."

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. FROST, of Missouri, is paired with Mr. BRIGHAM, of New Jersey.

Mr. POEHLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WASHBURN.

Mr. FISHER. My colleague, Mr. DICK, is paired with Mr. LAY, of Missouri. If present, my colleague would vote "no."

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, is paired with Mr. WARNER, of Ohio; if present, Mr. ALDRICH would vote "no."

Mr. HAMMOND, of New York. My colleague, Mr. DWIGHT, is paired with Mr. MULDROW, of Mississippi; if present, my colleague would vote "no."

Mr. BRIGGS. My colleague, Mr. HALL, is paired with Mr. SPEER, of Georgia; if present, Mr. HALL would vote "no."

Mr. HAZELTON. I am paired on this bill with Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia; if he were present, I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I move that the House do now adjourn sine die.

Mr. KLOTZ. I hope we will not adjourn until we clear off the business on the Speaker's table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 716) to provide for the conveyance of the low grounds in the city of Washington under the provisions of the act of Congress, chapter 96, approved May 7, 1822; and

A bill (S. No. 696) for the relief of William Nephew King, jr.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 71) authorizing the appointment of a commission to lease a building for a city post-office in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the resolution of the House of Representatives providing for the printing of 10,000 extra copies of House report No. 14, first session, Forty-sixth Congress; and the resolution of the House of Representatives providing for printing 8,000 copies of the eulogies delivered on the late J. E. Leonard, a member of the Forty-fifth Congress from the State of Louisiana, together with a portrait of the deceased.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 697) to establish post-roads in certain States therein named.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the bill just received from the Senate for the relief of William Nephew King.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I object.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KLOTZ. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only twenty-four members voting therefor.

Mr. McKENZIE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 44.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at two o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BOUCK: The petition of Captain Samuel Neff and others, for the erection of a light-house at the mouth of Fox River, Wisconsin—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BREWER: The petition of Walker, McGraw & Co. and other manufacturers of tobacco in Detroit, Michigan, against the passage of the free leaf-tobacco bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRIGGS: The petition of Adaline M. Osgood, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARDY: The petition of citizens of Saint Genevieve, Missouri, for an appropriation for an improvement of the harbor at that place—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of citizens of Missouri, that a duty be imposed on sulphate of barytes—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. FORNEY: The petition of Samuel Shafer, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of Paul H. Elvers, that action be taken by Congress in regard to an alleged discovery he has made to prevent the spread of hog cholera—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RYAN, of Kansas: The petition of citizens of Kansas, for a post-route from Cimarron to Grinnell, via Buffalo Center and Dighton, Kansas—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi: Papers relating to the war claims of Walter L. Campbell, John Cleary, Samuel W. Lancaster, Horace D. Mead, Consider Parish, and Nelson Potter—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a paper relating to the claim of William P. Baggett, for payment of a certain check issued to him by the United States before the war, payment of which was suspended by reason of his residence in Mississippi during the rebellion—to the Committee of Claims.

Also, a paper relating to the claim of James M. Lyles for compensation for cotton alleged to have been improperly seized by United States officials in Newton County, Mississippi, August 1, 1865—to the same committee.

By Mr. VAN AERNAM: Papers relating to the war claims of Jules Beauchery and the heirs of William H. Whitefield—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHITEAKER: The petition of Mary J. Francis, for a pension—to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS: The petition of W. G. Meier & Co. and 50 other tobacconists of Louisville, Kentucky, against the passage of the free leaf-tobacco bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 24, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of R. L. Black and others, citizens of Lake City, Florida, soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONAS. I present a memorial of the State constitutional convention of Louisiana, in favor of the establishment of a naval and marine school in the city of New Orleans. I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the people of Louisiana, in constitutional convention assembled, would respectfully petition your honorable body to direct the Secretary of the Navy to establish a naval and marine school at the port of New Orleans, in which to educate and fit boys of a proper age for the naval service or the merchant marine.

Your memorialists are deeply impressed with the necessity that the marines engaged in the merchant service between the ports of the West Indies, the Spanish Main, and of South America should be fully acclimated against yellow fever, thereby diminishing the danger of importing this dreadful scourge on our shores. In the city of New Orleans there are a large number of youths who are proof against the disease, and who with proper training and tuition would become valuable sailors.

Your memorialists are fully convinced that the manifold advantages that will ensue from the establishment of this proposed naval school will greatly overbalance the comparatively small annual outlay that will be requisite for its maintenance.

Wherefore they pray that this memorial be favorably considered and acted upon by your honorable body and for the speedy establishment of such naval school.

And, as in duty bound, they will ever pray.

LOUIS A. WILTZ,
President Constitutional Convention of the State of Louisiana.
WM. H. HARRIS,
Secretary.

JOSEPH B. COLLINS.

Mr. LOGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 706) to amend an act for the relief of Joseph B. Collins, approved March 3, 1879, to report it without amendment. This is merely an amendment to a bill that has already passed, and I ask its consideration by the Senate at the present time. It will take but a moment. It is very important to this man that it should be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not know that I have any objection to the bill, but I should like to know whether it comes from a committee?

Mr. LOGAN. It does. It is reported from the Committee on Military Affairs; and if the Senator will hear me one-half minute I will explain it. A few days ago (I do not remember the date now) we passed an amendment to the law of March 3, 1879, that prohibited this man from receiving pay during the time he was out of the service. When that was presented to the Pay department they said that under the law they did not understand whether he was to retain the year's pay that he received when he was mustered out of the service. The only object of this bill is to make that clear. It declares that he shall receive no pay for the time he was out of the service, but he shall retain the year's pay that he did receive at the time of being mustered out. That is all there is of it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It amends an act for the relief of Joseph B. Collins, approved March 3, 1879, so as to strike out all after the words "mustered out" and insert:

Provided, That he shall receive no pay or allowance whatever for the time he has been out of the military service of the United States, and shall not be required to refund to the United States the year's pay and allowance received by him at the time he was mustered out of the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BAILEY. By direction of the Committee on Privileges and Elections I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the expenses of the investigation ordered by the Senate to be made by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in relation to certain matters connected with the election of Hon. J. J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, be paid out of the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate, to be disbursed upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or the chairman of the sub-committee that may be designated by said committee to take testimony in the case.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution, but I suggest to the Senator that the expenses ought to be paid subject to the control of the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and not merely upon the vouchers of the chairman of the committee. Such a course would be unusual; and I know the Senator does not intend that it shall be taken from the control of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses in that way; but that the expenses should go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, as all other resolutions of the kind provide.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator how the Committee on Contingent Expenses could know anything about the necessary expenses of a committee in Kansas.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Of course they cannot; but the Senator well knows that when a payment is made on his order or the order of the chairman of the sub-committee it must then go to and must be indorsed, according to the rules of the Senate, by the Committee on Contingent Expenses before the account can be paid or certified properly at the Treasury Department.

Mr. BAILEY. How can that committee pass upon it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will state to the Senator from West Virginia that the cashier of the Secretary of the Senate himself suggested this particular mode of proceeding. I consulted the Secretary and the cashier of the Secretary, who made this very suggestion as to the way it should be done.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is no practical difference between the Senator and myself on the subject. We all agree. The only question is whether by a resolution of this kind the vouchers will go through the regular course after being certified by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or the chairman of a sub-committee of that committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator knows that no claim can be paid until it is approved by the chairman. While we are out in Kansas in a little town there how could a bill be paid if we had to wait until it should be approved by the chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses? The resolution is right.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator and I will agree——

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator will allow me a minute I will explain further. The Senator says that he has consulted the cashier or the financial clerk of the Senate, and this is the form adopted. It is unusual, because the money under this resolution can be paid upon the voucher of the chairman, to which I have no objection; and nobody has objection if it is necessary to passing a special resolution to cause it to be paid in that way; but there is a rule of the Senate in force which provides that money shall only be paid after the approval of the Committee on Contingent Expenses. Under the circumstances it is evident that the money may be drawn in advance by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections; but when the accounts come back here they should go regularly through the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; otherwise you ignore that committee entirely. This has been the case in several instances, notably, and the first one probably, in the Oregon investigation, when the then Senator from Indiana (Mr. Morton) was caught out there without money to pay his expenses. It was afterward changed by an amendment to one of the appropriation bills so that the chairman might pay out money, but that on the return of the committee the accounts should go regularly through the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate. That is all I wanted to say.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will look at the law he will find that it requires the money to be paid upon the draft or order of the chairman of the committee. The money is disbursed upon vouchers approved by him; and the law requires him to file those vouchers with the Committee on Contingent Expenses. There is no difficulty at all about it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is what I stated to the Senate a moment ago.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The resolution simply provides that the money shall be disbursed upon vouchers approved by the chairman; but the law requires that the chairman shall take the vouchers and file them with the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate. So there is not a particle of difference or difficulty about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair dislikes to interrupt Senators in the discussion; but he begs leave to call the attention of Senators to the fact that a motion to proceed by unanimous consent in the morning hour to the consideration of a bill or resolution is not debatable. If it were, the whole morning hour might be consumed by a single motion of that sort. The question is, Will the Senate give unanimous consent to the consideration of this resolution? Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MAXEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 717) authorizing the Secretary of War to repair the United States barracks and arsenal at Austin, Texas, and making an appropriation for the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 718) to repeal section 3 of chapter 225, Statutes at Large, approved July 24, 1876; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. WALLACE, it was Ordered, That P. Ahl & Brother have leave to withdraw their papers from the files of the Senate.

CASE OF FITZ JOHN PORTER.

Mr. BAYARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Senate resolution agreed to May 12, 1879, authorizing the printing of papers in the case of General Fitz John Porter, be amended so as to give authority to the Committee on Military Affairs to have the usual number of copies for the use of the Senate printed, including all papers relating to the case that may be submitted to the consideration of the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of correspondence to accompany the report to the Senate on the 17th instant in reply to a resolution calling for information as to the circumstances which led to the arrest and removal of J. M. Bell and other Cherokee Indians from the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. GARLAND. In the absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] who introduced the resolution calling for that information, I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution on the Calendar reported by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] yesterday from the Committee on Appropriations fixing the time for the final adjournment of the present session of Congress.

The resolution was read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

Mr. VANCE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar a bill authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to extend the area for taking up and impounding of domestic animals in the District.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business having been concluded it does not require unanimous consent, but a majority can take up the bill.

Mr. VANCE. I move, then, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1856.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1856) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to extend the area for the taking up and impounding of domestic animals in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the commissioners of the District of Columbia to prescribe rules for taking up and impounding of domestic animals found running at large in the District of Columbia.

Mr. VANCE. I ask to have read at the Clerk's desk a brief letter from the health officer of the District, showing the necessity for the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, OFFICE OF HEALTH OFFICER,
Washington, June 13, 1879.

DEAR SIR: In the brief conversation had with you yesterday at the Capitol I was not enabled to explain satisfactorily the object to be accomplished by the passage of the bill relative to the extension of the area for taking up and impounding domestic animals in the District of Columbia.

As the law now stands, the impounding of animals found running at large is confined to the limits of the two cities—Washington and Georgetown. Since the enactment of the law the suburbs have become very thickly populated, and the people throughout the county of Washington, which includes all that portion of the District lying beyond the city limits, suffering from the depredations of domestic animals are constantly calling upon the authorities to afford them the same protection as is granted their brethren in the more densely populated districts.

The bill merely grants authority to the commissioners of the District to extend the area for taking up animals to such portions of the county as in their judgment may require it. I do not think objection to it could come from any source, and I hope its passage may be secured at the present session; it passed the House without objection.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SMITH TOWNSHEND, M. D.,
Health Officer District of Columbia.

Hon. Z. B. VANCE, U. S. S.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF DISTRICT WORKINGMEN.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask leave of the Senate to take a joint resolution from the table introduced by me yesterday; and I think after its reading it will take but a moment. It is merely to amend the section of the statutes of 1878 in one particular, and provides the clerical force to comply with that law. If there is no objection to it I should be very glad to have the Senate consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R No. 42) to provide for the speedy payment of the workingmen of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In hearing the resolution read hastily from the desk, I do not comprehend the full scope of it; but it appears to me to be a very complicated question, and unless some committee has examined it and recommend it, I think it rather dangerous to start upon such a course and to undertake to pass a resolution without having it properly examined. I appeal to the Senator to know whether that is the case or not.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state that this question has been before the committees of both Houses. A very different proposition, extending much further, was stricken out, as I understand, from the legislative appropriation bill in the Senate. This resolution provides that under the section of the act of 1878 referred to, which appropriates for the payment of these men, there shall be payment made to the men whose claims are due and unpaid. It provides that if the $75,000 is not sufficient to pay in full, then there shall be a pro rata distribution, so as to pay all a certain proportion; and that ends it. Then it provides for the clerks to make up these accounts. That is all there is in this proposition. It is based on this section of the law whereby the appropriation is made, and merely provides for paying those to whom the claims are due and unpaid—determined claims, and the Secretary is authorized to provide clerks for the purpose of doing this business. That is all there is in this proposition. It does not change the law at all. It stands on the law as it is, but provides for this payment. If the Senator will read the resolution he will see that it is drawn precisely with the view I have stated. I drew it with that view; and it is merely to authorize this payment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This question has been discussed for two or three sessions, or perhaps for two or three Congresses. There is a law now upon the statute-books that appears to cover the ground as thoroughly as any amendment to it that has yet been offered. As the Senator has said, the Committee on Appropriations several times have considered the question whether or not a change could take place that would be of greater advantage to the District, to the Government, and to the employés whom it contemplates paying; and each time some question came up and there was a division among those interested—one wanted this thing, others wanted that thing, and others wanted the law to remain as it is. The Committee on Appropriations, after having considered the matter and hearing the parties representing different interests, came to the conclusion that it was best to let the law remain as it now stands.

In addition to this, I see from the reading of the joint resolution that there are additional clerks to be employed. That matter has not been considered by the Committee on Appropriations further than that the Committee on Appropriations did at this session grant the clerks asked by the Department for this purpose and other purposes relating to the District. The Committee on Appropriations increased the number of clerks.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will allow me to say that this joint resolution does not provide for increased clerks at all. It only directs the Secretary to use his clerks for the purpose of making up these accounts. If the Senator will read the joint resolution, he will see that it does not ask for any increase of clerks. I will state the reason of this provision if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I talked with the Secretary myself on this very question, and with the Auditor, and they said to me that they had not a sufficient number of clerks to go on and make this distribution. After the amendment failed that was on the legislative appropriation bill, I looked over the law and examined it carefully. It is a law susceptible, I think, of construction. I drafted this resolution so as to make no change whatever in the law, and to provide, as the law provides, that a pro rata distribution shall be made. The law of 1878 provides for that, and the joint resolution only amends it so that that distribution shall be carried out, and that the Secretary shall use clerks for the purpose of making these accounts up. That is all there is in the resolution. If the Senator will read it he will find that is all there is of it. This was the very objection made to me by the Auditor and the Secretary, that they could not have the accounts made up to see if there was anything due. If there is nothing due, as a matter of course nothing will be paid; but the appropriation stands there under the law providing that it shall be done; and they said the reason it could not be done was the reason I have given. This joint resolution provides for it, and that is all there is of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It really appears to me that this joint resolution ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia and be looked into and examined and reported upon. It is a dangerous question. The Senator speaks of the Department and of having consulted them. I ask him, is there anything here from the Department recommending a change in the law of 1878?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate. I did not suppose there would be any objection to this measure. Inasmuch as the matter was before the Committee on Appropriations, I supposed there would be no objection to it in this form, for I struck out everything that was objectionable as developed here in the Senate as appearing in the appropriation bill, and supposed there would be no objection. But there is a letter from the Auditor, and if the President of the Senate will indulge me by having the clerk read it, the Senator will find the Auditor states the reasons why this cannot be done as the law now stands. I ask that the Clerk read the letter I sent up to the Clerk's desk yesterday with the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the journal clerk that the letter has gone to the Printing Office to be printed under the order of the Senate, and has not yet been returned.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator, then, to allow the joint resolution to lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. LOGAN. I will certainly do so. The letter from the Auditor explains the whole thing. I sent it up with the joint resolution yesterday.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator if we had not better have it referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and let them make a report to-morrow? It relates to a matter within their province, as the Senator knows. The matter belongs to the District, and that committee has not examined it. So the chairman informs me. I have just asked the chairman whether it had been before his committee, and he answered in the negative.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course I have no objection to a reference if Senators desire it. I introduced the joint resolution and asked that it lie on the table so that it could be taken up this morning and disposed of. It is a matter that, it seems to me, is easily understood.

Mr. HARRIS. I really am not prepared to express any opinion upon the joint resolution, but if it involves any question at all, I think the better way would be to let it go to the committee.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senate can do what they please with it. It involves no question in the world except it provides that the Secretary shall pay this money if it is due, and it provides that he shall detail clerks in his own Department, already provided for, to attend to making up the accounts. That is all there is in the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator to let it be referred to the committee. I will look at it to-day, and if I find it so simple as the Senator seems to think, there will be no objection to reporting it back at once.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator asks for a reference, of course I shall make no objection. The committee can report it back to-morrow, as a matter of course.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes; of course. Let it be referred.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the motion is carried I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to some phraseology that I see here in the joint resolution that I do not quite understand. It reads:

That the sum of money therein appropriated to pay the workingmen of said District shall be paid to those whose claims are due and unpaid.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. To whom?

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the origin of this appropriation, it is to pay workingmen who actually performed service in the District of Columbia under certain contractors.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly; and their payment is provided for in the law, and this joint resolution is an amendment to the law, and both taken together explain the whole thing perfectly.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wanted to have attention called to this phraseology, to learn what changes it made in the law.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator by reading the law will see that the persons are named in the law and that the joint resolution refers to the persons named in the law.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator will agree with me that it is rather a complicated question.

Mr. LOGAN. When we understand the law upon which it is based, there is no difficulty in understanding this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC SERVICE.

Mr. BECK submitted the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That a joint committee composed of five Senators and seven Representatives be appointed in such manner as each House may determine to examine and report at an early day of the next December session of this Congress what changes, if any, ought to be made in the mode of guarding or collecting the revenue either from customs or internal taxation or in the management of the various Departments and bureaus of the Government, with a view to efficiency in service and economy in appropriations of the public money. Said committee shall report whether changes from permanent to annual appropriations would be advantageous or otherwise, in whole or in part; it shall have power to sit during the recess, to examine witnesses, send for persons and papers, administer oaths, appoint sub-committees, and visit such places as will enable it to obtain such information as it may desire; and the expenses of the committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the two Houses in the proportion of the number of the members of each.

Mr. BECK. I ask that the resolution may be allowed to lie on the table until to-morrow, when I may say a few words explaining why I offer it, and then the Senate can do as they please with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. EPPA HUNTON of Virginia, Mr. GILBERT DE LA MATYR of Indiana, and Mr. HENRY S. NEAL of Ohio, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. S. S. COX of New York, Mr. HIESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. JOSEPH G. CANNON of Illinois, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 113) to provide for the purchase of the stereotype plates of the final reports upon the centennial exhibition of 1876; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 697) to establish post-roads in certain States therein named; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2329) authorizing the Conway National Bank of Conway, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.

SPECIAL IMPROVEMENT ASSESSMENTS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HARRIS, Mr. WHYTE, and Mr. ROLLINS.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, Mr. MAXEY, and Mr. ALLISON.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR VARIOUS PURPOSES.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that Senate joint resolution No. 39 be taken up. It is in the nature of an appropriation bill reported yesterday from the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives was considered as in committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 9, to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The object of that amendment is to allow only fifteen days' extra pay instead of thirty.

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe the customary donation to officers has been thirty days' pay after the adjournment.

Mr. BECK. I introduced the resolution thinking that was the fact; but after a careful examination we found this to be the fact, that thirty days was the additional allowance at each regular session of Congress; but at each of the extra sessions it has varied from twelve to twenty days, sometimes seventeen, sometimes sixteen, none beyond twenty. Mr. Nixon, the financial clerk, went back to 1866 or 1867, going over each extra session.

Mr. ANTHONY. Were these employés paid the customary allowance after the close of the regular session?

Mr. BECK. All; they get thirty days' pay at the close of each regular session.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to ask whether or not at the end of the last regular session the thirty days' usual allowance had been made.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir, it was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless a separate vote be demanded, the Chair will put the question on the other amendments reported by the committee in gross, after they shall have been read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I shall propose some amendments to section 3, not by the committee, but after consultation with certain members of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator might say they were intended to be included, but by the phraseology it seems they are not.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Section 2 can be voted on in gross, and then section 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the amendment reported by the committee as section 2.

The following amendment, proposed as section 2, was read:

SEC. 2. That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay Jonn E. Kelley, for services as messenger to the Committee of Ways and Means during the present session of Congress, at the rate of $1,000 per annum.

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for stationery and newspapers for the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1879, $800.

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for pay of folders for the Senate for the fiscal year 1879, $100.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Wilbur F. McDaniel for services as messenger to Senate document-room, under resolution of the Senate of May 20, 1879, for the fiscal year 1879, $80, and for the fiscal year 1880, $720; in all, $800.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to the following officers and employés of the Senate whose services have ceased since the beginning of the present session, and who were not embraced in the provisions of the "joint resolution fixing the date on which the pay of committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives, who are paid during the session only, shall begin for this session, and for other purposes," namely, the chief clerk, the executive clerk, the chaplain, the assistant postmaster, and the clerks to committees receiving annual salaries, a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate per annum they were paid respectively when their employment ceased.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move to amend in line 5, after the word "session," by inserting:

And who are not now in the employ of the Senate.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now, in line 11, after the word "postmaster," I move to insert:

The clerk to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that that should be put in after the word "salaries," in line 12.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think I have got it in the right place.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care about pressing the matter if the chairman is satisfied he has got it right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to add after line 14 at the end of the section:

And that there be paid, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, one month's pay to each of the persons discharged from the Treasury Department by reason of reduction in the force under the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes."

I desire to make a brief explanation of this amendment. In the legislative bill, which has just become a law, there was a provision deducting from the force in one of the bureaus of the Treasury twenty-eight female employés, of which twenty-eight there were transferred seven to one bureau and five to another, leaving sixteen employés who will be absolutely discharged on the 1st of July, in a few days. Happening in the Treasury Department this morning, this matter was called to my attention by the Assistant Secretary saying that we had failed to make the usual provision for the one month's pay to these employés. That has been usual; at any rate it has been done in several instances where there has been a permanent reduction of the force. Of course I have had no opportunity of presenting this matter to the Committee on Appropriations. I think it is a meritorious thing to do. It is the customary thirty days' additional pay to a meritorious class of employés. I have a letter from the Assistant Secretary, in which he says:

I send you herewith a draught of an amendment to the bill which you spoke of this morning as pending in the Senate Committee on Appropriations. If it can be passed, it will be a great relief to a number of poor women who will be discharged during this week.

I think there are twelve or fourteen in all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In the first place, this is subject to objection——

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it is subject to objection. This is not a regular appropriation bill. It is a joint resolution originating in the Senate. I have a right to offer any amendment I choose.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is a question. However, on the merits, the measure ought not to be put on this resolution. There is not a day that there is not some one discharged from some one of the Departments; there has not been a day in the last ten years, I presume, that something of that kind has not occurred. What is the case here? They had more clerks in the Treasurer's office than were necessary; they had less in other offices; consequently the Appropriations Committee in the regular bill named less for the Treasurer's office and more for other offices. As the Senator has said, seven have been transferred to one office and five to another.

Instead of this being usual, it is very unusual, I think. During my service of eight years I do not think a single case of the kind has occurred. If we are to go through the Departments and give thirty days' extra pay to all persons who are dismissed or dropped, when will it end and where will it go? This is a new thing entirely, so far as my experience goes. It may have been done many years ago, possibly, but I think the Senator will admit that within the last ten years, at any rate, it has not been done. If you begin, where will you stop? To-morrow fourteen other clerks may be dismissed, equally meritorious, and we shall have to provide for them. The Department has not asked this, as I understand. It is true the Senator has a letter which has not been read yet.

Mr. ALLISON. I will hand it to the Senator and he can read it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I want Senators to hear it. Let it be read from the desk.

Mr. ALLISON. I have read it all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the Assistant Secretary says in that letter that if this is done fourteen in number of meritorious persons will get thirty days' extra pay. That could be said every day in the year. I think it a very dangerous thing. It is something that never has been done and never ought to be done. The Departments can take care of themselves, and they do not ask Congress to make special appropriations for their employés. They have a contingent fund. It is true they cannot pay such things from that, but they usually, as I understand, allow the employés certain privileges. That is a matter of departmental regulation and not of law, as I understand. I think this will be a precedent that will cost I hardly know what in time and in money; therefore I think upon the merits, though I believe the amendment is subject to objection, which I will reserve, it ought not to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator make a point of order that the amendment is out of order? Because now is the time to make it if the Senator intends to make it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that under the usage the point can be reserved, and I certainly will make the point of order unless the Senator wants to say something. If so, I do not want to cut him off; I want him to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, after the amendment has been adopted the point of order would come too late.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Of course I agree with the Chair, after it is adopted; the point must be made before it is adopted. But the Senator from Iowa wishes to be heard, and if so, he would rather be heard probably before the point of order is made.

Mr. ALLISON. I, of course, have no interest in this matter. I do not know a single person to be affected by it; I have no knowledge of these persons whatever. I only know that within a day or two we have passed a bill which cuts off a few meritorious employés in the Treasury without giving them notice. Now, the Senator from West Virginia says that people are being discharged every day from the Treasury. That is true. If they are discharged for cause, they are discharged without extra pay, but I think I can state without fear of contradiction that in every Department of this Government where persons are discharged, ordinarily they have thirty days' leave always given to them; that is, they are allowed thirty days' additional pay. That is the uniform custom in all the Departments.

Mr. KERNAN. Does my friend think that should be so uniform a practice? What reason is there for it?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of the Interior would not find it very difficult to find a reason for such a measure, when from the beginning of the Government we have given this extra pay to our own employés; and the reason why it applies to those of the two Houses should naturally apply to those of the Departments.

The Senator says there is no precedent. I remember a marked precedent, and the Senator will when his attention is called to it. In 1876, when we had a long controversy with reference to the employés in the Treasury and a reduction of the force, we gave every one of the discharged employés sixty days' pay. They were cut off immediately by the bill without notice, and it was said that most of them had not money enough to go to their homes in the States, and we passed a law giving them sixty days' pay instead of thirty.

It is an almost uniform rule. I cannot of course call attention now to the particular instances; but I know of a great many instances in my own recollection during my service here where, when we reduced the force, we have allowed thirty days' additional pay. We have reduced the force here in one particular bureau of this Government by cutting off twenty-eight female employés and then provided for twelve of them in another, leaving, I believe, sixteen who will be compelled to go out in a few days without any compensation and without any notice. All that is proposed is to give these people thirty days' pay. It is a meritorious thing; it is a just thing. I do not know one of these employés; I have no knowledge on the subject except that I am not willing, when my attention is called to it, not to provide for them, or at least not to call the attention of the Senate to the fact. I trust the Senate will adopt this amendment and provide for them in the way I propose.

Mr. BECK. I think the only difficulty in the way of the merits of this case is that the Treasurer of the United States last December told Congress that he had that many more people than he needed, that he did not want them, and yet he has kept them from that day to this when he had no use for them, doing nothing, and now he wants thirty days' extra pay for them. He told us in his report that he had no use for them in that Department and did not want them. So he said, and yet he has had them five months absolutely doing nothing.

Mr. ALLISON. These people are now employed, and the force is reduced by reason of our action.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon. We reduced it because the Treasurer in his report last December told us he had no use for them.

Mr. ALLISON. For the next fiscal year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the amendment is subject to a point of order: first, it is not estimated for by any Department; and, secondly, it comes from no committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will rule that the Senate decided it on the 1st day of May of this present year on a motion by the Senator from Kansas to amend House bill No. 1343. The Senate by a vote of 33 to 23 decided that that bill was not a general appropriation bill. If that bill was not an appropriation bill, a multo fortiori this is not; and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order; and the question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I was in great doubt about it myself, but I am satisfied now that according to the decision of the Senate at that time the Chair is right. Upon the facts in the case, however, I thought the Senate was wrong then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So did I, but the majority thought the other way.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no desire to prolong this debate. It is so clear to me that this precedent is dangerous that I think it hardly necessary to add anything to what the Senator from Kentucky and myself have said. Even the Senator that proposes the amendment tells you it was a sort of sympathetic move of his. Being at the Treasury Department this morning and learning that some ladies were to be discharged, for whom he has great sympathy, in his goodness of heart he comes here and offers the amendment in the Senate. There is something in that; but when we are voting on our judgment of what is right or wrong, leaving out of the question for the time being our sympathies, I think it hardly possible the Senate will think of adopting such a proposition. I submit the matter to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 23, noes 15; no quorum voting.

Mr. EATON and Mr. HARRIS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BECK. I have only one word to say as the yeas and nays are to be taken. This just establishes the principle that everybody discharged from the Government employment under any circumstances shall be entitled to thirty days' pay, from this time on. This is a case where the Treasurer of the United States himself in his report to us said he had that many more people than he needed. He has had them ever since December. They have been drawing pay when there was no use for their work, I suppose, from that time; and now they are to get thirty days' pay when they go out, and if they happen to be favorites they will be in somebody else's place in less than twenty-four hours after they are out, because he can dismiss whom he pleases and appoint whom he pleases. You pay them for the thirty days, and they will get somebody else's place in less than twenty-four hours, in all probability. If that is to be the rule established by the Senate, let it be done on the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to prolong the debate. This amendment provides for those who are discharged from the Treasury because of a reduction of the force.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Discharged by operation of law.

Mr. ALLISON. Discharged by operation of law, and not by operation of a law giving them notice of their discharge, but by the operation of a law passed within two or three or four days of the time of their discharge. If they had been notified a month ago, I should have been the last person to propose paying them; but when persons are suddenly dropped from the roll, not on account of any fault of their own but because of congressional action or for other reasons, it has been the uniform custom to pay in such cases.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. INGALLS. I am paired on all questions for the remainder of the session with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] who has been compelled to leave the city. I should be glad to vote for this amendment, but as I do not know how he would vote I refrain from voting.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not understand this to be a political question, and therefore I vote.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Kirkwood,	Ransom,
Anthony,	Cameron of Wis.,	Logan,	Rollins,
Blair,	Chandler,	McMillan,	Saunders,
Booth,	Conkling,	Maxey,	Whyte,
Burnside,	Davis of Illinois	Morrill,	Windom.
Butler,	Garland,	Paddock,
Call,	Groome,	Platt,

NAYS—15.

Beck,	Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Coke,	Hereford,	Randolph,	Williams.
Davis of W. Va.,	Houston,	Slater,

ABSENT—35.

Bailey,	Gordon,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Grover,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,
Blaine,	Hamlin,	Kellogg,	Teller,
Bruce,	Hampton,	Kernan,	Thurman,
Carpenter,	Hill of Colorado,	Lamar,	Vance,
Dawes,	Hill of Georgia,	McDonald,	Voorhees,
Edmunds,	Hoar,	McPherson,	Walker,
Farley,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Withers.
Ferry,	Johnston,	Plumb,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee as section 3, as amended.

Mr BECK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This is an important question, but I do not intend to detain the Senate longer than a moment. We are now setting a precedent that may cost the country a great many million dollars. The Senator from Iowa has offered an amendment which I do not recollect the words of, but I would amend it by adding "provided that they have served up to the time of dismissal," for I believe these very employés who have been out of the service for some time will be paid.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to such a proviso.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am opposed to it even with that amendment, but that amendment ought to be added.

Mr. CONKLING. What does the Senator mean? I do not think I understand him.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator of course has not listened to the discussion. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa pays certain employés of the Treasury who are dismissed by the legislative bill passed a few days ago. If we are to establish that precedent, if we are to pay all the employés who are dismissed from any Department, it will cost in time many millions of dollars.

The Senator from Iowa says he has no objection to an amendment adding a proviso:

Provided, That the persons discharged have remained in the service up to the 30th of June.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The letter of the Assistant Secretary to the Senator from Iowa would be a fraud and a deceit if they were discharged before.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The amendment I suggest can do no harm.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. But I cannot see any necessity for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from West Virginia please indicate his amendment?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it come in at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa:

Provided, The clerks so dismissed are in the service on the 30th of June.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit to the Senator from West Virginia that the present language covers what he desires:

And that there be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated one month's pay to each of the persons discharged from the Treasury Department by reason of the reduction in the force under the act entitled, &c.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I submit to my friend from Iowa that any one struck from the rolls during the present month will get pay under that, and it may be they have had the usual thirty days' leave of absence knowing that they would be dismissed on the 30th of June, because this was recommended last December. The Treasurer recommended this reduction last December, and it has been contained in each of the three legislative appropriation bills that have been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proviso offered by the Senator from West Virginia will now be read for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the last amendment it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That this additional month's pay shall only be allowed to such of the said Treasury employés as are in the service on the 30th of June, 1879.

Mr. BECK. I understand this clause now simply to mean that as the Treasurer had no sort of use for these employés on the 1st day of January or perhaps on the 1st day of December—they have been drawing their pay with great regularity I have no doubt, but I have not the least idea that any one of them has done any work for the last six months except drawing their pay—they shall now get a bonus of a month's extra pay. I desire to vote against the section anyhow, and am glad that the yeas and nays are ordered; perhaps mine will be the only vote against it.

The original resolution made provision for the pages and for the men who were only getting $2 a day and the laborers during the session who had to go home and pay their railroad fare and had to come back, all at their own expense. That was wise, it being supposed that the Chief Clerk, who was receiving $3,000 a year salary; the Executive Clerk, who was receiving $2,592 a year; clerks of committees, who were receiving an annual pay, even if they were only three months employed, of $2,220; the assistant postmaster, receiving $2,100, could get along without thirty days' extra pay. The addition of these men did not seem to me to be necessary. A man who is receiving $2,100, or $3,000, or $2,500 a year is not very much an object of charity. Therefore I did not see that there was much merit in section 3 even as to those worthy people who have been drawing pay for six months and are entitled to draw it for another month, and that is why I should like a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. ALLISON. The force in this bureau was reduced twenty-eight, it being a large force. The Treasurer notified Congress that he could reduce his force for the next fiscal year twenty-eight, and therefore he did not ask an appropriation for as many employés next year as this year. It is perfectly manifest that up to this hour the people who are there employed do not know whether they are to go or not, and there will not be a practical selection of the people who must go until within the next few days, so that it has been impossible for them to have notice that they were to go. That is all there is of that.

As to the other proposition of the Senator from Kentucky, I have nothing to say. That is part of the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and I shall vote for it with pleasure.

Mr. BECK. It was reported by a majority of the committee. I have nothing to say as to who voted one way or the other. I desire to vote against it now. The same law that enabled the Treasurer to tell us last December that he had no use for these people has been in force for a whole year, and yet he has kept all these supernumeraries under the pay of the Government, notwithstanding his own statement that he had no use for them, no work for them to do, no service for them to render. Instead of dismissing them he has kept them.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Suppose all that to be so, these ladies who are to be discharged did not know that they were the ones who were to be discharged. The point is whether these particular persons knew, or can tell even now, who will be discharged and who not?

Mr. BECK. I cannot say whether they knew or not. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Of course they did not know.

Mr. BECK. But the Treasurer could very well let that number know, if he desired.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. But that is not the point, whether the Secretary of the Treasury or the Treasurer did wrong. The question is whether this allowance should not be made to the ladies who are to be notified on the 30th of June that they will not be longer needed. By the operation of law twenty-eight female clerks are to be discharged, and the Secretary of the Treasury selects them. We give our employés here fifteen and thirty day's pay, grown men. I think it is a small business to refuse it to these ladies when they are discharged in this way without notice.

Mr. BECK. He has the absolute right and he will exercise it, I have no doubt in many instances, to reappoint these very people the next morning to the exclusion of anybody he does not like quite as well.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I want to say only one word to my friend from Illinois. He stated that we give our Senate employés thirty days' extra pay. We do so provide for the Senate employés who get a per diem, but not for those who have annual salaries. The thirty days' allowance never reaches the annual employés.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Because you never turn them out.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, yes, they are often changed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I would rather these ladies should have some money when they are discharged so that they can get out of town. Their salaries are barely enough to support them, and when they are turned out in this way some allowance should be made.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I happen to know that the persons who are to be relieved have not been designated; they do not know yet who is to go. The Assistant Secretary whose duty it is to make the discharges does not know yet whom he will discharge. It was only on Saturday last that the bill requiring the discharge became a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported as section 3, as amended.

Mr. INGALLS. If the motion should prevail, will the bill be still open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. I shall desire to offer an amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 30, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Hereford,	Platt,
Anthony,	Cameron of Wis.,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Bayard,	Chandler,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Blair,	Conkling,	Logan,	Saunders,
Booth,	Davis of Illinois,	McMillan,	Whyte,
Burnside,	Garland,	Maxey,	Windom.
Butler,	Groome,	Morrill,
Call,	Grover,	Paddock,

NAYS—10.

Beck,	Davis of W. Va.,	Slater,	Williams.
Cockrell,	Harris,	Vest,
Coke,	Houston,	Walker,

ABSENT—36.

Bailey,	Gordon,	Jones of Nevada,	Randolph,
Blaine,	Hamlin,	Kellogg,	Saulsbury,
Bruce,	Hampton,	Kernan,	Sharon,
Carpenter,	Hill of Georgia,	Lamar,	Teller,
Dawes,	Hill of Colorado,	McDonald,	Thurman,
Eaton,	Hoar,	McPherson,	Vance,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Farley,	Johnston,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Ferry,	Jonas,	Plumb,	Withers.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I offer the following as an additional section:

That for the purpose of providing for certain judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, the following sums are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated:

For payment of district attorneys and their assistants, $300,000;
For fees of clerks, $160,000;
For fees of United States commissioners, $140,000;
For fees of United States marshals and their deputies, $600,000;
For fees of jurors, $400,000;
For fees of witnesses, $550,000.
For support of United States prisoners, $193,000.
For rent of United States court-rooms, $67,000.

For expenses of bailiffs, criers, stationery, fuel, lights, furniture, watchmen and janitors, cleaners and sweepers, extra meals for impaneled jurors, transportation of prisoners, moving of records, salaried officers of the Government summoned as witnesses, travel in collecting evidence in United States cases, for holding seizures, for fees of justices of the peace acting as United States commissioners, for stenographers, for post-mortem examinations, for expenses of judges holding extra terms of court outside their districts, of interpreters, fees to township officers in summoning jurors, extra pay to experts as witnesses, for storage for surveys required as evidence, and for all other necessary miscellaneous expenditures, $250,000; making, in all, the sum of $2,690,000.

Mr. WHYTE. I inquire of the Senator from Kansas if this is not the same bill that the President vetoed yesterday?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir; it is the same bill that passed the House making appropriations for certain judicial expenditures, divested of all political features, and all modifications of the jury law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas as an additional section to the joint resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I did not catch what the Senator said about it exactly. Will he be kind enough to explain what his amendment contains?

Mr. INGALLS. It contains the provisions and items of appropriation of the bill that passed the House making appropriations for certain judicial expenses of the Government; it contains no political features, and is divested of all attempted modification of the jury system. It is strictly in accordance with the estimates that have been furnished to the Senate by the Department of Justice, and has already been acted upon favorably by the Appropriations Committees of both Houses.

Mr WALLACE. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

That the sums appropriated in this act for the persons and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; and no Department or officer of the Government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money under any of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment or payment of general or special deputy marshals for service in connection with elections or on election day until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CONKLING. Is this in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No point of order has been made upon it.

Mr. CONKLING. I make the point. This amendment is general legislation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This has been decided by the Chair this morning not to be a regular appropriation bill. If it was I should object to the whole thing, because the original amendment comes from no committee and from no Department in this shape. The question of order as to this being legislation would not apply, this not being a general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has not stated his question of order yet; the Chair will hear it.

Mr. CONKLING. The rule is:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill—

It is to that part of the rule that the Senator from West Virginia has been speaking—nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

Does the Senator from West Virginia say that the Senate to-day ruled that this pending bill is not a general appropriation bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not think the Senator from New York was in his seat at the time.

Mr. CONKLING. I will take the Senator's word for it, if he says so.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I do not think my point of order is a good one, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair agrees with the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. I thought I should be able to gain the assent of the Chair to that proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CHANDLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. GROVER, (when his name was called.) On political questions I am paired with the senior Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

Mr. McMILLAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired on political questions with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] I am not advised as to whether this is a political question or not. If it is not, I desire to vote "nay."

Mr. WALLACE. I am satisfied that if the Senator from New Jersey were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. McMILLAN. Then on the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania I withhold my vote. I would vote "nay" and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. WHYTE, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] If he were present, I would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (after having voted in the negative.) I withdraw my vote. I inadvertently voted. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] he being absent to-day.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. JONAS.] I am requested also to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. RANSOM.]

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is paired on political questions with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. HEREFORD, (after having voted in the affirmative.) Some time ago, when the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] left here, he asked me to pair with him for a week on political questions. The week has expired, but I will nevertheless decline to vote and ask that my vote be not recorded. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] on all political questions. The Senator from Massachusetts, if present, would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Bailey,	Eaton,	Kernan,	Slater,
Bayard,	Garland,	McDonald,	Vance,
Beck,	Groome,	Maxey,	Vest,
Call,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Coke,	Houston,	Randolph,	Williams.
Davis of W. Va.,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—15.

Allison,	Chandler,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Blair,	Conkling,	Logan,	Saunders,
Booth,	Ferry,	Morrill,	Windom,
Burnside	Hill of Colorado	Paddock

ABSENT—34.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Blaine,	Farley,	Jonas,	Sharon,
Bruce,	Gordon,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Butler,	Grover,	Kellogg,	Thurman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Lamar,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hereford,	McMillan,	Whyte,
Carpenter,	Hill of Georgia,	McPherson,	Withers.
Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Platt,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. I move to further amend the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, as follows:

And no part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any salaries, compensation, fees, or expenses under or in virtue of title 26 of the Revised Statutes, or of any provision of said title.

SEC. —. That the per diem pay of each juror, grand or petit, in any court of the United States, shall be $2, and that the last clause of section 800 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which refers to the State of Pennsylvania, and sections 801, 820, and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are hereby repealed; and that all such jurors, grand and petit, including those summoned during the session of the court, shall be publicly drawn from a box containing, at the time of each drawing, the names of not less than three hundred persons, possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing, residing in the district in which such court is held, of good standing, and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately, without reference to party affiliations, until the whole number required shall be placed therein. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge in a district in which such is now the practice from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State; and no person shall serve as a petit juror more than one term in any one year, and all juries to serve in courts after the passage of this act shall be drawn in conformity herewith: Provided, That no citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of this amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. WINDOM called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER, (when his name was called.) I should like to inquire if this is a political question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot answer.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] on political questions. I shall withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) I am paired for this day with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. JONAS.] I would vote "nay" if at liberty to do so.

Mr. CONKLING, (when his name was called.) The honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] is absent—absent as I understood him to say upon the service of his country. He requested me to pair with him upon all political questions; I am informed this is one; therefore I do not vote.

Mr. GROVER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the senior Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McMILLAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] He would vote "yea" and I should "nay" if he were here.

Mr. RANDOLPH, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] and shall be for the remainder of the session.

Mr. McDONALD, (when Mr. VOORHEES's name was called.) I will state that my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. WHYTE, (when his name was called.) I have been paired up to the present vote with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] but by an arrangement the pair has been transferred to the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH,] and therefore I am free to vote. I shall vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.]

Mr. ANTHONY. This question seems to have taken a political turn; I do not know how. Therefore I decline to vote, being paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.]

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL.] The Senator from Massachusetts, if present, would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bailey,	Davis of W. Va.,	Kernan,	Slater,
Bayard,	Garland,	Maxey,	Vance,
Beck,	Groome,	McDonald,	Vest,
Call,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Coke,	Houston,	Ransom,	Whyte,
Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,	Williams.

NAYS—14.

Allison,	Chandler	Logan,	Rollins,
Blair,	Ferry,	Morrill,	Windom.
Booth,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,
Burnside,	Kirkwood,	Platt,

ABSENT—34.

Anthony,	Eaton,	Ingalls,	Randolph,
Blaine,	Edmunds,	Johnston,	Saunders,
Bruce,	Farley,	Jonas,	Sharon,
Butler,	Gordon,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	Kellogg,	Thurman,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hamlin,	Lamar,	Voorhees,
Carpenter,	Hereford,	McMillan,	Withers.
Conkling,	Hill of Georgia,	McPherson,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Plumb,

So the motion was agreed to; and (at two o'clock and eleven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 24, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate withdrew the request heretofore made of the House for the return of the bill (H. R. No. 2329) authorizing the Conway National Bank of Conway, Massachusetts, to change its location and name.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 2264) to amend section 1, page 234, volume 20, United States Statutes at Large, Forty-fifth Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 609) to prescribe the time for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Kentucky; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2274) concerning the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana.

LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill known as the letter-carriers bill, being the bill of the House No. 2002, making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880. The bill has been returned from the Senate with amendments. My object is to move a non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate, and to ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

Mr. HAWLEY. As there are many additions to the bill made by the Senate in the form of appropriations, I would suggest that perhaps it would be quite proper to refer the bill and amendments to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COX. I think we have an understanding about the matter. There are a great many amendments to the bill which are entirely irrelevant, and we want a conference upon it. I move a non-concurrence in the Senate amendments.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope the amendments will be non-concurred in.

There being no objection, the bill, with the Senate amendments thereto, was taken from the Speaker's table and the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX moved that a conference be requested of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of Mr. COX, Mr. CLYMER, and Mr. CANNON of Illinois, as the conferees on the part of the House.

REPORTS OF CENTENNIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am authorized unanimously by the Committee on Appropriations to introduce the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to reserve all objections until the joint resolution is read.

The SPEAKER. That is the right of the gentleman.

The joint resolution to provide for the purchase of the stereotype plates of the final reports of the centennial commission upon the centennial exhibition of 1876 was read. It appropriates the sum of $8,600 to purchase the stereotype plates of the final reports of the centennial commission upon the centennial exhibition of 1876, as transmitted by the United States centennial commission, said plates being now in the hands of the centennial board of finance, the plates, with the copyright duly assigned, to be delivered to the Public Printer.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 113) was received and read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HAWLEY. If an explanation is needed by the House, I shall be happy to give it. I will say that this joint resolution has the approval of the Committee on Printing, (Mr. SINGLETON, chairman,) and the unanimous approval of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRIGHT. I would like to hear a brief explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will give it in a few words. The law constituting the centennial commission provided that it should from time to time make reports of its progress, and on the conclusion of the exhibition should make a full and final report of the results of that exhibition. The commission has done so.

The centennial board of finance, which was the associate financial corporation, having possession of all the property of the commission and being sustained by private and corporate subscriptions, prepared the stereotype plates for these reports. The plates make eleven volumes. We have consulted with the Public Printer and he is of the opinion that they can be condensed into eight volumes. The plates from which the centennial commission and the board of finance have printed a few hundred copies, chiefly that foreign governments might obtain early copies of the work, are the private property of the board of finance. That board is a private corporation, its stock having been taken by private subscription.

The centennial commission made its full and final report last March to the President. Both Houses have already ordered the printing of a limited number of these reports. In order to carry out that direction of Congress, as a matter of economy Congress should obtain these stereotype plates. They have been prepared at a cost of $60,000, by reason of the long time required and many corrections, and contain many valuable illustrations.

The Government Printer says that the plates could be reproduced by the Government only at a cost of some $35,000. The board of finance offers them to the Government for $8,600. Why that precise figure? Because the board has been offered by private publishers the sum of $8,500 for the plates; but being required to account to their stockholders for all the property, the board has put an additional hundred dollars to the amount offered by private publishers, because they desire the Government to have the plates and do not desire that they shall be sold to private parties. The type cannot be reset and the plates reproduced at a less cost than $35,000. They are elegantly illustrated, and are now ready to be put in the hands of the Public Printer. He cannot do the work already ordered by Congress without an expenditure of at least $25,000 more than it would cost if we buy these plates.

Mr. BRIGHT. What would be the advantage to the Government in purchasing these plates?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have tried to explain what would be the advantage to the Government. If the Government should now go on and print these volumes, (which have been already ordered,) without using these plates, the entire matter must be set up and new plates made, which cannot be done without an expense much greater than the cost of these plates, which are now ready, so that the work of printing from them can at once begin.

Mr. BRIGHT. How much will the Government save by buying these plates?

Mr. HAWLEY. As to that matter, I might refer the gentleman from Tennessee to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON,] chairman of the Committee on Printing, to whom an explanation has been made by the Public Printer.

Mr. SINGLETON. Just a word of explanation in behalf of the Committee on Printing. It certainly will be a matter of economy to purchase these stereotype plates. It would cost the Government, I suppose, about $35,000 for the composition and the stereotype plates if these plates be not purchased. They are now offered to us at $8,600. The saving to the Government will be the difference between $8,600 and $35,000. We have already ordered these reports to be printed. As we have ordered the printing of reports of exhibitions abroad where this country has been represented, it would be very strange not to publish these reports of our own exhibition.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Has Congress already authorized the printing of these reports?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Yes, sir; 5,000 copies have been ordered to be printed.

Mr. ACKLEN. I would like to ask one question. Is it not a fact that these plates have been offered to the Government at a lower price than $8,600.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is some difference of opinion on that point. I think not, though some gentlemen of the committee thought the fact was otherwise. At any rate, even if they have heretofore been offered at a lower price, it would be unjust on the part of the Government to insist upon paying a smaller sum than that now asked, because I have now in my hand a letter from an eminent publishing house in Philadelphia, well-known to members from that city, offering $8,500 for these plates. Hence the board of finance representing private stockholders would not be justified in accepting a less sum.

Mr. ACKLEN. Have the Committee on Appropriations assured themselves that the offer referred to is a bona fide offer?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have submitted the letter to the Speaker of this House who knows the firm well, and says that they are an eminently responsible, respectable house, which agrees with my own knowledge concerning them.

Mr. ACKLEN. If it is a bona fide offer, then of course I can see no possible objection to a purchase on the part of the Government by paying $100 additional.

Mr. HAWLEY. The $100 is added merely for the sake of naming a price above the private bid.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations I will say that the committee regard this offer as bona fide, and have instructed the gentleman from Connecticut to make this report. I hope there will be no objections.

Mr. HAWLEY demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAWLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARREARAGES OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HUNTON. I am directed by the unanimous action of the Committee for the District of Columbia to ask that the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 1379 be taken from the Speaker's table and non-concurred in, so that the matter may go to a committee of conference.

The amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes, were taken from the Speaker's table, and read, as follows:

On page 1, line 3, strike out "they;"
Strike out section 2;
Change section 3 to section 2;
On page 2, strike out all after the word "assessments," in line 4, down to and including the word "obligation," in line 6;
Change section 4 to section 3.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the amendments be non-concurred in.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I move that the House concur.

The SPEAKER. The question will be taken on concurrence. Those who desire to non-concur will vote in the negative.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to say that the Committee for the District of Columbia have unanimously instructed me to ask that the amendments be non-concurred in and sent to a committee of conference, so that the differences between the two Houses may be adjusted.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I have the assurance that two out of the three commissioners of the District are anxious that this bill should pass just as it has come from the Senate. I have also the assurance that the business men of the city are anxious that it should be passed in this form. I would like the Clerk to read a statement of the reasons for these amendments, as given by Senator HARRIS.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HARRIS. As the Senator will see by looking at the bill, the first section provides that any person owing general or special taxes, where the liens for the same are not held by third persons, may discharge the same by paying the amount of such taxes with 6 per cent. interest thereon, if the payment is made on or before the 1st day of October next. As a matter of fact there is a large amount of taxes, general and special, due the District of Columbia, that have been due for many years, and there is a large amount of accrued interest, the rate of interest being 10 per cent. under the law as it now stands. It is believed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia that if this favor is extended the tax-payer, to relieve him from the excessive rate of interest, to relieve him from penalty and enable him to pay the amount of the taxes with 6 per cent. interest thereon, it will enable many persons to pay who are wholly unable to pay now the large amount that the existing rate of interest and penalty have reached. It will benefit the tax-payer to that extent, and benefit the revenues of the District by enabling the commissioners to make collections that they could not make otherwise.

The second section of the bill as it now stands amended—it was the third section in the bill as it came from the House—provides for the revision of any special assessments which have been heretofore paid where the party paying the same feels that the assessments were excessive or erroneous. Upon the written application of such person it is made the duty of the commissioners to revise that assessment, and where the assessment made is found to have been erroneous, where the assessing power had no right to make it, or where the party had the power to make it and the assessment was excessive, in either of these cases it is made the duty of the commissioners of the District of Columbia to revise that assessment, and, where found erroneous or excessive, to issue to the parties so assessed a drawback certificate for the amount of such error.

These are the two operative sections in the bill. The other section in the bill simply provides for the advertising for the sale of property in arrears, to conform to the provisions made in the two former sections. The second section as it came from the House, which is stricken out upon the recommendation of the committee, was stricken out because of the fact that if it was intended to require the holder of tax-lien certificates, or the purchaser of property at tax sales, to receive the amount of taxes and 6 per cent. thereon it was what, in the opinion of the committee, Congress had no power to do; if it was intended simply to pass an act of Congress to authorize two persons interested in a business transaction to compromise the matter between themselves, the committee thought it was not necessary to pass an act of Congress for any such purpose, as all persons have at all times and under all circumstances enjoyed the right to do that by contract or agreement whenever they saw fit so to do.

While the bill, in the opinion of the committee, does not go as far as the committee thinks it is necessary to go in dealing with many of the questions growing out of the assessments for taxes in the District of Columbia, it was quite as far as the committee felt authorized to go within the short time they have had for the investigation of the general question. Being right in itself the committee hope that the bill may be passed so that the parties benefited by it may avail themselves of the benefits that it offers, with the hope that at the coming session of Congress the committee may be able to take up the general subject, investigate it thoroughly, and report such measure as may do full justice to all parties in the District of Columbia in reference to the various complications and wrongs that have grown out of general and special assessments in the District of Columbia during the last five, six, or seven years.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. It seems to be the conviction of the Senate that the section which has been struck out assumed a power that Congress does not possess, and I presume that judgment is correct. The next amendment simply affects the First National Bank of the city of New York. It is a matter of importance that this measure pass at the present session. It is not all that is desired; but there is no time to investigate thoroughly so as to bring forward a measure embracing everything that is desired. So far as the bill goes with these amendments, it is right and ought to pass—it ought to pass now. I hope it will.

Mr. HUNTON. I will say but a word——

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question as to its bearing.

Mr. HUNTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether a certain class of hardships in this District are reached in this bill or in any of the amendments. I do not know whether the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] has had his attention called to a class of cases of which there are many examples in the city. Under the old Washington City government, prior to the existence of the board of public works, a Belgian pavement was ordered to be put down on certain streets, but the work was not finished until perhaps a month after the board of public works came into existence, though it was authorized and contracted for under the old city government. But it was done under the old city government. When the board of public works came in they adopted a different plan for the treatment of the streets; they established a different grade on some of the streets which had been newly paved; thereupon they took up the Belgian pavement, carted away the material, and used it at other places as they chose, and put down there a concrete or asphalt pavement; and the people along that street were charged by special assessment first for the Belgian pavement, and second for the asphalt pavement; some paid for the Belgian pavement, and some for asphalt, which was more expensive, and a few unfortunately paid for both. The first pavement had not been down two months when it was taken away and its materials used by the board of public works for other improvements in the city.

Now, it was a mooted and it is still a mooted question whether the citizens were bound to pay both assessments. Some have paid the one and refused to pay the other; and whether their property has been proceeded against I do not know. That is one of the unsettled questions, and there are a number of such in this city. I ask the gentleman from Virginia whether this bill provides for that kind of case. If it does not it ought to.

Mr. HUNTON. I would say to the gentleman from Ohio, if any one could provide in one bill for all the difficulties growing out of the acts of prior governments of the District of Columbia, he would be one of the most talented men I ever came across in my life.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is true.

Mr. HUNTON. And all the District Committee can do is to proceed step by step in this matter and go as far as it is possible to get the Congress of the United States to go to correct the errors of the previous governments of the District of Columbia. I believe the case the gentleman has cited would be covered by the bill, because, according to his statement, it would be an erroneous assessment; and this bill in the third section as it passed the House and the second as amended by the Senate provides for a reconsideration and a readjustment of all erroneous assessments. According to the gentleman's statement of the case that would be an erroneous assessment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope it does embrace such cases. But let me ask the gentleman from Virginia, suppose it does not? Is there anything in this bill that directs the commissioners to proceed to a final collection of all assessments not corrected by this bill?

Mr. HUNTON. This only provides for erroneous assessments where the parties have actually paid. There was a previous bill passed by the last Congress which provided for errors in assessments which had not been paid.

Mr. GARFIELD. I presume this bill is all right as far as it goes.

Mr. HUNTON. I think it is. In regard to the amendments of the Senate I desire to say only a word or two. The two Houses agree upon the main features of this bill, and only differ as to some of the details. Now, in regard to the first amendment—I mean the first of any consequence, the others being only verbal—which is striking out the second section, there appear to be two classes of certificates outstanding. When these assessments were made and the parties failed to pay, some of the certificates of assessment were transferred in payment of debts due by the District of Columbia to outside parties, and in numberless cases sales took place under the assessments and the District of Columbia became the purchaser. Where those certificates are still in the hands of the District government, or where there has been a sale and a purchase by the District government, there is no difficulty in getting relief. But there was a class of certificates that had found their way in payment of debts of the District of Columbia into the hands of bona fide purchasers of those certificates, and the difficulty felt by the District commissioners was how to meet those cases; and it was attempted not to enforce but to express the legislative will as to how those outstanding certificates should be settled; and the gentleman in the Senate whose remarks have been read at the instance of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DE LA MATYR] was mistaken if he supposed this House in passing the second section of this bill undertook to enforce this mode of settlement upon bona fide holders of these certificates now outstanding. It was an effort to go as far as the two Houses of Congress could go in expressing the sentiments of Congress—the legislative will—that it was a just mode of settling these matters between these holders of certificates and the owners of the property. And it was an indication still further that those who held these certificates need not look to Congress for any aid in collecting any more than is provided for in this bill. Hence the second section of the bill as it passed the House.

It has been said—I do not know how truly, for I do not know who holds these certificates; I do not know who holds one of them, and I am glad I do not know—it has been said on this floor and elsewhere that many of these outstanding certificates are in the hands of some bank in the city of New York; and if there is anything in the second section, it is to indicate to the banks holding these certificates, "You must take action in accordance with what is provided in the second section, or you get no aid from Congress in order to enforce a settlement." That second section I suppose would be considered legislation against the banks.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUNTON. With pleasure.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Is there not in that idea a phase of repudiation?

Mr. HUNTON. Not at all.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. These certificates have been bought in good faith, and now a proposition is made to pay the contract under the pressure of refusing appropriations to meet it unless they comply with the proposition.

Mr. HUNTON. There is no repudiation asked for or dreamed of.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is my friend from Indiana [Mr. DE LA MATYR] the "next friend" of the First National Bank of New York

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I am not; but I am in favor of paying debts according to the bargain, however severe that may be. [Applause.]

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. DE LA MATYR to concur in the amendments of the Senate; and upon a division there were—ayes 24, noes 62.

No further count being called for, the amendments were not concurred in.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that a conference be asked with the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently appointed Mr. HUNTON of Virginia, Mr. DE LA MATYR of Indiana, and Mr. NEAL of Ohio, as the conferees on the part of the House.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HOUSE. I send up to the Clerk's desk a privileged resolution, upon which I call for the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on Wednesday, the 25th day of June, 1879, at five o'clock p. m.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I desire to offer a substitute for that resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays on it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] has called the previous question upon his resolution, which, if sustained, will cut off amendment. The substitute of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. NICHOLLS] will be read for information.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at seven o'clock this p. m., June 24th instant.

Mr. HOUSE. I do not yield for that amendment, and insist upon the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOUSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I now ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman who introduced this resolution may state to the House whether he thinks that we can get through with the judicial appropriation bill by the time he has fixed? If so, we will not object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to debate.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 83, nays 102, not voting 101; as follows:

YEAS—83.

Aiken,	Davis, Joseph J.	Johnston,	Scales,
Armfield,	Davis, Loundes H.	Klotz,	Shelley,
Bachman,	Deuster,	Manning,	Simonton,
Beale,	Dibrell,	Martin, Benj. F.	Singleton, O. R.
Beltzhoover,	Dickey,	Martin, Edward L.	Slemons,
Bicknell,	Ewing,	McKenzie,	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Blackburn,	Finley,	McLane,	Sparks,
Bright,	Forney,	McMahon,	Springer,
Caldwell,	Goode,	McMillin,	Talbott,
Clardy,	Gunter,	Mills,	Tillman,
Clark, John B.	Hammond, N. J.	Morrison,	Townshend, R. W.
Clymer,	Hatch,	Nicholls,	Turner, Oscar
Cobb,	Henkle,	Phelps,	Waddill,
Coffroth,	Henry,	Reagan,	Wellborn,
Colerick,	Herndon,	Richmond,	Whiteaker,
Converse,	Hill,	Robertson,	Whitthorne,
Cook,	Hooker,	Ross,	Williams, Thomas
Covert,	Hostetler,	Ro hwell,	Willis,
Cravens,	House,	Ryon, John W.	Wilson,
Culberson,	Hull,	Samford,	Wise.
Davidson,	Hunton,	Sawyer,

NAYS—102.

Acklen,	Elam,	Jorgensen,	Russell, W. A.
Aldrich, William	Evins,	Keifer,	Ryan, Thomas
Anderson,	Farr,	King,	Sapp,
Baker,	Felton,	Lowe,	Shallenberger,
Barber,	Field,	Marsh,	Sherwin,
Bayne,	Fisher,	Mason,	Smith, A. Herr
Bingham,	Ford,	McCook,	Stephens,
Blake,	Forsythe,	McGowan,	Stevenson,
Bouck,	Fort,	McKinley,	Thomas,
Bowman,	Garfield,	Mitchell,	Thompson,
Brewer,	Gibson,	Monroe,	Townsend, Amos
Briggs,	Gillette,	Murch,	Tyler,
Browne,	Godshalk,	Myers,	Updegraff, J. T.
Burrows,	Hammond, John	Neal,	Updegraff, Thomas
Butterworth,	Harris, Benj. W.	New,	Upson,
Cannon,	Haskell,	O'Neill,	Urner,
Carpenter,	Hawk,	Orth,	Van Aernam,
Caswell,	Hawley,	Osmer,	Voorhis,
Conger,	Henderson,	Overton,	Wait,
Cowgill,	Herbert,	Persons,	Ward,
Crapo,	Hiscock,	Phister,	Weaver,
Daggett,	Horr,	Pound,	White,
Davis, George R.	Houk,	Prescott,	Williams, C. G.
Deering,	Hubbell,	Richardson, D. P.	Yocum.
De La Matyr,	Humphrey,	Richardson, J. S.
Dunnell,	Jones,	Robinson,

NOT VOTING—101.

Aldrich, N. W.	Dwight,	Lay,	Russell, Daniel L.
Atherton,	Einstein,	Le Fevre,	Singleton, J W.
Atkins,	Ellis,	Lewis,	Smith, William E.
Bailey,	Errett,	Lindsey,	Speer,
Ballou,	Ferdon,	Loring,	Starin,
Barlow,	Frost,	Lounsbery,	Steele,
Belford,	Frye,	Martin, Joseph J.	Stone,
Bland,	Geddes,	McCoid,	Taylor,
Bliss,	Hall,	Miles,	Tucker,
Blount,	Harmer,	Miller,	Turner, Thomas
Boyd,	Harris, John T.	Money,	Valentine,
Bragg,	Hayes,	Morse,	Vance,
Brigham,	Hazelton,	Morton,	Van Voorhis,
Buckner,	Heilman,	Muldrow,	Warner,
Cabell,	Hurd,	Muller,	Washburn,
Calkins,	James,	Newberry,	Wells,
Camp,	Joyce,	Norcross,	Wilber,
Carlisle,	Kelley,	O'Brien,	Willits,
Chalmers,	Kenna,	O'Connor,	Wood, Fernando
Chittenden,	Ketcham,	O'Reilly,	Wood, Walter A.
Claflin,	Killinger,	Pierce,	Wright,
Clark, Alvah A.	Kimmel,	Poehler,	Young, Casey
Cox,	Kitchin,	Price,	Young, Thomas L.
Crowley,	Knott,	Reed,
Dick,	Ladd,	Rice,
Dunn,	Lapham,	Robeson,

So the resolution was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. WILBER, of New York. If he were present, I should vote "ay" and he would vote "no."

Mr. HILL. My colleague, Mr. ATHERTON, is paired with Mr. NEWBERRY, of Michigan, and my other colleague, Mr. WARNER, is paired with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island.

Mr. MANNING. My colleague, Mr. MONEY, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. MULDROW. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. STEELE. I am paired with Mr. NORCROSS, of Massachusetts. If he were present, I should vote "ay" and I presume he would vote "no."

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. BUCKNER, is paired with Mr. CHITTENDEN, of New York.

Mr. VANCE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. MARTIN. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. McMILLIN. My colleague, Mr. TAYLOR, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with Mr. CALKINS, of Indiana.

Mr. POEHLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WASHBURN. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. My colleague, Mr. KITCHIN, is paired with Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. FORNEY. My colleague, Mr. LEWIS, is paired with Mr. WALTER A. WOOD, of New York.

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey.

Mr. HURD. I am paired with Mr. CLAFLIN, of Massachusetts. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. CALDWELL. My colleague, Mr. CARLISLE, is paired with Mr. MULLER, of New York. If present, Mr. CARLISLE would vote "ay."

Mr. KING. I vote "no," and shall continue to do so until the repeal of the test oath.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BAILEY. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. KNOTT. I am paired with Mr. FRYE, of Maine. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, is paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut. If Mr. SINGLETON were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. GUNTER. My colleague, Mr. DUNN, is absent on account of sickness. If he were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. GIBSON. My colleague, Mr. ELLIS, is paired with Mr. HARMER, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My colleague, Mr. HARRIS, is paired with Mr. CROWLEY, of New York.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, is paired with Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York. I do not know how either of them would vote.

Mr. MULLER. I am paired with Mr. HEILMAN, of Indiana. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. On all political questions I am paired with Mr. LORING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. WHITE. I was paired with Mr. THOMAS TURNER, but he is now paired with Mr. KETCHAM, of New York.

Mr. ROBINSON. My colleague, Mr. MORSE, is paired with Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania; and Mr. HALL is paired with Mr. SPEER, of Georgia.

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleague, Mr. WASHBURN, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. POEHLER.

Mr. LAPHAM. On all political questions I am paired with Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia, and as this seems to be such, I decline to vote.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. REED, of Maine, is paired with Mr. WELLS, of Missouri.

Mr. WAIT. My colleague, Mr. MILES, is paired with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois.

Mr. HAZELTON. I am paired with Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. TYLER. Mr. BRIGHAM is paired with Mr. FROST, of Missouri.

Mr. McCOOK. My colleagues, Messrs. EINSTEIN and O'BRIEN, are paired. If Mr. EINSTEIN were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. HAWK. My colleague, Mr. HAYES, is absent by leave of the House and is paired with Mr. DUNN, of Arkansas. If he were present, Mr. HAYES would vote "no."

Mr. SAPP. My colleague, Mr. PRICE, is paired with Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. If present, Mr. PRICE would vote "no."

Mr. McGOWAN. My colleague, Mr. STONE, is paired with Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi; my colleague, Mr. NEWBERRY, is paired with Mr. ATHERTON, of Ohio; and Mr. STARIN, of New York, is paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.

Mr. COWGILL. Mr. HEILMAN is paired with Mr. MULLER, of New York. If Mr. HEILMAN were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. FISHER. My colleague, Mr. DICK, is paired with Mr. LAY, of Missouri. If Mr. DICK were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, is paired with Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If present, Mr. ALDRICH would vote "no."

Mr. DICKEY. My colleague, Mr. GEDDES, is paired with Mr. BARLOW, of Vermont. If he were present, Mr. GEDDES would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I rise to a personal explanation. I ask to have read from the New York Sun of yesterday a paragraph alluding to myself in no very complimentary terms.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE GLOVER REPORT—SINGULAR BEHAVIOR OF MR. SINGLETON, OF MISSISSIPPI—MR. GLOVER'S PRUDENCE.

WASHINGTON, June 22.

There is much comment here on the course of Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, chairman of the House Printing Committee, in withdrawing the resolution for printing the suppressed Glover report on the Treasury. CONGER demanded the reading of the report, which he had no right to do, and which SINGLETON should have resisted, as the report was not before the House, having been presented to the last House. The report of the Printing Committee recommending a resolution directing the execution of the order to print made by the last House, but as yet not obeyed, was the only report before the House for action, and of this CONGER had a right to demand the reading. But he did call for the reading of the Glover report, and SINGLETON withdrew the resolution, on the pretext that that document was not in his possession, instead of pressing the resolution to its passage. It is freely said that SINGLETON'S course, taken together with his long delay to report the resolution and his captious objections to it in committee, show that he is not in earnest to have it passed. Mr. Glover has uniformly refused to give up the report unless satisfactorily assured that it will be printed, saying that he is resolved that the country shall have the facts, and that the report shall not be pigeonholed like some such documents, nor stolen from the Capitol like the Hot Springs reservation appropriation. He has given notice that if the report is finally suppressed he will give to the public the whole secret history of the plots to defeat any investigation of the Treasury, which will be very interesting.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the first time in my obscure legislative career that I have ever sought the floor for the purpose of making a personal explanation; and I would not do so now if I thought this article came from the editor of the paper. But I think I discover ear-marks about it which indicate another origin. I come to this conclusion from the fact that a short time ago I received from the author of the report referred to, Mr, Glover, a letter containing a threat that unless the report should be printed, and that speedily, he would resort to the newspapers by way of setting himself right before the country. Well, he has gotten himself there, [laughter,] and I hope he is satisfied with what he has done.

Now, a word of explanation. This House knows how I have endeavored, in season and out of season, to have that report printed, having made three attempts to that end; not because I know what is in it—I know not one word or syllable of its contents; but the last House ordered the printing of the report, and I have simply sought to present from the Committee on Printing a resolution requiring that order to be executed. I wish now to say to the House that, although my colleague on the committee [Mr. WILSON] and myself have endeavored to get from this Mr. Glover that report in order that we might examine it and see whether it was of such importance as to be published, we have never been able to get our hands upon it. Indeed you find it stated in the article just read (and I have no doubt the statement comes from the author of the report) that he would not surrender it unless he knew it was going to be printed, lest it should be pigeonholed or stolen from the Capitol.

Mr. HAZELTON. It sounds just like him. [Laughter.]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Why, sir, if he is not crazy, he is upon the verge of insanity; and his friends ought to look after him. [Laughter.]

Now, if he intends to say that I have any disposition to suppress anything in that report, to cover up the sins of anybody upon the other side of the House, or shield anybody from exposure on this side, he is altogether mistaken; for I do not know a single word that is contained in the report. The author has never allowed us to get our fingers upon it; yet he rushes into print, as he threatened to do, undertaking to show that the Committee on Printing has been dilatory and unfair about this matter. Why, sir, it is true that in the committee I did object to making a favorable report in regard to the publication until the manuscript had been laid before us. Was I not right as a careful and prudent member of the committee? [Cries of "Certainly!"]

Now, sir, I wish to say, in conclusion of this whole matter, that I can have no other feeling than that of contempt for the man who would rush to the press with such a statement as that read to the House; and I believe his late constituents and the members of this House will share very largely in this feeling toward that gentleman when they know the facts of the case. [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, my name was mentioned in the communication read at the Clerk's desk. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to make a personal explanation?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; one word. I have no time in the performance of my duties as a member of this House to notice one out of ten thousand of these personal squibs to which members of the House, including myself, are subjected as to their conduct. But it is a source of peculiar gratification to me that my friend from Mississippi has given such a perfect, complete, and triumphant vindication of the course I have pursued in regard to that report. [Laughter.] This is all I desire to say.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. One word. I am very fond of my friend from Michigan, but he has really misapprehended my purpose. [Laughter.] I would undertake a task greater than I could accomplish if I should attempt a vindication of the gentleman from Michigan. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I knew, Mr. Speaker, or at least I feared, that this tribute of the gentleman from Mississippi to my persistency in opposing the printing of this report was involuntary; but I am none the less grateful to him for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. One word more as to what I intended to say. [Laughter.] [Cries of "Regular order!"] Just a word. I have intended all the while, whenever by the rules of this House I should have an opportunity, to offer this resolution to the House for the printing of that report, leaving the House to decide upon it as it pleases. I shall do so hereafter as a matter of duty, and not to please Mr. Glover. This is all I intended to say.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic:

Mr. LOWNDES H. DAVIS, of Missouri; Mr. GABRIEL BOUCK, of Wisconsin; Mr. JOHN C. NICHOLLS, of Georgia; Mr. C. B. SIMONTON, of Tennessee; Mr. THOMAS WILLIAMS, of Alabama; Mr. MARK S. BREWER, of Michigan; Mr. AMASA NORCROSS, of Massachusetts; Mr. WARNER MILLER, of New York; and Mr. J. T. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION IN CINCINNATI.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also announces the appointment of the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. BRIGGS, in place of the gentleman from New York, Mr. MCCOOK, as member of the select committee to investigate the late congressional election in Cincinnati.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also submits the following requests for leave of absence:

To Mr. WRIGHT, indefinitely, on account of sickness;

To Mr. FERDON, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family;

To Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, indefinitely, to attend the taking of depositions in obedience to a notice of contestant;

To Mr. MULDROW, for two weeks, on account of important business;

To Mr. MCKINLEY, for the remainder of the week, on account of important business;

To Mr. KIMMEL, for one day, on account of sickness; and

To Mr. RICHMOND, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to any leave of absence being granted except on account of sickness.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to suggest there should be no objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. MARTIN,] who has to attend the taking of depositions under a notice of contestant in regard to his seat in this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not object to that.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. MULDROW said: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] withdraws his objection to my request for leave of absence.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do, and also my objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MCKINLEY.]

The SPEAKER. The objection might as well be withdrawn as to all.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the objection to all the requests.

Several members called for the regular order.

PROHIBITION OF POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been demanded, the morning hour begins at twenty-five minutes past one o'clock, and the unfinished business is the bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] who reports the bill has moved that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the pending question is the demand for the previous question upon that motion.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair as to whether or not a motion to pass over this bill informally for the present with the understanding that it shall not lose its status in the morning hour would be in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over, continuing to hold its place in the morning hour, the effect of which the Chair will state would be that the House would proceed to other business.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I have moved to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of debate and amendment. Upon that motion I have demanded the previous question, and if gentlemen are unwilling to take the bill out of the morning hour, or to pass it over for the present so as to give other committees an opportunity to report, the fault certainly is not mine.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to be willing the bill should lie over till next session if it should be sent to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. HOSTETLER. No, sir; that is not my proposition.

The SPEAKER. What the gentleman from Indiana proposed was that the bill should be passed over for the present, retaining its place as unfinished business in the morning hour. To that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] objected. Now the gentleman from Indiana insists upon the demand for the previous question on his motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question being put, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. CONGER. I call for a division.

The question being taken; there were ayes 72, noes none.

Mr. CONGER. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOSTETLER and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BURROWS.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 62, noes none.

Mr. CONGER. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, only two motions are in order, a motion to adjourn and a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I move there be a call of the House.

Mr. HUMPHREY. And I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being put on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 24; not one-fifth of the last vote.

Several MEMBERS. Count the other side.

The other side being counted, there were 12 votes in the negative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 38, nays 134, not voting 114; as follows:

YEAS—38.

Baker,	Daggett,	Herndon,	Richmond,
Barber,	Deering,	Hooker,	Russell, W. A.
Beale,	Dunnell,	Humphrey,	Shelley,
Bingham,	Felton,	Jones,	Sherwin,
Bouck,	Field,	Martin, Benj. F.	Simonton,
Browne,	Fisher,	Mason,	Smith, A. Herr
Carpenter,	Forney,	Mitchell,	Urner,
Coffroth,	Godshalk,	Myers,	Williams, Thomas.
Crapo,	Harris, Benj. W.	New,
Cravens,	Haskell,	Osmer,

NAYS—134.

Acklen,	De La Matyr,	Lounsbery,	Scales,
Aiken,	Dibrell,	Lowe,	Shallenberger,
Aldrich, William	Dickey,	Manning,	Slemons,
Anderson,	Elam,	Martin, Edward L.	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Armfield,	Evins,	McCoid,	Smith, William E.
Bachman,	Ewing,	McCook,	Sparks,
Bayne,	Farr,	McGowan,	Steele,
Beltzhoover,	Finley,	McKenzie,	Stephens,
Blackburn,	Ford,	McLane,	Stevenson,
Blake,	Forsythe,	McMillin,	Talbott,
Bliss,	Gibson,	Mills,	Thomas,
Bowman,	Gillette,	Monroe,	Thompson,
Brewer,	Gunter,	Morrison,	Tillman,
Briggs,	Hammond, John	Muller,	Townshend, R. W.
Bright,	Hammond, N. J.	Murch,	Turner, Oscar,
Burrows,	Hatch,	Neal,	Tyler,
Butterworth,	Hawk,	Nicholls,	Updegraff, J. T.
Caldwell,	Hawley,	O'Connor,	Updegraff, Thomas
Cannon,	Henderson,	O'Neill,	Upson,
Caswell,	Henry,	Orth,	Van Aernam,
Clardy,	Herbert,	Overton,	Voorhis,
Clark, John B.	Hill,	Persons,	Waddill,
Cobb,	Horr,	Phister,	Ward,
Colerick,	Hostetler,	Prescott,	Weaver,
Conger,	Houk,	Richardson, J. S.	Wellborn,
Converse,	House,	Robertson,	Whiteaker,
Cook,	Hubbell,	Robinson,	Whitthorne,
Covert,	Hull,	Ross,	Williams, C. G.
Cowgill,	Hunton,	Rothwell,	Willis,
Culberson,	Johnston,	Ryan, Thomas	Wilson,
Davidson,	Jorgensen,	Ryon, John W.	Wise,
Davis, George R.	Keifer,	Samford,	Yocum.
Davis, Joseph J.	King,	Sapp,
Davis, Loundes H.	Klotz,	Sawyer,

NOT VOTING—114.

Aldrich, N. W.	Einstein,	Lapham,	Robeson,
Atherton,	Ellis,	Lay,	Russell, Daniel L.
Atkins,	Errett,	Le Fevre,	Singleton, J. W.
Bailey,	Ferdon,	Lewis,	Singleton, O. R.
Ballou,	Fort,	Lindsey,	Speer,
Barlow,	Frost,	Loring,	Springer,
Belford,	Frye,	Marsh,	Starin,
Bicknell,	Garfield,	Martin, Joseph J.	Stone,
Bland,	Geddes,	McKinley,	Taylor,
Blount,	Goode,	McMahon,	Townsend, Amos
Boyd,	Hall,	Miles,	Tucker,
Bragg,	Harmer,	Miller,	Turner, Thomas
Brigham,	Harris, John T.	Money,	Valentine,
Buckner,	Hayes,	Morse,	Vance,
Cabell,	Hazelton,	Morton,	Van Voorhis,
Calkins,	Heilman,	Muldrow,	Wait,
Camp,	Henkle,	Newberry,	Warner,
Carlisle,	Hiscock,	Norcross,	Washburn,
Chalmers,	Hurd,	O'Brien,	Wells,
Chittenden,	James,	O'Reilly,	White,
Claflin,	Joyce,	Phelps,	Wilber,
Clark, Alvah A.	Kelley,	Pierce,	Willits,
Clymer,	Kenna,	Poehler,	Wood, Fernando
Cox,	Ketcham,	Pound,	Wood, Walter A.
Crowley,	Killinger,	Price,	Wright,
Deuster,	Kimmel,	Reagan,	Young, Casey.
Dick,	Kitchin,	Reed,	Young, Thomas L.
Dunn,	Knott,	Rice,
Dwight,	Ladd,	Richardson, D P.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleague, Mr. WASHBURN, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. POEHLER.

Mr. McMILLIN. My colleague, Mr. TAYLOR, is paired with Mr. CALKINS.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. VANCE, is absent by leave of the House and is paired with my other colleague, Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. MANNING. My colleague, Mr. MONEY, is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan.

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. My colleague, Mr. KITCHIN, is paired with Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. HILL. My colleague, Mr. ATHERTON, is paired with Mr. NEWBERRY, of Michigan; and my colleague, Mr. WARNER, is paired with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island.

Mr. MULDROW. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. HAWK. My colleague, Mr. HAYES, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with Mr. DUNN, of Arkansas.

Mr. McGOWAN. Mr. STONE, of Michigan, is paired with Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi; Mr. NEWBERRY is paired with Mr. ATHERTON, of Ohio; and Mr. STARIN, of New York, is paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey.

Mr. MARSH. I am paired with Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am paired on all political questions with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. HARMER. I am paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, is paired with Mr. WARNER, of Ohio.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania, that there be a call of the House; and being taken, upon a division there were—ayes 14, noes 18.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. CONGER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 81, nays 74, not voting 131; as follows:

YEAS—81.

Acklen,	Davis, Joseph J.	Klotz,	Sawyer,
Aiken,	Davis, Loundes H.	Martin, Benj. F.	Shelley,
Armfield,	Dibrell,	McCoid,	Singleton, O. R.
Bachman,	Dickey,	McGowan,	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Blackburn,	Elam,	McKenzie,	Sparks,
Bliss,	Evins,	McLane,	Stevenson,
Bouck,	Ewing,	McMahon,	Thompson,
Bright,	Felton,	McMillin,	Tillman,
Caldwell,	Finley,	Morrison,	Townshend, R.W.
Clardy,	Forney,	Myers,	Turner, Oscar
Clark, John B.	Goode,	New,	Updegraff, Thomas
Clymer,	Gunter,	O'Connor,	Upson,
Cobb,	Hammond, N. J.	Phelps,	Wellborn,
Colerick,	Hatch,	Reagan,	Whiteaker,
Conger,	Henry,	Richardson, J. S.	Williams, Thomas
Cook,	Herbert,	Richmond,	Willis,
Covert,	Herndon,	Robertson,	Wilson,
Cravens,	Hostetler,	Rothwell,	Wise.
Culberson,	Hull,	Ryon, John W.
Daggett,	Hunton,	Samford,
Davidson,	King,	Sapp,

NAYS—74.

Aldrich, William	De La Matyr,	Jones,	Shallenberger,
Anderson,	Deering,	Jorgensen,	Sherwin,
Baker,	Dunnell,	Manning,	Slemons,
Barber,	Farr,	Mason,	Smith, A. Herr
Bayne,	Field,	McCook,	Smith, William E.
Beale,	Fisher,	McKinley,	Stephens,
Bingham,	Fort,	Mitchell,	Thomas,
Blake,	Garfield,	Monroe,	Townsend, Amos
Bowman,	Gillette,	O'Neill,	Tyler,
Brewer,	Godshalk,	Orth,	Updegraff, J. T.
Briggs,	Hammond, John	Osmer,	Urner,
Browne,	Harris, Benj. W.	Overton,	Van Aernam,
Butterworth,	Hawk,	Pound,	Voorhis,
Cannon,	Hawley,	Prescott,	Ward,
Carpenter,	Henderson,	Richardson, D. P.	Weaver,
Caswell,	Hiscock,	Robinson,	Whitthorne,
Cowgill,	Horr,	Ross,	Yocum.
Crapo,	Hubbell,	Ryan, Thomas
Davis, George R.	Humphrey,	Scales,

NOT VOTING—131.

Aldrich, N. W.	Ellis,	Ladd,	Rice,
Atherton,	Errett,	Lapham,	Robeson,
Atkins,	Ferdon,	Lay,	Russell, Daniel L.
Bailey,	Ford,	Le Fevre,	Russell, W. A.
Ballou,	Forsythe,	Lewis,	Simonton,
Barlow,	Frost,	Lindsey,	Singleton, J. W.
Belford,	Frye,	Loring,	Speer,
Beltzhoover,	Geddes,	Lounsbery,	Springer,
Bicknell,	Gibson,	Lowe,	Starin,
Bland,	Hall,	Marsh,	Steele,
Blount,	Harmer,	Martin, Edward L.	Stone,
Boyd,	Harris, John T.	Martin, Joseph J.	Talbott,
Bragg,	Haskell,	Miles,	Taylor,
Brigham,	Hayes,	Miller,	Tucker,
Buckner,	Hazelton,	Mills,	Turner, Thomas
Burrows,	Heilman,	Money,	Valentine,
Cabell,	Henkle,	Morse,	Vance,
Calkins,	Hill,	Morton,	Van Voorhis,
Camp,	Hooker,	Muldrow,	Waddill,
Carlisle,	Houk,	Muller,	Wait,
Chalmers,	House,	Murch,	Warner,
Chittenden,	Hurd,	Neal,	Washburn,
Claflin,	James,	Newberry,	Wells,
Clark, Alvah A.	Johnston,	Nicholls,	White,
Coffroth,	Joyce,	Norcross,	Wilber,
Converse,	Keifer,	O'Brien,	Williams, C. G.
Cox,	Kelley,	O'Reilly,	Willits,
Crowley,	Kenna,	Persons,	Wood, Fernando
Deuster,	Ketcham,	Phister,	Wood, Walter A.
Dick,	Killinger,	Pierce,	Wright,
Dunn,	Kimmel,	Poehler,	Young, Casey
Dwight,	Kitchin,	Price,	Young, Thomas L
Einstein,	Knott,	Reed,

So the motion for a call of the House was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. VANCE, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired with my colleague, Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. My colleague, Mr. KITCHIN, is paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. RICE.

Mr. FORNEY. My colleague, Mr. LEWIS, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. WALTER A. WOOD.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. The gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ELLIS, is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. HARMER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. THOMPSON. My colleague, Mr. PHISTER, who is paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KEIFER, would, if present, vote "ay."

Mr. SAPP. My colleague, Mr. PRICE, is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. KEIFER. I am paired temporarily with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. PHISTER.

Mr. HAWK. My colleague, Mr. HAYES, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired with the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. DUNN.

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleague, Mr. WASHBURN, is paired with my colleague, Mr. POEHLER.

Mr. FISHER. My colleague, Mr. HARMER, is paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ELLIS; my colleague, Mr. DICK, with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. LAY.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My colleague, Mr. TAYLOR, is paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. CALKINS.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. The gentleman from Rhode Island, Mr. ALDRICH, is paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. WARNER.

Mr. MANNING. My colleague, Mr. MULDROW, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. DWIGHT; my colleague, Mr. MONEY, with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. STONE, and my colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, with the gentleman from New York, Mr. VAN VOORHIS.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman from Maine, Mr. LADD, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired with his colleague, Mr. LINDSEY.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which a call of the House was ordered.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I raise the question whether the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] voted in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He did.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Michigan generally votes so that he can take advantage of his desire to make a motion.

The question being taken on the motion to reconsider, there were—ayes 29, noes 23.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Michigan will yield for a moment, I wish to make a request of the House. I desire the House to take up a Senate bill now on the Speaker's table—a very important matter involving great public interests. It makes no appropriations; and I imagine there will be little or no objection to its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has not expired; the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. If by unanimous consent the morning hour be considered as expired, I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent the bill indicated can be taken up. Does the gentleman from Michigan withdraw his motion?

Mr. CONGER. I do not, unless by unanimous consent the morning hour be dispensed with.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the House occupy the remainder of the morning hour with the consideration of the bill to which I refer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 39, nays 116, not voting 131; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Aldrich, William	Daggett,	Henderson,	Prescott,
Anderson,	Davidson,	Hooker,	Richmond,
Baker,	Davis, George R.	Humphrey,	Robinson,
Bayne,	Deering,	Jones,	Ryan, Thomas
Bingham,	Dunnell,	Jorgensen,	Stephens,
Blake,	Field,	Mitchell,	Tyler,
Brewer,	Fisher,	Monroe,	Updegraff, Thomas
Burrows,	Fort,	O'Neill,	Urner,
Butterworth,	Godshalk,	Osmer,	Voorhis.
Caswell,	Haskell,	Overton,

NAYS—116.

Acklen,	Bouck,	Colerick,	Davis, Loundes H.
Aiken,	Briggs,	Conger,	De La Matyr,
Armfield,	Bright,	Converse,	Deuster,
Bachman,	Caldwell,	Cook,	Dibrell,
Barber,	Cannon,	Covert,	Dickey,
Beale,	Clardy,	Cowgill,	Elam,
Beltzhoover,	Clark, John B.	Cravens,	Evins,
Blackburn,	Cobb,	Culberson,	Farr,
Bliss,	Coffroth,	Davis Joseph J.	Felton,
Finley,	Martin, Benj. F.	Phelps,	Talbott,
Ford,	Martin, Edward L.	Richardson, D. P.	Thompson,
Forney,	Mason,	Richardson, J. S.	Tillman,
Goode,	McCoid,	Rothwell,	Townsend, Amos
Gunter,	McCook,	Ryon, John W.	Townshend, R. W.
Hammond, John	McGowan,	Samford,	Turner, Oscar
Hammond, N. J.	McKenzie,	Sapp,	Updegraff, J. T.
Harris, Benj. W.	McKinley,	Sawyer,	Upson,
Hatch,	McLane,	Scales,	Van Aernam,
Hawk,	McMahon,	Shallenberger,	Waddill,
Hawley,	McMillin,	Shelley,	Wait,
Henkle,	Morrison,	Sherwin,	Weaver,
Henry,	Murch,	Simonton,	Wellborn,
Herbert,	Myers,	Singleton, O. R.	Whiteaker,
Herndon,	Neal,	Slemons,	Whitthorne,
Hill,	New,	Smith, A Herr	Williams, Thomas
Hostetler,	Nicholls,	Smith, Hezekiah B.	Willis,
Hunton,	O'Connor,	Smith, William E.	Wilson,
Klotz,	Orth,	Sparks,	Wise,
Lowe,	Persons,	Stevenson,	Yocum.

NOT VOTING—131.

Aldrich, N. W.	Ellis,	King,	Rice,
Atherton,	Errett,	Kitchin,	Robertson,
Atkins,	Ewing,	Knott,	Robeson,
Bailey,	Ferdon,	Ladd,	Ross,
Ballou,	Forsythe,	Lapham,	Russell, Daniel L.
Barlow,	Frost,	Lay,	Russell, W. A.
Belford,	Frye,	Le Fevre,	Singleton, J. W.
Bicknell,	Garfield,	Lewis,	Speer,
Bland,	Geddes,	Lindsey,	Springer,
Blount,	Gibson,	Loring,	Starin,
Bowman,	Gillette,	Lounsbery,	Steele,
Boyd,	Hall,	Manning,	Stone,
Bragg,	Harmer,	Marsh,	Taylor,
Brigham,	Harris, John T.	Martin, Joseph J.	Thomas,
Browne,	Hayes,	Miles,	Tucker,
Buckner,	Hazelton,	Miller,	Turner, Thomas
Cabell,	Heilman,	Mills,	Valentine,
Calkins,	Hiscock,	Money,	Vance,
Camp,	Horr,	Morse,	Van Voorhis,
Carlisle,	Houk,	Morton,	Ward,
Carpenter,	House,	Muldrow,	Warner,
Chalmers,	Hubbell,	Muller,	Washburn,
Chittenden,	Hull,	Newberry,	Wells,
Claflin,	Hurd,	Norcross,	White,
Clark, Alvah A.	James,	O'Brien,	Wilbur,
Clymer,	Johnston,	O'Reilly,	Williams, C. G.
Cox,	Joyce,	Phister,	Willits,
Crapo,	Keifer,	Pierce,	Wood, Fernando
Crowley,	Kelley,	Poehler,	Wood, Walter A.
Dick,	Kenna,	Pound,	Wright,
Dunn,	Ketcham,	Price,	Young, Casey
Dwight,	Killinger,	Reagan,	Young, Thomas L.
Einstein,	Kimmel,	Reed,

So the House refused to reconsider the vote by which a call of the House was ordered.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. SCALES. My colleague from North Carolina, Mr. VANCE, is absent by leave of the House. He is paired with my colleague, Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. STEELE. I am paired with Mr. NORCROSS, of Massachusetts.

Mr. MULDROW. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. COVERT. My colleague from New York, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey.

Mr. POEHLER. I am paired with my colleague from Minnesota, Mr. WASHBURN.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. ELLIS. I am paired on all questions with Mr. HARMER, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My colleague from Tennessee, Mr. TAYLOR, is paired with Mr. CALKINS, of Indiana.

Mr. HAWK. My colleague from Illinois, Mr. HAYES, is absent by leave of the House. He is paired with Mr. DUNN, of Arkansas.

Mr. KEIFER. I am paired temporarily with Mr. PHISTER, of Kentucky.

Mr. WAIT. My colleague from Connecticut, Mr. MILES, is paired with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. How those two distinguished gentlemen would vote if bodily present is more than I am able to state.

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleague from Minnesota, Mr. WASHBURN, is paired with my colleague, Mr. POEHLER.

Mr. ROBINSON. My colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. MORSE, is paired with Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WARD. I am paired with my colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. CLYMER.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, is paired with Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1847) to provide for the appointment of a "Mississippi River commission" for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes near its mouth to its headwaters;

An act (H. R. No. 2264) to amend section 1, page 234, volume 20, of the United States Statutes at Large, Forty-fifth Congress;

An act (H. R. No. 2267) providing for the binding of the internal revenue laws and manual;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 32) authorizing the completion of the foundation of the Washington Monument; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 71) authorizing the appointment of a commission to lease a building for a city post-office in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the Senate Mr. HARRIS, Mr. WHYTE, and Mr. ROLLINS.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the Senate Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, Mr. MAXEY, and Mr. ALLISON.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 1856) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to extend the area for the taking up and impounding of domestic animals in the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 706) to amend an act for the relief of Joseph B. Collins, approved March 3, 1879; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

PROHIBITION OF POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. FINLEY.) The House having refused to reconsider the vote by which a call of the House was ordered, the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. ACKLEN. I make the point of order that that has to be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not at all.

Mr. ACKLEN. A call of the House has been ordered. A motion was made to reconsider the vote ordering a call of the House; that motion to reconsider has been lost. I submit, therefore, that under those circumstances further proceedings under the call can only be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has control over the matter and can dispense with the call if it chooses.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I insist on my motion.

Mr. ACKLEN. Is the request that the call be dispensed with by unanimous consent out of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that further proceedings under the call can be dispensed with by a majority vote.

Mr. ACKLEN. Or by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. ACKLEN. Very good; that is what I wanted to know.

The question was taken upon dispensing with further proceedings under the call; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask for unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 674, "An act for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields, and to increase the pension of Caroline S. Webster."

Mr. McGOWAN. I object.

Mr. STEVENSON. I suggest that we go to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. McGOWAN. I call for the special order fixed for to-day in the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move that the House now proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 67, noes 24.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. It is this: that the House bill 2273, entitled "A bill to provide rooms for the National Board of Health," was by the action of the House set for consideration this day, and by unanimous consent this bill was to be considered. It is an important matter that the bill should be brought up, and I believe it would only take a few moments to dispose of it. It involves a question of the powers of the Board of Health to use the sum appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has frequently ruled on this question. This is the only time when a motion to go to the business on the Speaker's table is properly in order, and the Chair therefore confirms the decision made by the Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. McGOWAN. I call for the yeas and nays upon the pending motion.

The SPEAKER The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that the longer time is taken on this question the further off his measure will be.

Mr. McGOWAN. Provided the House votes me down, of course.

The SPEAKER. The Chair only made that suggestion in kindness.

Mr. McGOWAN. I appreciate the motive of the Chair.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only six members voting therefor.

So the motion to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLIES OF THE TERRITORIES.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 2274) concerning the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana returned from the Senate with amendments. The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

To strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the provisions of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes,' approved June 19, 1878, pertaining to government in the several Territories of the United States, shall not be so construed as to impair or shorten the tenure of office of any member of such Legislative Assemblies until the redistricting and reapportionment of such Territories as is therein provided, nor until at the next regular election thereafter the twelve members of the council and twenty-four members of the house of representatives of such Territories shall have been elected and their term of office begun."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act concerning the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories of the United States."

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. STEPHENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF GEOLOGICAL SURVEYS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 2,000 copies of volume 4 of the geological series of the reports of the geographical and geological survey of the Rocky Mountain region, entitled Geology of the Black Hills of Dakota, with the necessary illustrations and charts; 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 500 for the use of the Senate, and 500 for the use of the Department of the Interior; the illustrations and charts to be made by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask that that resolution be concurred in.

There being no objection, the resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and concurred in.

Mr. STEVENSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PARIS MONETARY CONFERENCE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 12,000 extra copies of the report and proceedings of the Paris monetary conference, held in August last, be printed and bound in cloth; of which number 6,000 copies shall be for the use of the House, 3,000 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 for the use of the Department of State.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move that that resolution be concurred in.

The question was taken; and the resolution was concurred in.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF NAME.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 506) to change the name of the steam propeller Nuhpa to Metropolitan.

Mr. COVERT. I move that that bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman will state the character of this vessel.

Mr. COVERT. I make the motion at the request of my colleague, [Mr. MULLER.] I do not know anything about the circumstances of the case.

Mr. CONGER. If this is a large passenger steamboat, the name of which it is proposed to change in this way, then the bill ought to go to the Committee on Commerce for consideration. If any gentleman here knows the character of the steamboat, whether it is such as the House has heretofore passed bills to change the names of, I have no objection to it. But if it be a large passenger boat, and the name is to be changed to deceive the public and make it appear to be a new boat, then I desire to have it go to the Committee on Commerce. At all events I ask that it be passed over informally for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be passed over informally.

There was no objection.

GENERAL JAMES SHIELDS AND MRS. CAROLINE S. WEBSTER.

The next bill upon the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 674) for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields, and to increase the pension of Caroline S. Webster.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That payment of the pension of $100 monthly granted to James Shields, late a brigadier-general of United States volunteers, by an act of Congress approved June 18, 1878, be continued to his widow and children, the full amount of said pension to be paid said widow during her widowhood, and at the expiration thereof, if the same should occur whilst said children or any of them are under the age of sixteen years, then the said pension shall be paid to such of said children as may then be under the age of sixteen years, in equal parts, until they respectively arrive at that age.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline S. Webster, widow of Fletcher Webster, late colonel of the Twelfth Massachusetts Regiment, who was killed at the second battle of Bull Run, Virginia, at the rate of $50 per month; said pension to be in lieu of that she now receives.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I call the previous question on the third reading and passage of that bill.

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I know how ungracious it is to stand in the way of passing such a bill as this. But it contains such extraordinary provisions that I must move that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I insist upon my call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question, if sustained, will cut off the motion to refer.

The previous question was seconded, on a division—ayes 85, noes 3.

The main question was then ordered; and the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DRAFTS IN POSSESSION OF STATE DEPARTMENT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 5) relative to certain accepted drafts and other papers in the Department of State; which was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, directed to deliver to the person justly entitled to the possession thereof three several drafts for the sum of $5,000 each, dated New York, August 2, 1859, and drawn by Santiago Vidaurri, governor of Nuevo Leon and Cohahuila, by Ignatius Gulindo, agent, on J. M. Mata, Mexican minister, Washington, District of Columbia, and accepted by said J. M. Mata, and made payable at the Bank of the Republic, New York, and all other papers relating to said drafts, the same having been deposited in the Department of State by error.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am instructed by the unanimous vote of the Committee on the Judiciary to ask that this joint resolution be considered and passed at this time.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. LAPHAM. In support of the joint resolution, I will ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement of the facts upon which this joint resolution is based.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

It appears from the RECORD that this subject has been fully investigated by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, and the main facts connected therewith have been stated by the Senator making the report.

The facts are briefly these: Some time in the summer of 1859—about the time of the date of the drafts referred to in the resolution—an arms manufacturing company of this country sold to the Republic of Mexico a quantity of fire-arms for which these drafts were given in settlement. They were drawn by the duly authorized agent of the government of Mexico upon J. M. Mata, at that time the agent and minister from Mexico to this Government. They are not only accepted by Signor Mata in his official capacity as minister from Mexico, but are also indorsed by him in his private character as a citizen, thereby adding his individual responsibility to that of his government.

These drafts were not met at maturity by Mexico, and under the circumstances in which she was then placed, her failure to meet her liabilities should reflect no dishonor upon her. It was a time eventful in the history of our sister republic. Her capitol was in the hands of a foreign usurper. A scion of the royalty of Europe, a son of the house of Hapsburg, the brother of an emperor, held regal sway in the ancient city of the Aztecs and Incas, and upon the ruins of a republic he sought to establish the forms and the power of a monarchy. The throne of the Austrian invader was sustained and protected by the imperial bayonets of France. A large portion of the territory of Mexico was under the iron heel of her oppressors. Her loyal and gallant sons had been driven to the mountains, and the republican government administered by that stern and unflinching patriot, the gallant Juarez, was in the midst of the camp of his small but resolute army.

We need not follow the history of this struggle for Mexican independence, of the victories achieved, of the overthrow of the empire of Maximilian, and of the final preservation of their liberties and nationality. She emerged from the contest with a united but impoverished people, victorious in arms but bankrupt in resources. The payment of her liabilities under these circumstances was a matter of impossibility. The owner of the drafts in question was among her creditors, and like others was compelled to await the advent of more auspicious times for Mexico.

In the order of events the "mixed commission" was established between the United States and Mexico in pursuance of the articles of the convention of the 4th of July, 1868, for the purpose of adjusting all questions of damages claimed by the citizens of the one against the government of the other.

Under a misapprehension as to the scope, powers, and jurisdiction of this tribunal the owner of these drafts placed them before this commission under the supposition that they belonged to a class of claims that must be acted upon by the commission before they could be paid. The commission held that this being an adjusted, liquidated, and closed account they had no jurisdiction whatever over the matter—had nothing to do with it, and they took no action in regard to it. "Therefore," says the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, in speaking of this subject, "for this purpose it is as if no reference had ever been made to the commission." The drafts should have been withdrawn or returned to the owner, but they were not. They were permitted to remain there until the commission had closed its labors and were then turned over to the Department of State, where they still remain. The Mexican authorities have never disputed the validity of these drafts, the amount due, or their obligations to pay. On the contrary, they are ready and willing to pay them.

"The American citizens are entitled," so the Senate committee finds, "to receive the money, and the whole object and purpose of the resolution is to empower the Secretary of State to deliver over the drafts to those to whom they belong."

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAPHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CANAL-BOATS, ETC.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 671) relating to vessels not propelled wholly by sail or internal motive power of their own.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the payment of any fee or charge for the enrolling or licensing of vessels built in the United States and owned by citizens thereof, not propelled wholly by sail or by internal motive power of their own, and not in any case carrying passengers, whether navigating the internal waters of a State or the navigable waters of the United States, and not engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territories.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I am instructed to ask that that bill be put upon its passage at this time, and I therefore call the previous question upon it.

Mr. ACKLEN. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his demand for the previous question. I am satisfied that the House does not understand the full weight and purpose of this bill, and that it would be better to have the information of one or two members of the Committee on Commerce who have investigated this subject. I for one was appointed by the Committee on Commerce to see the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Treasury and obtain their opinions upon the subjects affected by this bill. I have given the matter some attention, and I think it would be best for the House to hear the opinions of those who have investigated this subject before they vote upon this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. No, sir. I desire to say that this bill——

Mr. ACKLEN. If the gentleman insists on the demand for the previous question, then I object to his debating the bill. I think that if he wishes to debate it he should have no objection to other gentlemen doing so.

Several members objected to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. ACKLEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague [Mr. RYON] understands the merits of this bill as well as the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Louisiana will allow me a single moment, the probability is he can get all he wants, if he does not want too much.

Mr. ACKLEN. Very good. I yield with the understanding that I shall have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this bill which now comes before us for action was passed in the Senate after careful consideration and thorough discussion. As understood by those who supported it in the Senate, and also by the Secretary of the Treasury, it embraces no other vessels than canal-boats or flats engaged in navigating the internal waters of the States or the waters of the United States. However, if the gentleman from Louisiana desires to discuss the bill and will agree to do so within a limited time, I have no objection to a discussion for ten or fifteen minutes on each side——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. And for the purpose of discussing the bill I will allow the gentleman from Louisiana ten minutes.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker, this question——

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ACKLEN. I have the floor, and I object to being taken from it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has withdrawn the demand for the previous question; the Speaker has recognized me, and there is no member has the power to take me off the floor.

Mr. SPARKS. We can object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman's objection is null and void so far as I am concerned. I have been recognized by the Speaker, I am on the floor, and am entitled to be heard.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I made a proposition to allow the gentleman to discuss the bill for ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state his understanding. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had demanded the previous question. The Chair asked him if he withdrew the demand, to which there was no response so far as the Chair heard. It was then understood by unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] should occupy ten minutes. Is that the understanding?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman agrees to the arrangement I will yield him that length of time to discuss the bill; but if he does not agree to it I insist on my demand.

Mr. ACKLEN. I shall probably not occupy ten minutes; but as a question of order the gentleman does not hold the floor and cannot yield to me.

Mr. Speaker, this bill came from the Senate, and having been placed on the Speaker's table——

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Debate is not in order, unless under an arrangement.

Mr. ACKLEN. The bill has received informally the consideration of the Committee on Commerce. Mr. Richards, representing one of the large canal companies, appeared before that committee and made a statement——

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Debate is not in order, and I object to it, unless in pursuance of an agreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman demands the previous question, debate is not in order.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker, I agree to take ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. ACKLEN. I was recognized by unanimous consent as entitled to the floor for ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws the demand for the previous question, which the Chair understands he does not do, the gentleman from Louisiana can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman did withdraw his demand.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I stated distinctly that I did not withdraw the demand.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman from Pennsylvania was on the floor with the purpose of demanding the previous question; but before doing so, he agreed to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana. It was in order for him to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated that he did not withdraw his demand for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman from Pennsylvania simply claims his right to hold the floor for an hour, giving notice that at the end of the hour he will call the previous question. In the mean time he yields ten minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana, which that gentleman accepts on the terms indicated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] whether he has yielded ten minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. ACKLEN. He certainly did.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I demanded the previous question and yielded ten minutes to the gentleman under an arrangement that if he wished to discuss the bill for that length of time he should do so. But at the same time I did not withdraw my demand for the previous question.

Mr. ACKLEN. I agree to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana cannot proceed except by unanimous consent. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ACKLEN. I make the point that the gentleman can yield whenever he pleases, if he has charge of this bill. He has yielded ten minutes to me, and by unanimous consent of the House I hold the floor, for there was not a single objection to my proceeding for ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. ACKLEN. And furthermore I had commenced my remarks. Now I claim as a matter of right that I am not to be interrupted for ten minutes. On that question of order I demand the ruling of the Chair. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ACKLEN. Will the Chair rule on my point of order? [Cries of "Regular order!" "Vote!" "Vote!"] I insist on my point of order. What is the ruling of the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already ruled that pending the demand for the previous question no arrangement of that kind can be made unless the demand for the previous question be withdrawn.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I cannot withdraw the demand.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I yield now ten minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ACKLEN.]

Mr. ACKLEN rose.

Mr. CONGER. I submit this bill is not reported by a committee, and therefore the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not any hour of which to give away a part. I ask that the rule be read. The rule only gives an hour when a bill has been reported from a committee. This has not been to a committee at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposes the gentleman from Louisiana has unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. CONGER. If it is done by unanimous consent I have no objection.

Mr. ACKLEN. I think that was the understanding.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the gentleman to claim the floor as a right.

Mr. ACKLEN. I claimed it originally as a right.

Mr. CONGER. But now, how?

Mr. ACKLEN. I claim it now because the gentleman from Pennsylvania has yielded to me, and I claim it also by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that this is by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Louisiana accepts it by unanimous consent and not as a right.

Mr. ACKLEN. I accept it by unanimous consent or in any way I can get it.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask that before the gentleman from Louisiana proceeds the bill be read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. ACKLEN. Now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Richards, who came before the Committee on Commerce, made a distinct statement in substantially the following words. I had his words taken down at that time by my secretary, who is a stenographer. He said:

Prior to 1874 canal-boats had been construed by the Treasury Department as exempt from the provisions of the law of 1793; but during the early part of that year the collector at the port of Philadelphia so construed the law as to bring canal-boats within the action of the law. The case was then brought before Congress and the present law, now known as the law of 1874, was passed in order that this class of boats might be exempt.

That law reads as follows:

That the act to which this is a supplement shall not be so construed as to extend the provisions of said act to canal-boats or boats employed on the internal waters or canals of any State; and all such boats, excepting only such as are provided with sails or propelling machinery of their own, adapted to lake or coastwise navigation, and excepting such as are employed in trade with the Canadas, shall be exempt from the provisions of said act and from the payment of all customs and other fees under any act of Congress.

Bear in mind this is the act of April 18, 1874, which is an amendment to the original act of 1793, and, in order that the House may understand it fully, I now read this act of 1793, which is as follows:

Every vessel of twenty tons or upward, other than registered vessels found trading between district and district, or between different places in the same district, or carrying on the fishery without being enrolled and licensed, or if less than twenty tons and not less than five tons, without a license, in the manner provided by this title, if laden with merchandise the growth or manufacture of the United States only, distilled spirits excepted, or in ballast, shall pay the same fees and tonnage in every port of the United States at which she may arrive as vessels not belonging to a citizen of the United States; and, if she have on board any articles of foreign growth or manufacture, or distilled spirits, other than sea stores, she shall, together with her tackle, apparel, and furniture, and the lading found on board, be forfeited.

Now, he further stated—

That from the passage of the act of 1874, until about the 26th of August, 1878, there was no trouble; but on that date the collector of the port of Perth Amboy, New Jersey, began seizing boats for enrolling, admeasurement, and licensing. The question was then submitted to Secretary Sherman as to whether under the law the collector at Perth Amboy had any right in law to seize the boats. Judge French, who is the Second Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, decided at that time that canal-boats and barges plying on the waters of New York Bay, Hudson River, and points adjacent to New York city, were exempt under the law of 1874, and Secretary Sherman instructed the collector at Perth Amboy to cease seizing these boats.

Within the last three weeks Attorney-General Devens has rendered a decision on the question. Under the decision of the Attorney-General the law becomes a discriminating one, because boats running from one point in a jurisdiction to another in the same jurisdiction are exempt; but in running from one jurisdiction into another jurisdiction they are subject to customs charges.

You will see from his statement that the desire on the part of the advocates of this bill was substantially this: they wished to exempt from enrollment and admeasurement and all of the license fees boats that are employed either wholly or in part upon canals; and they propose to do it under the bill which is now before the House. But is there a necessity for any such enactment? Does the law not already exempt boats that are employed wholly or in part upon canals from any enrollment or license? It clearly and unequivocally does. On that point I will have the opinion of the Attorney-General read.

I send to the Clerk's desk and ask that the decision of the Attorney-General, and afterward the instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury to the collector at the port, be read, which will clearly and unequivocally show that the very boats which they propose to exempt under this bill are already exempted from enrollment and license fees under the present law, or by the decision of the Attorney-General under that law, and with the addition of instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury himself to the collectors of the different ports. And then I propose to show to the House that the bill now under consideration has an ulterior motive in it; that it does not propose to act upon the class of boats for which relief is desired at all, but that it is intended to go further and to exempt from enrollment and license an entirely different class of boats which will compete with the present sailing vessels in domestic trade on our navigable waters, and which will substantially work a very great change in the maritime laws of this country. The House does not understand this bill. When they do understand it I know they will vote it down or vote to recommit it to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ACKLEN. Not if it comes out of my time.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman just a single question. Does he not know there are at least fifty or sixty canal-boats now tied up at Perth Amboy and seized by the Government?

Mr. ACKLEN. I have no knowledge of the fact. It has been stated to me; but whether they are canal-boats or the class of barges this bill proposes to exempt I cannot say.

Mr. O'NEILL. Will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ACKLEN. First let the Clerk read what I have sent up; after that I will yield for a question.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1879.

SIR: Upon the 5th of September last you submitted the following question:

Whether, under Revised Statutes, section 4371, as amended by the act of April 18, 1874, a boat answering to the description of a canal-boat, of more than five tons burden, is required to be documented as a vessel of the United States if found trading between different ports or districts, on navigable waters of the United States, provided such boat has never been used upon a canal, was not intended for such use, and does not in its present employment enter a canal? You explain that your inquiry relates to such craft devoted wholly to the transportation of coal from Perth Amboy, New Jersey, to New York City.

In my opinion, it was the intention of Congress that such vessel, so used, should be treated, if laden with domestic freight, as a foreign vessel; and if loaded with foreign goods, should be forfeited, (under Revised Statutes, section 4371,) unless licensed as provided by the laws regulating the coasting trade, and the documenting of vessels engaged in such trade. The act of April 18, 1874, dispenses with the necessity of such a license "to canal-boats or boats employed on the internal waters or canals of any State. (18 Stats., 31.)

It is the use made of the vessel, and not its mechanical structure, that determines whether or not it is entitled to the exemption allowed by this statute.

Vessels employed as stated in your question are not excepted from the operation of Revised Statutes, section 4371, by the act of April 18, 1874.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 17, 1879.

SIR: Your letter of the 14th instant is received, in which you direct attention to a contradiction between printed decision No. 3717, September 5, 1878, in relation to documenting canal-boats, and Department letter of the 30th ultimo, to you, on the same subject.

Decision No. 3717 was based upon the opinion of the Attorney-General, dated October 19, 1875, (synopsis 2478,) which in effect construed the law of April 18, 1874, (Statutes at Large, volume 13, part 3, page 31,) to exempt from enrollment and license all vessels "answering to the description of a canal-boat" which were not provided with propelling machinery of their own and not engaged in trade with Canada.

This decision was not deemed satisfactory, and on September 5, 1878, the question was again submitted to the Attorney-General, and a copy of his reply, dated January 13 last, is inclosed.

In his latter opinion the Attorney-General takes the ground that a vessel is not entitled to be designated as a canal-boat within the meaning of the law of April 18, 1874, unless she is employed in whole or in part upon a canal.

This ruling is in consonance with the opinion of this Department, and the following rules are laid down for your future guidance in relation to these vessels:

1. Canal-boats having no propelling machinery of their own and not engaged in trade with Canada, but which are employed wholly or in part upon canals or the internal waters of a State, are exempted from enrollment and license by act of April 18, 1874.

2. Canal-boats, so called, which are engaged in the coasting trade exclusively within the navigable waters of the United States, are not exempted by the act cited, and, unless they fall within the provisions of section 4385, Revised Statutes, should be provided with marine documents.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS, Albany, New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] has expired.

Mr. ACKLEN. I was interrupted on several occasions, and I think the House can have no desire to vote upon this important question without some discussion upon it.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask that the gentleman may be allowed five minutes to continue his remarks.

Mr. ACKLEN. Say ten; this is an important matter, and the House ought not to vote upon it without understanding it.

Mr. COFFROTH. I object to allowing the gentleman ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to allowing the gentleman five minutes, and he will proceed.

Mr. ACKLEN. I now desire to call the attention of the House, as I am cut down to five minutes, to the following portion of the instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury. Speaking of the opinion of the Attorney-General, which has just been read by the Clerk, the Secretary of the Treasury says, under date of May 17, 1879, last month:

This ruling is in consonance with the opinion of this Department, and the following rules are laid down for your future guidance in relation to these vessels:

1. Canal-boats having no propelling machinery of their own, and not engaged in trade with Canada, but which are employed wholly or in part upon canals or the internal waters of a State, are exempted from enrollment and license by act of April 18, 1874.

2. Canal-boats, so called, which are engaged in the coasting trade exclusively within the navigable waters of the United States, are not exempted by the act cited, and, unless they fall within the provisions of section 4385 Revised Statutes, should be provided with marine documents.

Now, could anything be plainer or clearer than these instructions to the collectors of the different ports from the Secretary of the Treasury himself? That disposes finally and conclusively of the idea that canal-boats employed either wholly or in part upon canals and our internal waters are subject to enrollment and license. There can be no doubt about that whatever.

Now, what does this bill propose to do? It proposes to exempt a totally different class of vessels. It proposes to exempt all barges that are constructed in a shape similar to canal-boats, and which navigate our navigable waters, and are engaged in the coast trade of the United States. What would be the result of the passage of such a law? It would result simply in evading many of the restrictions of our maritime laws which have been so wisely placed by this Government on boats and vessels connected with our coasting trade. It would go even further than that, and enable these boats to engage in the greatest amount of smuggling, because these boats under the law would have no enrollment and no license, and the result would be that substantially they would be subjected to no correct or proper inspection. But this act goes even further than that.

I will read it again. It is as follows:

That the provisions of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the payment of any fee or charge for the enrolling or licensing of vessels built in the United States and owned by citizens thereof not propelled wholly by sail or by internal motive power of their own, and not in any case carrying passengers, whether navigating the internal waters of a State or the navigable waters of the United States, and not engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territory.

The House will note the following words: "not propelled wholly by sail or by internal motive power of their own." Let members of this House bear the words which I have just quoted carefully in mind; for under the provisions of this act containing them if vessels or boats are propelled in part by internal motive power of their own and in part by sails, under this law they would be exempt. There can be no doubt of that. The word "wholly" has been put into the bill for a specific purpose, and I say again that there is an ulterior motive in this bill, and that it should be subjected to the most careful consideration, because it proposes to change a law matured by the experience of years and which places proper restrictions upon boats and vessels engaged in our coasting trade.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ACKLEN. I had much more to say, but as my time has expired I yield the floor.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. REAGAN. I desire at some stage of the proceedings upon this bill to have a few moments to discuss it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can have whatever time he desires by unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not ask that it be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I desire a few moments to discuss the bill.

Mr. FORT. This bill is a very important one, and it ought to be committed to a committee. The questions which the gentleman from Louisiana has discussed show that it ought to go to a committee and that a committee ought to consider it.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire only five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] may speak upon the pending bill for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAYNE. I would inquire who has the floor now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas by unanimous consent is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. BAYNE. I understood my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. I will not interfere with the gentleman if he desires to speak now.

Mr. BAYNE. Perhaps the suggestions which I may make will come within the line of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas. I know that this bill is very important to our people and to the commerce of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, and that it is calculated to remove the obstacles put upon that commerce by the construction given to the present law by the Secretary of the Treasury. I know that our people who do business on those rivers will favor this measure. I do not know how it may operate on the seaboard, whether it be open or not to the objections which have been urged by the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ACKLEN.] But I do know that it is important to our people, and in that view of the case I desire to say a word or two upon the bill.

Mr. BREWER. I ask unanimous consent that five minutes be granted each of these gentlemen, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BAYNE.]

Mr. FORT. I think we had better have the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. BREWER.]

Mr. FORT. If the members of the House are advised what they want to do, they can vote on this bill; otherwise I think it should be sent to the Committee on Commerce. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] will proceed, having been given five minutes upon this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose I must try to say what I can in five minutes, although it is impossible to consider this subject as it deserves of itself, or as is due to the House, in that time. It is provided in the act of 1792 that—

Every vessel of twenty tons or upward, other than registered vessels, found trading between district and district, or between different places in the same district, or carrying on the fishery without being enrolled and licensed, or if less than twenty tons and not less than five tons, without a license, in the manner provided by this title, if laden with merchandise the growth or manufacture of the United States only, distilled spirits excepted, or in ballast, shall pay the same fees and tonnage in every port of the United States at which she may arrive as vessels not belonging to a citizen of the United States; and, if she have on board any articles of foreign growth or manufacture, or distilled spirits, other than sea stores, she shall, together with her tackle, apparel, and furniture, and the lading found on board, be forfeited.

There was a class of vessels coming under this statute known as canal-boats, which for the convenience of commerce passed out of the canals and into public navigable waters, perhaps going from the end of the canal to some near port. Those boats passing out of canals and upon these public waters were subject to the provisions of this statute. To obviate this, and to relieve the class of vessels known as canal-boats, the act of 1874 was passed, which is as follows:

That the act to which this is a supplement shall not be so construed as to extend the provisions of the said act to canal-boats or boats employed on the internal waters or canals of any State; and all such boats, excepting only such as are provided with sails or propelling machinery of their own adapted to lake or coastwise navigation, and excepting such as are employed in trade with the Canadas, shall be exempt from the provisions of the said act, and from the payment of all customs and other fees under any act of Congress.

Now I will not read again the opinion of the Attorney-General and the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury, as read a few moments ago by my friend from Louisiana, [Mr. ACKLEN.] It is sufficient to say that in the opinion of the Attorney-General and by the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury all boats run wholly or partly in canals are now exempt from registrations and license fees.

When this pending bill was brought informally before the Committee on Commerce, (for it has never been formally before that committee,) it was explained to us that the object was to relieve that precise class of vessels from the expense of registration and license fees. An examination of the two provisions of law to which I have just referred, and of the opinion of the Attorney-General upon which the Secretary of the Treasury issued his instructions, shows that that could not be the object of this bill, for the very vessels which it is professed are to be relieved from these burdens by this bill are now relieved from them by the existing law.

But it is still insisted that there is some misunderstanding about the subject. No one can examine the law and the opinion of the Attorney-General and the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury without seeing that any one aggrieved by violations of the law or a disregard of the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury upon this subject can undoubtedly have relief by applying for it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The five minutes of the gentleman have expired.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments longer.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the gentleman will have additional time.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move that the gentleman have five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEILL. Now will the gentleman from Texas let me ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. I cannot be interrupted in five minutes' time to answer questions.

Mr. O'NEILL. Will the gentleman read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. REAGAN. I have read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I venture the statement that the Secretary signed it formally, without knowing what was in it. But I cannot enter upon that sort of colloquy now. I think the law of the land as contained in the statute-book, the former opinion of the Attorney-General, and the explicit instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury, to which I call attention——

Mr. O'NEILL. This subsequent letter of the Secretary of the Treasury does away with all those instructions.

Mr. REAGAN. I cannot yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury, which are dated May 17, are embodied in two paragraphs:

1. Canal-boats having no propelling machinery of their own and not engaged in trade with Canada, but which are employed wholly or in part upon canals or the internal waters of a State, are exempted from enrollment and license by act of April 18, 1874.

2. Canal-boats, so called, which are engaged in the coasting trade exclusively within the navigable waters of the United States, are not exempted by the act cited, and, unless they fall within the provisions of section 4385, Revised Statutes, should be provided with marine documents.

Now, whenever the facts of this case come to be examined, I believe it will be found to be true that persons engaged, not in the canal trade, but in the coasting trade, desire to be relieved of the expense and burdens placed upon the shipping of the country by the laws of the land regulating the licensing of vessels engaged in the coasting trade; and it is proposed to take vessels that can be towed by tug-boats, put them in the coasting trade, and thus relieve them from the payment of license. If that be done, you substantially drive from the service all vessels propelled by sail or steam which are required by law to meet these expenses. If that is not the object of the bill, then it is utterly incomprehensible to me.

This bill should not be passed without deliberation; it has not been investigated as it deserves to be; impartial opinion has not been brought to bear upon it; and if we pass it we shall, in my opinion, commit a fatal blunder.

The bill proposes to go far beyond the act of 1874 by extending its provisions to vessels "not wholly propelled by steam or machinery of their own." Who can explain the meaning of those words, "not wholly." Are they intended to exempt not only canal-boats and other boats of that description, but those partly propelled by sail and partly propelled by steam? That construction, it seems to me, would be entirely in consonance with the purpose of the bill.

One further point to which I ask the earnest attention of the House. If this bill be passed we exempt from inspection, from enrollment, from license, vessels engaged in the coasting trade and open wide the door to smuggling upon the great lakes and on the Rio Grande frontier, thus doing infinite damage to the commerce of the United States. If we mean to revise the laws relating to river navigation, let us do so intelligently; but if my friend from Pennsylvania thinks that the bill applies to the rivers, he wholly misapprehends the character of the measure.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'NEILL. Let the gentleman read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury which was sent to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I yield to my colleague [Mr. KLOTZ] for three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] cannot yield any time.

Mr. KLOTZ. I desire to occupy only three minutes.

Mr. FORT. When the bill came up, it was assumed that the House knew all about it and did not need any debate. I think it is now high time the bill should go to the appropriate committee. I demand the regular order.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I have charge of this bill, and I desire to say a few words in reply to what has been said by gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. FORT. When the bill was brought in the gentleman thought the bill did not need any debate. As it now appears that there is great diversity of opinion upon the merits of the measure, it is clear the bill ought to go to a committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask gentlemen on both sides to agree to an adjournment that we may see the bill in print before we proceed further with its consideration. It will be resumed to-morrow.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. The bill has been in print for several days.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not before us.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir; it was printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GARFIELD. The bill is too important to be acted on in this hasty way. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce, with instructions to report to-morrow morning.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I object.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. GARFIELD, there were—ayes 52, noes 47.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before announcing the result of the vote on the motion to adjourn, the Chair desires to lay before the House certain requests.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS asks leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the political questions which have been agitated in Congress during the present session.

There being no objection, leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MCCOID asks leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks upon the subject of extending the judicial appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to this request?

Mr. MCMAHON. We do object. There has been enough literature on these subjects.

The result of the vote on the motion of Mr. GARFIELD was then announced; and accordingly (at three o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. JOHNSTON: The petition of Z. W. Pickrell, that her claim for rent of her factory and for tobacco taken by the United States authorities be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of William S. Kemball & Co., Hamberger Brothers & Lorain and others, for the refunding of the additional tax assessed on manufactured tobacco under the ruling of Commissioner Douglass on the act of 3d of March, 1875, which has been shown to be illegal under a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. MCMAHON: The petitions of Michael Dunning and John H. Gleason, for pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MONROE: The petition of Mrs. E. A. Nichols and 864 other ladies of Oberlin, Ohio, and vicinity, against the passage of any laws that will promote the interest of dealers in liquors—to the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. VOORHIS: The petition of Allen & Dunning and other manufacturers of tobacco, of Paterson, New Jersey, against the passage of the free leaf-tobacco bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WELLBORN: The petition of Mary E. Purnell, for such legislation as will enable her to sue in the United States Court of Claims for the proceeds of certain captured and abandoned property—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 25, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

NAMING OF A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Chief Clerk (Hon. F. E. SHOBER) called the Senate to order.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Clerk, I move that the honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] take the chair as presiding officer in the absence of the President pro tempore of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The following communication addressed by the President pro tempore to the Secretary of the Senate I will read:

WEDNESDAY, June 25, 1879.

SIR: I am prevented by illness from attending the Senate to-day. I therefore, in accordance with Rule 4, name Senator EATON to perform the duties of the Chair until the adjournment to-day.

Very respectfully,

A. G. THURMAN.

Colonel BURCH,
Secretary United States Senate.

Mr. EATON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer of the Senate for to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 113) to provide for the purchase of the stereotype plates of the final reports upon the centennial exhibition of 1876 was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REFRIGERATING SHIP FOR DISINFECTION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 23d instant, a report of the proceedings of the National Board of Health, and papers and correspondence relative to the purchase or construction of a refrigerating ship for the disinfection of vessels.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the communication be referred to the select committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, and that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire that all the papers accompanying the communication, which are very voluminous, shall be printed?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Indiana not now in his seat [Mr. MCDONALD] was the mover of the resolution. I suppose he will desire that the accompanying papers be printed. I would suggest to him if he were in his seat, however, that quite a voluminous paper, containing the report of the naval experts, was communicated to the Senate from the Navy Department a few days since, in answer to another resolution, and it has been printed as a part of that communication. How far it may be necessary to print it again as a part of this communication I am not prepared to say; but I suppose the Senator who moved the resolution will desire the accompanying papers printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 343) relating to printing impressions from portraits and vignettes, to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. An act of the same character from the House has passed.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Committee on Public Lands having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2275) extending the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands," approved March 3, 1877, until the 1st day of October, 1880, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and recommend the passage of the substitute. I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill to-morrow morning. It is an important matter that should have immediate attention.

DARIEN CANAL—MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 43) in relation to the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Darien by European powers; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas the people of this Union have for upward of fifty years adhered to the doctrine asserted by President Monroe "as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future" occupation "by any European power:" Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the people of these States would not view without serious inquietude any attempt by the powers of Europe to establish under their protection and domination a ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien, and such action on the part of any European power could not be regarded in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER.

Mr. VEST submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the complete remonetization of silver, its full restoration as a money metal, and its free coinage by the mints of the United States are demanded alike by the dictates of justice and wise statesmanship.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2274) concerning the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of 2,000 copies of volume 4 of the geological series of the reports of the geographical and geological survey of the Rocky Mountain region, entitled Geology of the Black Hills of Dakota, with the necessary illustrations and charts.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of 12,000 extra copies of the report and proceedings of the Paris monetary conference, held in August last.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. No. 674) for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields, and to increase the pension of Caroline S. Webster; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 5) relative to certain accepted drafts and other papers in the Department of State.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (H. R. No. 1847) to provide for the appointment of a "Mississippi River commission" for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes near its mouth to its headwaters;

A bill (H. R. No. 2264) to amend section 1, page 234, volume 20, of the United States Statutes at Large, Forty-fifth Congress;

A bill (H. R. No. 2267) providing for the binding of the internal-revenue laws and manual;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 32) authorizing the completion of the foundation of the Washington Monument; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 71) authorizing the appointment of a commission to lease a building for a city post-office in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC SERVICE.

Mr. BECK. If there are no other resolutions, I should be glad to call up and say a few words about the resolution I submitted yesterday which is printed as Miscellaneous Document No. 48.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. BECK yesterday, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That a joint committee, composed of five Senators and seven Representatives, be appointed, in such manner as each House may determine, to examine and report at an early day of the next December session of this Congress what changes, if any, ought to be made in the mode of guarding or collecting the revenue, either from customs or internal taxation, or in the management of the various Departments and bureaus of the Government, with a view to efficiency in service and economy in appropriations of the public money. Said committee shall report whether changes from permanent to annual appropriations would be advantageous or otherwise, in whole or in part; it shall have power to sit during the recess, to examine witnesses, send for persons and papers, administer oaths, appoint sub-committees, and visit such places as will enable it to obtain such information as it may desire, and the expenses of the committee shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the two Houses in the proportion of the number of the members of each.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, before he proceeds to the discussion of this resolution, I will call his attention to the fact of the unequal number of the members of the two Houses which he proposes to place upon the committee, seven from the House and five from the Senate, which would enable the House members of the committee to vote down the Senate members. I think a joint committee should always be composed of an equal number on the part of each House.

Mr. BECK. I thought it was usual to have a larger number on the part of the House of Representatives. If it is not, it would be far better to have five each, or seven each, if that is the usual mode.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was once customary to have a larger number from the House, but the attention of the Senate has been called to the inequality, and latterly I think upon joint committees the number has been made equal. I think it should be so at all events.

Mr. BECK. I can only say that I would greatly prefer it if that is the sense of the Senate. I can say in a few moments all I desire to say about the resolution. I do not design to make a speech about it at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If my friend from Kentucky will give way for a moment I will state that I concur with the Senator from Rhode Island, and I hope we shall make the number equal. It is a subject upon which each House should be consulted alike. I suggest that to the Senator from Kentucky, although of course I shall follow what are his wishes.

Mr. BECK. I should prefer myself to say five each, or seven each, or any other equal number. If the resolution meets with any favor I am content to have it changed in any form that Senators wish. I desire to state the reasons, however, for introducing the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I had a single object in view in introducing the resolution now before the Senate, and that was to endeavor to ascertain if possible whether the present mode of collecting our revenues could not be improved, and whether there could not be greater efficiency obtained with less expenditure of the public moneys in the various departments of the Government. I have delayed introducing it perhaps longer than I ought, because I do not desire to be a member of the committee. I am afraid I will not have the time this summer, for various reasons unnecessary to state here, to permit me to serve on it. Perhaps it had better go to some committee of the Senate to look into it and see whether the suggestions in my resolution meet with favor. If the Committees on Finance, Appropriations, or Commerce should report against the resolution I offer, I would doubt the correctness of my own views.

Mr. President, I have seen, in the course of a number of years' service, a great many difficulties and losses growing out of the present mode of collection of internal revenue and of customs dues. I laid before the Senate some time ago a table showing the number of custom-houses in the United States that were not paying their expenses, a very large number of them—thirty odd—and very many others that are barely collecting a sum sufficient to pay their expenses. I showed that we have, for example, in operation along the coast, which ought all and each to be a coast guard, four fleets, one known as the Revenue Marine, another as the Light-House Board, another the Coast Survey, another the Wrecking or Life-Saving Service, all under independent heads, none being required to aid the other, and none but the Revenue Marine fleet seeming to do much towards guarding the coast in the collection of the revenues, unless it be the Life-Saving Service, which aids the Revenue Marine in some important particulars.

I had heard the present Secretary of the Treasury, or rather I had read a very able speech made by him in August or September, 1877, nearly two years ago, in which he undertook to show that the amount of expenditure in the various custom-houses of the country was altogether in excess of and wholly unwarranted by the necessities of the service. He tried to show how, in many instances, he had endeavored to reform these abuses, but that there was no legislation that enabled him to do it, and that he needed the aid of Congress in so doing. I have not his speech before me and therefore speak from recollection. I am well satisfied that in the internal-revenue service there is an immense amount of improper and unnecessary expenditure. For example, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has advised us that he has in the last two years licensed or opened some two hundred and fifty new distilleries, many of them very small, many of them not paying the expenses of the gaugers and storekeepers that are employed and paid by the United States to watch them. Those officials have to be sustained at great expense to the tax-payers of the country. When a distillery quits running, say on the 1st of June in each year and lies idle until November, we continue to pay four or five dollars a day to keep watchmen in the still-houses over a few barrels of whisky, doing nothing, when by the same system adopted in California in regard to domestic wines, by consolidating the products of many producers in one fire-proof warehouse for the benefit alike of the producer and the Government, one man could do the work that perhaps thirty are now doing and being paid for. In that regard it seems to me that a great saving could be had and the public service be benefited.

In the speech I referred to as having been made by the Secretary of the Treasury in 1877, my recollection is that he showed that a great saving could be made by a change of the law relative to contracts for public buildings. In one public building alone at the other end of the Avenue, there was a saving, if I recollect aright, of nearly half a million dollars, and with the number of great buildings in process of construction all over the United States it seemed to me that changes and regulations could be made that would inure to the good of the public service, that would save a vast amount of money and at the same time enable Congress to have these important subjects under its control.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Kentucky will allow me just there to ask him a question for information as he has given considerable attention to this subject. He has cited a case where a change of a contract under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury saved to the Treasury nearly half a million dollars. I ask him whether under present authority the Secretary of the Treasury is not fully charged to make these reformatory changes to which he now alludes, and which he proposes to reach by a resolution appointing a joint committee of the two Houses?

Mr. BECK. My impression is that he is not as fully authorized as he ought to be; at least I think he claims that he is not. My desire is not to find fault with anything that has been done in the past, but to have an intelligent committee of the two Houses ascertain what the facts are, to see whether all has been done that can be done. If the Secretary has full power to do what is necessary now, then the committee will so report. Believing that not to be the case, however, and believing that it is important we should know whether it is so or not, I thought a committee of the two Houses ought to look into it with care. The Senator from Michigan is well aware, and so are all Senators, of the difficulty we have had in regard to the proper expenditures of the appropriations that are made for rivers and harbors and many other things that perhaps improvements could be made in, if the matters were looked into and carefully examined by intelligent Senators and Representatives of the leading committees, regardless of their political status.

My idea is that if the committee should be composed say of two members from the Committee on Appropriations, the chairman for example, and its late chairman [Mr. WINDOM] with the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. BAYARD] and its late chairman, or the Senator from Michigan who has long been and now is a distinguished member of that committee, and the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, aided by members of the leading committees of the House, selected to take charge of this matter, and look into it as carefully as they can between now and December, in my judgment they would ascertain that great improvements could be made, that great saving of the public money could be had. I am not blaming the Departments at present for anything that has happened in the past; that is not my object in making this statement; my resolution has nothing to do with anything that has happened. New systems and modes of taxation have grown up in the last ten or twelve years. Our internal-revenue system was unknown to the country comparatively before the war. Great changes have been made in it of late years, and improvements have been made no doubt, but many more can yet be made. The system is much better guarded and protected now than it was eight or ten years ago when we received comparatively nothing from it, notwithstanding the heavy taxes imposed. It is obvious, from looking over the custom-houses of the country, that great improvements and reductions of expenditures could be made there. I could go on and cite wherein, but I do not care to do that, because I want the committee I seek to have appointed to do it, and I will not embarrass the members of it by any suggestions in advance as to the methods to be employed.

So with many other things, Mr. President. It may not be amiss to say that I never saw a more favorable time than this to make such examinations and changes. The parties are nearly equally balanced The President, if you please, differs with the majority of the two Houses. There can be no legislation had on these subjects that will be injurious to the service; none such will be recommended. The idea in my mind is to have the committee composed of the leading representatives of the leading committees who have to deal with those subjects, regardless of party, so that after those gentlemen have obtained the necessary information they may on the floor of their respective Houses tell exactly what the facts are. No outside committee, however intelligent, not composed of gentlemen of that character and position, would do us any good, however carefully their report might be prepared and presented. The information ought to be in the minds of men who have to act upon it, and it ought to be in the minds of the leading committee-men who have charge of the respective subjects, as they could answer all questions put to them by members of either House.

I desire to have this done now for another reason, which is that after we meet in December the men who ought to attend to this work will be at once engaged to the limit of their capacity. The Committee on Finance, perhaps the very moment they meet in December, will have to consider great and important subjects growing out of the relation of gold and silver and paper, tariffs, taxes, and other things; they cannot spare a moment. I know that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the leading members of that committee in both Houses will at once have to begin considering the bills necessary to provide for the ordinary expenditures of the Government. The Committee on Commerce will at once have its hands full with the great interests confided to it. But if a joint committee be appointed now, although I know it is very late in the season and the duties of this extra session have been onerous, it can during the months of October and November in some way that it will devise, perhaps without much labor or much expense, put itself in connection with the leading officers of the Government and the leading business men of the country and obtain the information necessary to make a thorough and radical reform in whatever is wrong. They can at least do this if there are wrongs that are merely imaginary or that cannot be improved; their report will go far to satisfy us in that regard.

In every particular it seemed to me to be an important thing that we should obtain during this summer such information as would enable the committees of the two Houses when they met in December to intelligently and carefully look over all these great questions, because there are no greater questions connected with the Government than those guarding the revenue, either in customs or internal taxes, and limiting the expenditures down to the lowest point consistent with the efficiency of the service.

There are questions growing out of the permanent appropriations that have been made from time to time, and are not well understood, amounting to many millions: for example, all fines collected are appropriated by law, not subject to revision by Congress, in a lump, for the aid of the custom-house service and to pay its officials. There are a great many other matters which I need not speak of over which Congress has no annual revisory power. Perhaps the joint committee might think it best not to give Congress that revisory power. I think in very many cases it ought to have it. I think when the Congress makes appropriations it ought not to make them in a lump by the $50,000,000 or $100,000,000, but it ought to see how the money is spent, and be able to control its expenditure as the good of the country may seem to require. Many of the permanent, indefinite, and other appropriations that never come before us ought to have the scrutiny of intelligent representatives who represent States and people, instead of turning them over to departments and bureaus in gross, as is done now. Many of the most important branches of the Government service are run almost wholly by permanent appropriations that no Representative or Senator ever knows anything about, and when the account is made out it is given in some obscure manner, in some obscure pamphlet, that nobody ever reads, and thus all sense of responsibility is lost or utterly ignored.

Perhaps the committee might come to the conclusion that they could not change many of these things, bad as I think they are. I think they will come to the conclusion that in many instances the system ought to be changed. I believe that in many instances the Departments themselves would sanction a change. Whether so or not, it is a matter that ought to be looked into. I believe that this cannot be done by the committees of the two Houses if they do not look into it during vacation. There may be members of the two Houses who have the time, but those members who have the time, either because of their want of length of service or because they are not on important committees, are not generally in a position to influence legislation in regard to these subjects. It is perfectly certain that the men who ought to look into all those questions cannot after Congress meets in December devote any time to them. The result will be, we will go on in the old routine way, cutting off a clerk here, adding one there, and nibbling about, without looking at the great evils that I think exist, where millions of money can be saved in the general regulation and collection of the revenue, both of customs and internal revenue, and in many of the matters pertaining to contracts which the Committee on Commerce could look into, which the Committee on Finance could look into, and the Committee on Appropriations could look into; and, as I believe, they could make important changes, with the consent of nine-tenths of the representatives in both Houses, in regard to many of these things, and with the sanction, I believe, of the heads of the Departments themselves.

In saying that, I mean that I am not now finding fault particularly with the Administration, but rather with the system; necessities perhaps have existed for not sooner seeking a change. I know how hard it is to build up systems and make them work harmoniously and expand in the proper direction without change. I know how hard it is, when a number of supernumeraries are employed for men belonging to their own party to turn them out, and, if you please, reform within their own party lines; both parties can do it much better. Now, when both parties, as I said, are nearly equally balanced, and when each can look into the matter carefully, without much bias or knowledge of what will happen in the near future, we can have a carefully selected committee composed of the leading members of the committees of both political parties, which would enable this Congress to do more good in the way of securing efficient service, of lopping off supernumeraries, stopping whatever there is of corruption, and in saving large amounts—and when I speak of large amounts I mean millions of dollars—to the tax-payers of this country, and still the service would go on well, than we have had for a long time past or may have very soon hereafter.

Mr. President, as I said, I am not going to make a speech in support of the resolution I have offered. I do not desire that the resolution shall be adopted upon my suggestion without careful examination. I think that one of the committees ought to look at it, and I would be glad if I thought an early report could be made to send it to any of the three committees, the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Finance, or the Committee on Commerce. Perhaps the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Finance would be better, as the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. GORDON] is absent, and I understand he is not coming back any more at this session. Let the resolution be referred to either of the other committees, and let them look at it, examine it carefully, and make such report as in their judgment will best conduce to the good of the country and the economy of the service.

I believe I have said about all I care to say in regard to it except this, that on the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island, I shall amend the resolution before it is referred by saying either five members of the Senate and five members of the House or seven members of the Senate and seven members of the House, so as to have an equal number of Senators and Representatives.

Several SENATORS. Five.

Mr. BECK. Five members of the Senate and five of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be made.

Mr. BECK. The resolution can either be referred or acted on by the Senate as the Senate thinks best.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will allow this resolution to be referred to either the Committee on Finance or the Committee on Appropriations, I care not which. It seems to me that the resolution may require some amendment. Whether it is as extensive as it ought to be if it is to pass, I am not certain. I do not rise to object to the passage of the resolution or to its reference; but I would state to the Senator from Kentucky that there will not be time for any members of the Senate and House to make that thorough investigation of the subject which its importance really requires. If it was only the 4th day of March instead of the 25th day of June, there would be time; but now it will be utterly impossible to impose this duty upon any willing members of the Senate and members of the House with any expectation that they will be able to pay any attention to it for two or three months to come, but that the time will be too limited to properly investigate all the topics that are included in this resolution.

Why, Mr. President, we already have nine committees of this body who are authorized to sit during the recess which will take forty or fifty members of the Senate. How can you expect that so many members of the Senate will impose upon themselves the labor required by this resolution? I agree to its importance. I only think that it is too late in the year to have it very effectual. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, I think the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky is a long step in the right direction, and it ought to have been passed many years ago. There are to-day in my judgment many millions that ought to be and would be saved if we knew just where to touch. There are no doubt Departments of this Government that are hard-worked and need more clerical aid. There are others, in my judgment, which are extravagantly provided for and ought to be pruned. I believe that the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky will result in great good.

Now let me say to the Senate that taking the permanent appropriations alone, to those who have not thought of the subject they seem very large and much more than is generally anticipated. During the war and for five or six years afterward the permanent appropriations were greater than the regular annual appropriations, leaving out the interest on the public debt. I believe that that ought to be untouched, that it ought to be a permanent appropriation, and I suppose no one desires to touch or interfere in the least with that portion of the permanent appropriations.

Between the years 1870 and 1878, the last eight years, in the War Department the annual appropriations have been $309,000,000 and the permanent appropriations have been $56,000,000. In that Department about one-fifth of the entire expenditures for the last eight years have been paid from what is known as permanent appropriations which Congress has no control over and which it has not passed upon during that whole period of eight years.

Now take the miscellaneous. The miscellaneous items for the last eight years that have been appropriated for by annual appropriations are $265,000,000, while from the permanent appropriations there have been $56,000,000—I am speaking in round numbers—showing that at this time there are many million dollars paid from the permanent appropriations which Congress in no way passes upon, exclusive of the public debt. I have no desire to interfere or prevent the interest on the public debt being provided for by permanent appropriations; and I hope it will be understood that I always except the public debt. I have a list here of the annual and permanent appropriations in the several departments of the Government for the last eight years; and what I have given has been since 1870, showing that there are great reforms needed in that particular. Now, take the expenses of collecting the customs. The Senator from Kentucky has spoken of that item. Let us see what that has been for the last eight years. The annual appropriations for customs in those eight years have amounted to $62,000,000. The permanent appropriations in which Congress has had no voice, which neither House has passed upon in the last eight years, have been $104,000,000, nearly double. The permanent appropriations which have not been supervised by Congress to any extent whatever have been $104,000,000, and the annual appropriations have been $62,000,000, showing largely more permanent appropriations than annual appropriations. Many of these things no one of us has any idea of. It will be recollected by the Senate that until very recently many of us were not aware that the supervisors of elections were paid out of permanent appropriations and not by annual appropriations; yet that is the case, and no matter whether we appropriate or not they are paid out of the permanent appropriations.

I hope this resolution will not be referred. It is late in the session, as the Senator from Vermont has well said; but if it is referred, before it can get back to the Senate and pass and go to the House and there be properly passed upon the session will, I hope, have passed off, for I trust it will not last many days more. Therefore it ought not, in my judgment, to be referred. If there is any amendment needed, we have plenty of time now for Senators to consider amendments. I hope the resolution will be passed this morning, so that it may go to the House for a conference, and this fall gentlemen will have a month or six weeks, or whatever time may be thought necessary, before Congress meets again, when the committee can meet here and determine how it is best to make the examination. It is possible, and even probable, that all can be done at Washington, and that the expense will be a matter of almost nothing compared with the great importance of the committee.

I agree with the Senator from Kentucky, that when we meet at the next regular session in December all the regular committees of the Senate and the members of them will be so engaged that this examination cannot properly be done by them. The subject needs attention, and especially attention from a committee when Congress is not in session. I therefore suggest that a time may be agreed upon by the committee early in the fall, and possibly they can do all that is to be done in Washington and make a report to the next session of Congress which, in the words of the Senator from Kentucky, would save millions to the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say that this proposition of reference will only cost one day. If the resolution is referred to the Committee on Finance or the Committee on Appropriations it will undoubtedly be acted upon and reported back to-morrow. I think the resolution is too important to be acted upon without some reference.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Upon the suggestion of the mover of the resolution I withdraw my opposition to its reference, as I understand the Committee on Finance meets to-morrow morning, and it may be reported back. It will only cause a delay of one day.

Mr. BECK. I prefer that, because I should like the judgment of one of the leading committees as to whether the resolution ought to pass or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF NAME OF A FERRY-BOAT.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill and put it on its immediate passage.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 719) to change the name of the ferry-boat James Fisk, jr., to Passaic.

Mr. RANSOM. I beg leave to state that the members of the Committee on Commerce have examined the bill and it has their approval. The statement has been made that all the requirements which are insisted on by the Committee on Commerce before they consent to the passage of such a bill, have been fulfilled.

There being no objection the bill was read three times, and passed.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR VARIOUS PURPOSES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further business of the morning hour the Chair will declare it closed, and lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that the joint resolution——

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I wish to move an amendment to the joint resolution providing for the payment of one month's extra pay to certain disabled soldiers who have been discharged from the soldier's roll in the House. I do not intend to offer it at this time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator can offer his amendment, but I was about to make a motion to pass by informally the present joint resolution, to let it lie on the table for the present. The Senator can present his amendment, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from New Hampshire that the amendment now would not in the opinion of the Chair be in order, for there are two amendments now pending, one an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I suggest that I propose to offer it informally.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator can give notice of it and have it printed and offer it when it shall be in order.

Mr. BLAIR. I send it to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay a sum equal to one month's pay from the date of their discharge from the disabled soldiers' roll of the House of Representatives, respectively, to William H. Prescott, Eugene McSweeney, and Robert E. Hedian.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to give notice that at the proper time I will move the amendment at the close of the seventh line of the second section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire the amendment to be printed?

Mr. BLAIR. I presume there is no occasion for it. There will be no controversy in relation to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will lie on the table.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that the joint resolution lie on the table for the present subject to call.

Mr. WINDOM. Is there anything else the Senator desires to bring before the Senate now?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This has not been disposed of. I have no other measure that I desire to call up at present.

Mr. WINDOM. I thought the Senator asked to have this joint resolution laid on the table.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir, that is my motion.

Mr. WINDOM. I was going to say to the Senator that as this joint resolution now covers almost every conceivable subject, and as I wish to make a few remarks of a somewhat general character, occupying about thirty minutes, I think they will be very applicable to the pending resolution; and if the Senator has no objection I will make them now.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WINDOM. There is a little political tendency in the remarks I have to make; and as this measure is general, I think they will fit it better than any other bill that could be called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from West Virginia is withdrawn.

Mr. BECK. Before the Senator from Minnesota proceeds I desire to give notice of and ask to have printed two amendments that I will offer to this bill at some proper time.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have them read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendments will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. — Whereas section 3678, Revised Statutes of the United States, provides that "All sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others;" and

Whereas section 3679 of said statutes provides that "No department of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations:" Therefore,

It is hereby enacted, That any Department or officer of the United States who shall order, direct, or cause to be expended, or make, cause, or permit any contract to be made for the expenditure of any of the money appropriated by Congress in violation of the provisions of the sections above recited, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor of which all district and circuit courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction; and on conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and shall immediately be dismissed from the office held by him, and shall be forever thereafter disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the United States.

Mr. BECK. That is one. The other amendment relates to different subjects.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That it shall not be lawful for any person holding any office under, or receiving any compensation for services rendered to, or under any contract with the United States, to contribute or pay to any committee or person, or into any fund, any money, property, or valuable thing for any election or other political purpose whatsoever, or to pay any assessment or percentage upon the income or emoluments of his office, compensation, or contract, for any political purpose, or to give, lend, advance, or pay any money, property, or valuable thing with the intent, or with the assent, permission, or understanding that the same may be applied to, or for any election or other political purpose whatsoever, nor shall he or she apply the same personally to any political purpose. No head of a Department or other superior officer shall himself collect, or permit or allow any other person to collect or receive, from any officer or other employé in his Department, or under his supervision, or from any other person whatsoever, any assessment, percentage, contribution, gift, loan, or advance of any money, property or valuable thing with the intent, understanding, or permission that the same shall or may be used for any political purpose; and it shall not be lawful for any person or association of persons to collect or attempt to collect, directly or indirectly, from any such official, employé, or contractor with the United States, any money, property, or other things of value, for any election or other political purpose. Any person who shall violate any provision of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof in any court of the United States, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, in the discretion of the court; and any person who shall violate any provision of this act shall, in addition to such fine, be deemed and taken to have vacated the office by him held, and shall be forever thereafter disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the United States.

Mr. BECK. That is carrying out the President's inaugural message; that is all.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire, is that piece of composition in print?

Mr. BECK. It will be in the morning.

Mr. CONKLING. It was to express that hope that I rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendments will be printed.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, since this session began we have heard, almost daily, that the political and industrial interests of the country are suffering from republican misrule, and that the only way to restore purity and prosperity is to reinstate democracy in power. A stranger to our history, listening to the speeches from the other side, might conclude that the country had always been peaceful, united, and prosperous under democratic rule, and that political and industrial ills came only with the advent of republicanism, and can be cured only by its overthrow. It is my purpose to review in the briefest terms and in the most direct manner I can command, a few prominent and well-known facts bearing upon this assumption. In doing so I shall contrast the political, financial, and industrial condition of the country under democratic and republican rule.

DEMOCRACY IN 1860—REPUBLICANISM IN 1879.

Prior to March 4, 1861, democracy had held substantial sway for more than thirty years. True, the whigs had twice elected their President, but in both instances death and democracy had soon captured the Administration. Since March 4, 1861, republicanism has governed the country. The principles and policies of the respective parties, during these long periods of uninterrupted administrative power bore their legitimate fruits. We may, therefore, very properly contrast the results of republicanism, as exhibited in 1879, with the results of democracy as shown in 1860. By their fruits ye shall know them.

Democracy assumed control of a nation strong, united, and prosperous, respected at home and honored abroad. Having ruled for thirty years, it surrendered to the republican administration a country distracted by civil war, dismembered by secession, dishonored by treason in high places, and bankrupt in money and in credit. Do I state this too strongly? Look at the record prior to March 4, 1861!

Seven States had seceded.

A hostile government had been fully organized within our borders.

A hostile congress had been in session for a month at Montgomery, Alabama.

A president and vice-president of the confederacy had been inaugurated.

Levies of troops for the overthrow of the Union had been made, and hostile armies were marching upon our national capital.

Fort Moultrie, Castle Pinckney, Fort Pulaski, Fort Morgan, Fort Jackson, Fort Philip, Fort Pike, and Fort McRea had all been captured by rebel troops, more than six weeks, before the last democratic administration expired.

The United States arsenal at Mount Vernon, Alabama, with two hundred thousand stand of arms, had been captured two months before the republicans came into power.

The Pensacola navy-yard, the Baton Rouge arsenal, the New Orleans mint and custom-house, and the Little Rock arsenal had all been seized by confederate troops, more than four weeks before Lincoln's inauguration.

The United States steamer Star of the West had been fired into by rebel batteries, when attempting to furnish supplies to starving United States soldiers at Fort Sumter.

The rebel General Twiggs had surrendered the United States troops, and transferred the United States property in Texas to the State authorities.

A rebel Secretary of War had sent the arms of the nation south to arm its enemies.

A democratic Secretary of the Navy had ordered our ships to the ends of the earth, so that they should not be available to defend the Union against its foes.

And, most disgraceful of all, a democratic President, backed and indorsed by the great body of his party, had proclaimed to the world the dishonor and impotency of the nation, by declaring in his annual message that no power had been delegated to Congress, nor to any other department of the Federal Government, to coerce a seceded State.

Mr. President, all those crimes had been committed by democrats under a democratic administration, and with the sanction of the very men to whom the guardianship of the Republic had been so long intrusted.

What had democracy done to save a nation, thus falling to pieces, through the rottenness of treason, and the distractions of civil war? Nothing; absolutely nothing. To a nation in the agony of despair, and rapidly nearing the vortex of utter ruin, what word of hope or courage had it uttered? Not one. For the enemies of the country what words of rebuke had it spoken? None. Its condemnation had been only for those who sought to save; its encouragement for those who would destroy.

Such was the legacy of treason, civil war, secession, national impotency, and dishonor, bequeathed from thirty years of democratic rule! Such were the conditions under which republicanism took control of the Government, and the extreme peril from which it rescued the nation! Three months more of democratic rule, at that time, would have been utterly fatal, and the great Republic would have been numbered among the things of the past.

From these perilous depths of treason, imbecility, and dishonor, the republican party has, through eighteen years of incessant struggle with the evil spirit of democracy, brought the country to its present condition.

Contrast the grandeur, greatness, and glory of the Republic in 1879 with its impotency and shame in 1860, and you will, to some extent, measure the relative claims and merits of the two parties.

A FINANCIAL CONTRAST.

Mr. President, I next invite attention to the financial contrast presented by democracy in 1860, and republicanism in 1879.

Let me read a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which states, in concise form, the results of democratic financiering:

TREASURY DEPARMMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., September 25, 1878.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of this date, asking for a "statement of the loans made by the United States in the fall of 1860 or the winter of 1861, describing the bonds, the amount sold, and the sum per cent. the Government realized.

In reply thereto, I have to inform you that under the act of December 17, 1860, (12 Stats., 121,) Treasury notes were issued, redeemable at the expiration of one year from date, bearing interest as follows: $70,200, at 6 per cent.; $5,000, at 7 per cent.; $24,500, at 8 per cent.; $31,000, at 8½ per cent.; $10,000, at 8¾ per cent.; $65,000, at 9 per cent.; $10,000, at 9¼ per cent.; $160,000, at 9½ per cent.; $77,000, at 9¾ per cent.; $1,027,500, at 10 per cent.; $266,000, at 10½ per cent.; $623,000, at 10¼ per cent.; $1,367,000, at 10¾ per cent.; $1,432,700, at 11 per cent.; $4,840,000, at 12 per cent.—making a total of $10,010,900.

Additional offers were received, ranging from 15 to 36 per cent., which were refused.

Under the act of February 8, 1861, (12 Stats., 129,) authorizing a loan of $25,000,000 bonds of the United States, bearing 6 per cent. interest, having twenty years to run, were disposed of to the amount of $18,415,000, at an aggregate discount of $2,019,776.10, or an average rate of $89.10 per $100.

So low had the credit of the Government fallen that the Secretary of the Treasury, in January, 1861, suggested to Congress, as a financial resource, that the several States be asked, as security for the repayment of any money the Government might find it necessary to borrow, to pledge the deposits received by them from the Government under the act for the distribution of the surplus revenues in 1836; the Secretary believing that a loan contracted on such a basis of security, superadding to the plighted faith of the United States that of the individual States, could hardly fail to be acceptable to capitalists.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. President, let me say in parenthesis that I hope you will not fail to note this climax of the dogma of "State rights." When the nation, dishonored and humiliated through democratic misrule, had sunk so low that it could no longer raise money to meet its current expenses, it was solemnly proposed to ask the States to become its indorser. I doubt if the present "State-rights" majority in Congress could ask more than this by way of national dependency and humiliation. Even the distinguished "embassador from the sovereign and independent State of Georgia" [Mr. HILL] must have been content.

Pause and think of it for a moment! This great nation unable to borrow the needed funds for current expenditures even at 12 per cent. interest! A 6 per cent. twenty-year bond selling at 89.1 cents on the dollar, and but few bidders even at that ruinous discount! The great Republic, in its extremity and humiliation, seeking an indorser for its dishonored paper! Then turn from these shameful consequences of democratic misrule and disloyalty, as exhibited in 1860, to the grand financial triumphs of republicanism in 1879.

Mark the contrast. In 1860 this nation, under democratic rule, sold its 6 per cent. bonds at 89.1 cents on the dollar. In 1879 the same nation, under republican rule, is selling its 4 per cent. bonds at 103.

In 1860 this Republic was begging an indorser for its dishonored credit. In 1879 the financial world is begging for a chance to buy its 4 per cent. bonds.

Think of this disgraceful national bankruptcy in 1860, and then remember the crowds of people who recently stood in line, extending from the center of Pennsylvania Avenue to the Treasurer's office, waiting from sunrise until sunset, to obtain those coveted bonds.

Democracy denounces the "bloated bondholder," but pays him 12 per cent. interest for his money. Republicanism demands justice for all, but pays the bondholder only 4 per cent. interest.

If, in 1861, a 6 per cent. one-hundred-dollar United States bond, having twenty years to run, sold for $89.10, upon the same basis of investment, a one-hundred-dollar twenty-eight-year 4 per cent. bond should now sell for only $48.81, instead of $103, the present market price. The verdict of the financial world therefore is that the credit of this nation has advanced over 100 per cent. under republican rule. This statement, however, falls very far short of the whole truth, for in 1860, upon a proposed loan of $25,000,000 only $18,415,000 could be sold, while in 1879 offers have been received amounting to over $150,000,000 in a single day.

Do you say this contrast is unfair because a great war was impending in February, 1860? I reply that both the war and the bankruptcy were the fruits of democratic rule. No republican had either inaugurated or threatened war. No republican had voted for secession or committed treason. The democratic policy was a unit, and history will so treat it. Democracy cannot excuse the dishonered national credit because a war was then impending, any more than an incendiary can avoid responsibility for destruction of property, by pleading that the fire did it.

This contrast between our financial condition in 1860 and in 1879 is unjust to the republican rather than to the democratic party. The latter governed in a time of peace, and whatever of trouble or disaster threatened, came wholly from its own partisans. The former rescued the nation when in the very throes of civil war, and in order to save its life raised and expended at least $5,000,000,000. To the demoralization and business disturbances of a great war were superadded the crushing taxation necessary to carry it on. And yet all these difficulties have been bravely encountered and triumphantly overcome. Already three-fifths of the war expenditures have been paid, and the Republic, redeemed from disunion and dishonor, has been placed financially and politically in the very front rank of nations.

From 1857 to 1861, in a time of peace, democracy trebled the national debt to meet current expenditures, while in the last eighteen years republicanism has paid at least $3,000,000,000 of the cost of saving the Union. Of the bonded debt, existing at the close of the war, we have paid on the principal and reduced the rate of interest until the annual charge is now only about one-half what it was in 1866.

The world affords few, if any, instances of financial triumph as grand as those which have thus been achieved by the republican party. And let it not be forgotten that at every step which led to these magnificent results, it has encountered the most virulent and determined opposition from the democracy. Even resumption, now an acknowledged success, was denounced less than a year ago as a wicked and disastrous failure.

I commend all these facts to the careful consideration of those who think that the political and financial interests of the country will be safer, and more prosperous, in democratic than in republican hands.

MARVELOUS INDUSTRIAL AND MATERIAL PROGRESS UNDER REPUBLICAN RULE.

In reply to the allegations that our material and industrial interests have suffered from republican misrule, I beg to submit a few facts drawn from official documents.

Notwithstanding the depression of the last few years, I am confident that the census of 1880 will show the most astonishing advance ever made by this or any other country. I am not unmindful that during the last five years financial disorders, resulting from the war, have produced widespread disaster and suffering, nor of the fact that more than a million men were withdrawn from productive industry, and for four years devoted to carnage and destruction. And yet, notwithstanding all this, I assert that every line of statistics, which may be taken as an index to the material and industrial progress of the people and of the nation, proves that the advance, since 1860, has been without a parallel in our history.

I invite the attention of the Senate to some statistical comparisons between 1860 and 1878, indicating our industrial progress during the eighteen years of republican rule. In making these comparisons it will be borne in mind, that the increase in population has not been more than 50 per cent. since 1860.

Total exports of agricultural products.

In 1878	$536,038,954
In 1860	256,560,972
	279,477,982

Increase, over 100 per cent.

This statement does not fairly represent the general agricultural progress during that period, because the cotton product, which was the chief export in 1860, has not materially changed since that time. The exports of raw cotton in 1860 were $191,806,555, and in 1878 $180,031,489. Deducting these amounts from the total exports of their respective years, the following statements will indicate the

PROGRESS OF GENERAL AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY.

Exports of agricultural products other than cotton.

In 1878	$356,038,954
In 1860	55,754,317
	300,284,637

Increase, over 538 per cent.

Take a few of the leading items of agricultural industry:

Exports of bread and breadstuffs.

In 1878	$181,777,841
In 1868	24,422,310
	157,355,531

Increase, 644 per cent.

The increase of the two principal commodities embraced under the head of "bread and breadstuffs" is shown in the two following statements:

Exports of wheat and wheat flour.

	Bushels.
In 1878	92,141,626
In 1860	17,213,133
	74,928,493

Increase, 430 per cent.

Exports of corn and corn-meal.

In 1878	87,192,110
In 1860	4,248,991
	82,943,119

Increase, 1,952 per cent.

Exports of provisions.

In 1878	$123,556,323
In 1860	16,612,443
	106,943,880

Increase, over 643 per cent.

"Provisions" embrace bacon and hams, beef, butter, cheese, condensed milk, eggs, fish, lard, preserved meats, mutton, oysters, pickles, sauces, pork, onions, potatoes, and vegetables, prepared or preserved, and other vegetables, but do not embrace "bread or breadstuffs."

PROGRESS OF OUR MECHANICAL AND MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES.

Total domestic exports of manufactured articles.

In 1878	$135,171,921
In 1860	42,408,934
	92,762,987

Increase, 218 per cent.

Pig-iron produced in the United States.

	Tons.
In 1878	2,577,361
In 1860	919,770
	1,657,591

Increase, 180 per cent.

Railroad bars of all kinds produced in the United States.

	Tons.
In 1878	882,685
In 1860	205,038
	677,647

Increase, 330 per cent.

TOTAL DOMESTIC EXPORTS.

If we turn to the total domestic exports, we find that the aggregate since 1860 is greater by $601,739,072 than the total aggregate of domestic exports for the seventy-one preceding years, as will appear from the following statement compiled from the reports of the Treasury Department:

Aggregate exports of domestic merchandise.

From 1861 to 1878, inclusive, (18 years,)	$6,616,068,596
From 1790 to 1860, inclusive, (71 years,)	6,014,329,524
	601,739,072

In other words, during the eighteen years of republican rule the country has exported an aggregate surplus of the products of labor, more than six hundred millions greater than during all the previous existence of the Government!

TESTIMONY OF THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The business of the Post-Office Department is one of the best attainable exponents of the activities which constitute national and individual progress, and the most reliable index to our commercial, industrial, social, and intellectual advancement. What do the statistics of that Department teach?

Receipts of the Post-Office Department.

In 1878	$29,277,517
In 1860	8,518,067
	20,759,450

Increase, 243 per cent.

Aggregate receipts of the Post-Office Department for the periods stated below.

From 1790 to 1860, inclusive, (71 years)	$174,501,521
From 1860 to 1878, inclusive, (18 years)	341,700,059
From 1872 to 1878, inclusive, (6 years)	182,487,906

These statistics reveal the astonishing facts:

First. That in eighteen years of republican administration, the aggregate receipts of the Post-Office Department have been nearly double the entire aggregate for the seventy-one preceding years.

Second. That the aggregate receipts, for the last six years, exceed by $8,986,385 the entire receipts from the foundation of the Government to 1860.

TESTIMONY OF INTERNAL COMMERCE.

Turn next to the evidences of industrial progress presented by our internal commerce. It is impossible to state accurately the increase since 1860, because there are no available statistics on this subject, but it can be estimated approximately from certain known facts.

About 90 per cent. of our internal commerce is conducted upon railroads. The New York Central, and the New York and Erie Railroads both being in an old State, may be taken as fair exponents of the increase in railway transportation, and hence of the increase of internal commerce. I think it will be found that a like proportionate increase has been made on all the other railroads of the country.

Tonnage moved one mile by the New York Central and the New York and Erie Railroads.

	Tons.
In 1878	3,309,119,805
In 1860	418,315,787
	2,890,804,018

Increase, 690 per cent.

"Tonnage moved one mile" is the formula adopted by the leading railroads to compare the business of one year with another. The percentage of increase is doubtless larger on many of the new roads than on those I have selected, but these probably present the fairest illustration of the general increase throughout the country.

Railroad mileage of the United States.

	Miles.
In 1878	81,955
In 1860	30,635
	51,320

Increase, 167 per cent!

The reduction in rates of transportation has more than equaled the increase in railway mileage and freights. In 1860, wheat and corn could not be carried by rail from the Mississippi Valley to the Atlantic seaboard at such rates as would afford the western farmer a fair compensation for his capital and labor employed in their production. In fact they were not carried by rail at all to any considerable extent. The lake and canal line was almost wholly relied upon for this kind of transportation, and even by that line the charges averaged about 28 cents per bushel. As late as 1868 the charges by rail from Chicago to New York were 42.6 cents per bushel. Both of these rates were substantially prohibitory and rendered the permanent prosperity and progress of the far West impossible. In 1878 the average water rates from Chicago to New York had been reduced from 28 cents to 8.6, and the all-rail rates from 42.6 cents to 16 cents. Much of this reduction is due to the system of internal improvements that has prevailed under republican administrations, by which the lake route and the Mississippi River have been improved and brought into active competition with each other and with the railroad system of the country. I am informed that the rates this year are even lower than in 1878, and that a thousand car-loads of wheat have recently been carried from Saint Louis to New York at the rate of 7 cents per bushel. This was brought about through competition created by the jetty improvements at the mouth of the Mississippi River.

By reason of the policy of internal improvements and the consequent reductions in rates, the farmers of the Mississippi Valley are practically as near market, to-day, as the farmers of Central New York, or Pennsylvania, were in 1860. Indeed the Minnesota farmer, in 1879, can transport his products to the wharfs at New York City as cheaply as could the farmer who in 1860 lived within ten miles of that city, but who was compelled to use the common wagon road. It cost the latter at least 8 cents per bushel, and the Minnesota farmer can ship from Duluth to New York at that rate.

Thus while the cost of transportation has been reduced to less than one-third of the rate in 1860, the tonnage has increased over 690 per cent.

These facts account, in great part, for the astonishing increase in our exportations of agricultural products, to which I have referred. They account, almost wholly, for the large exportations of corn which, as just stated, have increased 1,952 per cent. since 1860.

This wise system of internal improvements, adopted and carried on by republican administrations, together with other measures for the benefit of agriculture and commerce, have given us the control of foreign markets, which resulted last year in a balance of trade in our favor amounting to $257,815,234. The balance against us in 1860 was $20,040,062. To the same causes may also be attributed the unparalleled progress of the new States and Territories west of the Mississippi River.

Mr. President, this material and industrial progress, under republican rule, which I have tried to exhibit, will be better understood and appreciated by comparing the following summary of results with the increase in population:

Since 1860 the population of the United States has increased only about 50 per cent.

Within the same period, the official statistics I have quoted exhibit the following remarkable results:

	Per cent.
Increase in general agricultural exports	538
Increase in exports of bread and breadstuffs	644
Increase in exports of wheat and wheat flour	430
Increase in exports of corn and corn-meal	1,952
Increase in exports of provisions	643
Increase in exports of manufactured articles	218
Increase in production of pig-iron	180
Increase in production of railroad bars	330
Increase in revenues of the Post-Office Department	243
Increase in railway mileage	167
Increase in internal commerce	690

These statistics, embracing all the principal industries of the country, indicate that our material and industrial advance has been from three and one-half up, to thirty-nine times, greater than our increase in population.

They prove conclusively that our industrial and material progress, for the last eighteen years, is without a parallel in any period of our history.

It was in view of these astonishing results, achieved under republican rule, that Mr. Gladstone recently said:

> The huge figure, £1,000,000,000, which may be taken roundly as the annual income of the United Kingdom, has been reached at a surprising rate. * * * But while we have been advancing with this portentous rapidity America is passing us by in a canter.

These remarkable exponents of national progress, under republican rule, are submitted without comment. Words would only weaken their irresistible logic. The people will not fail to apply them.

Our democratic friends will do well to consider these facts in connection with their oft-repeated charge that the country is going to ruin from republican misrule and corruption. They will also do well to bear in mind the fact that this progress—by far the most marvelous in our national history—has been achieved under the most difficult and disadvantageous circumstances. Let them not forget that they surrendered to republican control a country rotton with treason and rent by civil war; a Treasury without funds, and a Government without credit; and that the flames of civil strife, kindled and fed by democratic hands, consumed a million of our bravest and noblest men, and many billions of property.

Let them ponder well this democratic legacy of treason, civil war, bankruptcy, and dishonor; and then remember the rescue of the Republic, the triumph of nationality, the magnificent financial success, and the marvelous industrial and material progress achieved under republicanism, and they will be able to contrast the fruits of republican rule as exhibited in 1879, and of democracy as shown in 1860.

Mr. President, these political, financial, and industrial contrasts embrace all I intended to say, but we have heard so much during this session about republican hatred and persecution of the "foreigner" that I am tempted to step aside from my original purpose, in order to briefly contrast the treatment which he has received at the hands of the two parties. Democracy has always been profuse in expressions of friendship for the "foreigner," especially at election time. Republicanism has been content to confer upon him substantial benefits and advantages, without trying to secure his vote by extravagant pretensions.

Review this record for a moment.

One of the very first acts of the republican party was to give to every "foreigner," who should declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States, one hundred and sixty acres of land under the homestead act. Your last democratic President vetoed the homestead bill, and thereby denied to the immigrant, as well as to our own citizens, a free home on the public lands.

Again, on the 29th of May, 1869, the republican party began another series of "persecutions" by concluding a treaty between the United States and the King of Sweden and Norway, in the interest and for the protection of foreign-born citizens, from which I quote:

> Citizens of Sweden and Norway who have resided in the United States of America for a continuous period of at least five years, and during such residence have become naturalized citizens of the United States, shall be held by the government of Sweden and Norway to be American citizens, and shall be treated as such.

Treaties in almost the same words, and of precisely the same import, were subsequently concluded with Great Britain and nearly every other nation represented in this country by naturalized citizens.

What had you done for the "foreigner," in this regard, during all the years of your power? You had accepted his oath of allegiance, but you had done nothing whatever to secure a recognition of his citizenship by his native country. You had placed him where he was liable to be drafted into our armies, and to perform all the other duties and obligations of citizenship; but never, until the republicans secured it, was that citizenship recognized by the government from which he came. Never, under any democratic administration, could the naturalized citizen return to his native land without subjecting himself to her claims of citizenship, including military service.

Another illustration as to how republicans "hate and persecute the foreigner" will be found in the revision of our postal treaties. In 1860 the single rate of letter postage to Great Britain and Ireland was twenty-four cents, to Prussia thirty cents, to Sweden thirty-four cents, and to Norway thirty-eight cents, and like rates to all other distant countries. By treaties negotiated under a republican administration all these rates have been reduced to five cents.

If the German, the Scandinavian, the Irishman, or other foreign-born citizen in this country wished to write to the Fatherland, democracy said he must pay from twenty-four to thirty-eight cents for each letter. Republicanism said he should pay only five cents for that privilege.

Thus the republican party has given a free home to every "foreigner" who will accept it under the homestead act.

It has reduced his postage to merely nominal cost, and thereby invited free communication with his friends in the old country.

It has vindicated the citizenship of the naturalized citizen, and thereby thrown about him the full protection of the American flag, wherever he may be.

What practical benefits has democracy conferred upon him? It consented to his oath of allegiance and made him a citizen, so far as obligation and duties were concerned, but it was left for republicanism to honor and dignify that citizenship by placing upon his naturalization papers the seal of perfect equality with the native-born American. By reason of this act of a republican administration, every naturalized citizen, who now revisits his native land, carries with him all the protection, dignity and honor which are enjoyed by the native American.

Mr. President, there are a great many more similar contrasts that I could make between democracy in 1860 and republicanism in 1879, but as I limited myself to half an hour, and I have now occupied forty minutes, I will desist.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I always listen with great pleasure to that speech of my friend from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] eulogistic of the republican party of which he is a distinguished member. On this occasion he has taken special pains to dilate in the hearing of the Senate upon the prosperity of this country, the increase of its agricultural productions, and the increased exportations of the agricultural products of the country, and he has spoken of the increased postal service of the country, he has spoken of the increased internal commerce of the country, and has gravely attempted to tell the people of this country that he thinks all this is the result of republican rule!

I must express my gratification to the Senator from Minnesota for the industry with which he has collected so much statistical information in reference to the increase of the agricultural products and of the agricultural exports of the country; but I must beg leave to dissent from the conclusions at which he arrives that this increase has been directly or remotely the result of republican rule in this land. Does he attribute nothing to the indomitable energy and industry of the people? Are they not to be credited for their industry and enterprise? Are the American people to be credited with nothing as the results of their own economy and toil? Must it all be credited to the policy of the republican party? Verily, I say to my friend from Minnesota that if he had not said that it was the result of republican rule in this land, there is not a man, woman, or child in all America that would have believed it. Of course we are bound to accept it now, because the Senator from Minnesota says that it is the result of republican rule.

Why, sir, the people of this country have been looking on another picture of republican rule in this land. They have remembered that the republicans came into power when this country was united in affection and interest; that they initiated a policy which resulted in civil war and filled the land with sadness and woe. I will not point to the thousands of untimely graves that are seen in every part of this land as the fruits of that policy, but I may point to the enormous debt which the republican party has entailed on the country, and the consequent burden it imposes and the depression of business resulting therefrom. While my friend talks of republican prosperity I might point him to the mortgages and incumbrances upon the private estates of individuals who would not appreciate the Senator's effort to magnify the prosperity of this country.

I am told that in some of the Western States, in that section of the country in which the gentleman lives and which he represents with such distinguished honor upon this floor, the estates of many of the farmers are covered to their full value with mortgages. Why? Because the policy which the republican party has pursued in inflating values and stimulating speculation beyond all propriety and encouraging excess in the expenditure of private means has brought disaster on private fortunes, as well as an enormous public debt upon the country.

Sir, there are some things perhaps that we might commend in the republican party, but there are very many things which the judgment of this country has and must condemn. The people have condemned nothing more decidedly and emphatically than the extravagant expenditures of the public money which have taken place under republican rule. I think I venture nothing in asserting that they have extorted from the people during their period of eighteen years' rule not less than five billion dollars by taxation, a large per cent. of which has been squandered recklessly and without regard to the public interest, and much of it has been bestowed in jobs as rewards to party favorites.

We had a resolution this morning asking for the privilege to inquire into the management of the collection and disbursement of the customs and internal revenues of this country. If such an inquiry had been made years ago, if official scrutiny had been instituted into the manner in which the public service has been performed in those departments, I have no doubt that an honest application of the revenues would have saved millions upon millions to the people of this country.

My friend from Minnesota blames the democracy for everything wrong, and praises his own party for many things, and now he comes in at last and claims to be the especial friend of the foreign-born citizens of the country. Why, sir, the foreign population of this country are not such fools that they are going to believe any such statements as that. Do they not remember the know-nothing times of the party of the gentleman from Minnesota? Do they not remember that that party not only wanted to deprive them of the privilege of voting on account of their being foreign-born citizens, but wanted to apply to them a religious test to disqualify them from voting because of their religious faith? And in a republican State to-day, ruled for years by republicans, the State of Rhode Island, I am told that there are over fifty thousand men born in other lands in that State to-day denied the privilege of voting which has been so generously conferred upon the negro population of the South. And yet, with such a record staring the Senator from Minnesota in the face, he gets up now and claims that he and his party are the especial friends and protectors of the rights of the foreign-born population of this country.

Mr. WINDOM. May I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir; I beg pardon; I want to comment on what the Senator has said. Why, sir, that Senator has assumed the guardianship and protection over a portion of the colored people of this country. It has not been a very great while since he introduced a resolution here in reference to the rights of the colored people, proposing to provide for their exodus from the South to the free Territories of this country. But perhaps that may be a delicate subject for the Senator at the present time. He has seen the effect of this proposition of his to remove the colored people from the South to the Territories, in their exodus to free Kansas. He has heard from the eloquence of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST,] the other day, who depicted in such glowing terms the wrongs that had been done to the poor negroes under the policy, if I may be permitted to say it, of the Senator from Minnesota; I call it his policy because he is the only Senator on this floor who introduced measures looking to the enticement of the negroes from their homes in the South.

My friend had better confine himself for the present, at least, to the wards of the nation and not assume too many offices of friendship to the foreign populations. He should devote the balance of his days in devotion to the colored population of the South that he has caused to leave their homes and go to free Kansas. He had better become the Moses to lead that people back again to the sunny climate of the South and not leave them in the frigid climate of Kansas where under his leadership they have been induced to go. A suggestion has been made that perhaps he had better take them over to Africa. We could not well dispense with the presence of the Senator from Minnesota so long as that; but if he would only take them back to the sunny plains of the South, where they were found when he introduced his resolution in the Senate which was the inception of the movement that led to that exodus of these people from their homes, he will have rendered a valuable service, not to the people of the South, but he will have rendered a valuable service to the deluded and misguided men that have been induced by his resolution, and by improper action for political purposes on the part of others, to leave their homes and go into a strange and uncongenial land.

The Senator was very careful not to speak of the wrongs that had been inflicted on this country by his own party. He has forgotten to tell us of the infractions of the Constitution by his party. Why, sir, where I ask is there a single amendment of the first twelve amendments of the Constitution that has not been ruthlessly and violently disregarded and violated by the republicans since they have been in power? Have they not violated that amendment which declares that no man shall be arrested without due process of law? Have they not trampled under foot almost every amendment of the Constitution of the twelve amendments specially designed to secure protection to the private rights of citizens? Have they not all been abrogated and set at defiance during the domination of the republican party?

Then, again, where was such a cloud ever brought upon the name of the American people as has been brought upon it by the corruptions of the party which have been revealed by investigations in the other House and in this Senate in the last few years? Our fair name has been tarnished by the corruptions that have existed in almost every department of the Government under republican rule. I remember, when I first came into the Senate, when the minority were protesting against your odious laws designed to be oppressive to the people of the South, we were laughed to scorn. Some of them have been set aside, declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. Even those very odious election laws against which the people of this country at this day are protesting with such vehemence were placed upon the statute-book by you; and now when the people demand through their representatives in both Houses of Congress an abrogation and repeal of those nefarious election laws by which you seek to control the elections of this country, we are antagonized by the republicans on the other side of the Senate and antagonized by the veto of the man that has been placed in the White House through the fraudulent action of returning boards. But let me say that the firm resolve of the American people has gone forth that those nefarious laws shall be wiped from the statute-book, and I stand here as a humble member of the democratic party and pledge the other side of the Senate Chamber that the edict and decree of the American people in that regard shall be registered and obeyed. You may interpose with your executive veto to defeat temporarily the will of the people, but their verdict shall be heard; even the dull, cold ears of the White House shall hear and obey the mandate of the people of this country.

I remember when I came into the Senate there were only eight democratic Senators in this body holding over. The republican party on the other side of the Chamber were reveling in luxury and riotous living; they were clothed in purple and fine linen, faring sumptuously on the spoils of power, and supposed that they were going to maintain their hold on place forever. But times have changed, and power has departed from the arrogant majority of that day because the honest judgment of the American people has decided that they had betrayed the trust which had been reposed in them. The people have heard the appeal from the democratic party throughout the country warning them against the tendencies to centralization in the republican party, warning them against the corruptions of that party, against the extravagance of that party, and they have listened to our appeals and have displaced from power in this Chamber and in the other House the men who had been recreant to their trust.

I am proud, sir, of the history of the democratic party which is arraigned by the Senator from Minnesota. I say to him that I am proud to look upon its every page. It came into power in resistance to the alien and sedition law, which attempted to restrict the liberties of the people of the country. The appeal against these laws was made by Jefferson and his compeers, and the people of this country pronounced their righteous verdict against the federal party, the progenitor of the republican party in this country; and in every page of our country's history the action of the democratic party commends itself to the intelligent people of the land.

We have sought by a strict construction of the Constitution to defeat that tendency to centralization which was first attempted by a latitudinarian construction of the Constitution, and, secondly, by open disregard of its provisions. There is no period in the history of the democratic party of which I am ashamed, and there is no period in its history of which I am more proud than that which has been presented in this Senate at the present extra session. What have we done? We have stood here manfully fighting for the liberties of the people at the polls. We have demanded that the people, according to their ancient usages and rights and according to the ancient laws of the land, should be allowed to go to the ballot-box and deposit their ballots without let or hinderance. We have used every effort in our power to accomplish that purpose. When we were met by a veto, and were unable to repeal the law absolutely, we sought to deprive you of the means of using the Army for political purposes, and said: "We will give you no money for the Army to be used at the polls. We will give you no money for the particular business. We will appropriate for the Army for all the legitimate purposes of the Army, but we will not give you money to spend in using your Army as a police at the polls." Sir, contrary to the expectation of every Senator on the other side of the House, contrary to the earnest protest of the republican members of the Senate, your President has yielded that much, and he has signed the bill which we have passed declaring that no part of the money shall be used for that purpose.

Now, in reference to your deputy marshals who are to go around and superintend the elections of the people, we say to you, you may interpose vetoes, but you will get no money to be appropriated to deputy marshals. We intend not to give the people's money away to pay agents to destroy the liberties of the American people.

Mr. President, I had not expected to say anything on this occasion; I had not expected to say a single word when I came to the Senate this morning; but after listening perhaps for the twentieth time to the eulogies of the Senator from Minnesota on the republican party, I could not restrain myself from replying thus impromptu to some of the assertions of the Senator in reference to and in glorification of his own party and in disparagement of the party to which I belong. The Senator no doubt feels comfortable because he has succeeded with the aid of his associates on the other side of the Senate Chamber in thwarting once again the will of the people in reference to the repeal of these obnoxious election laws; but at the same time perhaps that joy and that glorification is somewhat modified by the reflection that, contrary to his wishes, contrary to his protests, the President of the United States has signed a bill which if obeyed will acomplish the purpose at which we aimed, so far as the Army is concerned.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I do not take the floor for the purpose of occupying any considerable time, but only with intent to ask the Senator from Delaware two or three questions which he would not permit me to ask him while he was on his feet. If the Senator will do me the favor to inform me on two or three points I wish to suggest to him, I shall be greatly obliged to him.

He says the corruptions of the republican party have been a great disgrace to the country, and that—I have forgotten how many, but a great many million every year had been stolen. Three years ago I had the honor to ask the Senator from Delaware to name a single individual, a single republican official, whom the thirty-three democratic investigating committees had proven to have stolen one dollar from this Government. He failed to do so at that time; he has had three years to think it over; I repeat the question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I say if the Senator from Minnesota is so blind that he cannot see, cannot realize, and cannot find out and ascertain and know the various corruptions which have existed under republican administrations, then any effort of mine to enlighten his mind would be hopeless. There is none so blind as he who will not see.

Mr. WINDOM. Now, Mr. President, the democratic party have had control of the House of Representatives for four years; it had during one Congress thirty-three committees in the field investigating every conceivable thing; it had to back it all the money of the Treasury, for nobody withheld appropriations; it could summon witnesses from the ends of the earth to testify to republican corruption.

In view of all these facts and in view of the fact that the honorable Senator from Delaware has to-day again reiterated upon this floor, in his place, and as a Senator and upon his official responsibility, as I take it, that millions have been stolen by republican officials, I ask him if it is quite fair, if it is quite the thing to do, to refuse to name a single instance. I assert here that the Senator from Delaware declines to answer, because he cannot name one man whom these committees have proved to have stolen one dollar. And I state further that if the Senator from Delaware can be induced by any possibility to venture upon the effort to name one man, I will show to him that his democratic committees have squandered more than a thousand dollars for every dollar they have proved to have been stolen by any republican official. I make that challenge in my place. I challenge the Senator from Delaware to answer if he can. If he cannot; if he insists upon keeping his seat without attempting a reply, I insist that the country will answer that the Senator from Delaware has been drawing upon his imagination, and that he cannot answer.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. WINDOM. I will allow any Senator on that side of the House who can try it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to the Senator that I have stated here more than once, and the Department has tried to answer, that there are many millions unaccounted for. I hold in my hand a statement of the public debt which shows alterations; and I only speak now of what has occurred heretofore in the Senate. There is a committee now investigating the Treasury accounts that will in the course of time make a report. That I do not intend to refer to at present, for the reason that the committee has agreed to keep confidential all its doings until a report shall be made. I wish I were at liberty to state at this time what has occurred and what has been proven by Treasury officials. That is out of the question, however.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the Senator from West Virginia may have permission to state any thieving that he knows of or has proved in two years' investigation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator knows too well that nobody can give unanimous consent to a revelation of the proceedings of a committee. He knows that, and he ought not to propound to me or to the Senate a question of that kind. He knows too much of the duties of committees for that.

Mr. WINDOM. I know that unanimous consent can do anything.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no; the Senate cannot do everything by unanimous consent.

Mr. WINDOM. It can authorize its committees to do anything.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No, it cannot do any such thing, and the Senator well knows it. I have stated that there was a resolution of the Committee on Treasury Accounts to keep confidential all their proceedings. I have endeavored to do so, and I mean to do so. The Senator knows that the Senate cannot in this informal way authorize any such thing.

Mr. WINDOM. Before the Senator leaves that point, let me ask my good friend if it is quite fair to insinuate what he is not at liberty to state?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir; it is quite fair, under all the circumstances.

Mr. WINDOM. That certainly is a new rule—one I never heard before.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator gets up in his place and challenges every Senator on this side to point out one cent that had been stolen—I will not say stolen, and I will not name any individual. I might talk about your Belknaps and your Babcocks and your other officers. I might talk about your whisky rings and the persons who were sent to the penitentiary and who were pardoned out by the President, but I do not wish to go into individual cases.

Mr. WINDOM. Right at that point, before the Senator leaves it, will he not let me say that not one of those men he has named, if they were guilty of anything, was discovered by those thirty-three democratic investigating committees. I challenge any Senator, on that side, to name to me one man whom those thirty-three committees proved guilty of stealing one cent from the Government.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator cannot hide himself behind certain committees. I thought he wished to be informed of fraud from any source.

Mr. WINDOM. If the persons of whom the Senator speaks have been guilty of wrongs, those wrongs were discovered by republican committees and they were brought to justice by republicans, and not one of them by any democratic committee that has been investigating all these questions for four years.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But the Senator will admit that there were wrongs committed, that the perpetrators were sent to the penitentiary, and that even a Cabinet officer was impeached and tried here for what?

Mr. WINDOM. He did not steal a penny from the Government.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Whom did he steal it from?

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know that he stole it from anybody, but he did not from the Government; and if he did, the thirty-three democratic investigating committees that have spent a quarter of a million dollars did not discover it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like the Senator to state the fact whom he did steal from, if he did not steal from the Government. The Senator says he did not steal from the Government, which is as much as to say that he stole from somebody.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator does not bring in that case, then, for he said he did not know that this man stole anything.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let me give my friend the benefit of a statement that has heretofore been made in the Senate. I want to refer to it now. I have a statement of the public debt which shows in the single year, 1869, $94,000,000 difference between the statement sent to the Senate and to the House, the official statement sent there, and the official statement published to the country, and what are the real facts. In other words, in a year after that it was changed and the debt increased $94,000,000 for a single year.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 114) donating granite blocks to Mower Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Orleans, Louisiana; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 1856) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to extend the area for the taking up and impounding of domestic animals in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2274) concerning the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories of the United States.

SPECIAL IMPROVEMENT ASSESSMENTS.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from West Virginia will yield to me a moment to make a report from a committee of conference, I should like to make a report and ask concurrence in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House agree to the first amendment of the Senate, in line 3, page 1, striking out the word "they," and to amendment 4, on page 2, striking out all after "assessments," in line 4, down to and including "obligation," in line 6.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2, striking out section 2, and from its amendment numbered 3, changing section 3 to section 2, and from its amendment numbered 5, changing section 4 to section 3, and agree thereto.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
WM. PINKNEY WHYTE,
E. H. ROLLINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

EPPA HUNTON,
HENRY S. NEAL,
GILBERT DE LA MATYR,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to concur in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. WINDOM. What is it? I did not hear the report.

Mr. HARRIS. It is on a bill reducing the rate of interest upon past-due taxes in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection if it does not lead to debate, but I have yielded to the Senator from West Virginia to answer a question, and I want to get the answer before we leave the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 24th instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 625) for the relief of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank, Paris, Texas.

PARIS MONETARY CONFERENCE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith to the Senate a report from the Secretary of State in response to a resolution of that body of the 20th instant, calling for the proceedings and accompanying papers of the international silver conference, held in Paris in 1878.

R. B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, June 23, 1879.

To the President:

The Secretary of State, to whom was addressed a resolution of the Senate of the 20th instant, directing him to communicate to that body "a copy of the proceedings and accompanying papers of the international silver conference, held in Paris in 1878," has the honor to report that the papers in question were submitted by him to the President, who in turn communicated them to the Senate, on the 6th of February last, and that by a resolution of that body of the same day they were ordered to be printed, as appears from the RECORD.

Respectfully submitted,

WM. M. EVARTS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 23, 1879.

The message was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR VARIOUS PURPOSES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. WINDOM. Before the Senator from West Virginia goes on I want to direct his attention to one or two points. I said I challenged any Senator on the other side to name a single republican official whom the thirty-odd democratic committees had proved guilty of stealing anything from the Government. The Senator from West Virginia now brings in his Treasury matter, of which we have heard so often, and intimates that there is something wrong there. He has intimated that a great many times during the last few years. I want the Senator when he takes the floor to state how long his committee has been investigating the Treasury, during how many recesses of Congress, how many clerks it has had, and when it probably will be ready to report. Before the Senator takes his seat, if he will answer the question upon unanimous consent being given, I will ask unanimous consent that he be authorized to state the name of any individual whom he has found to have stolen any money from the Government in all his investigation. Now, I would be glad to hear the Senator on those points.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Minnesota has referred to unanimous consent. That I dismiss, because he knows as well as I do that that cannot be explained to the Senate. He knew that before he asked the question. I know enough of that Senator to know that he understands better than that the working of a committee of investigation conducted as that committee is.

Mr. WINDOM. Then I understand the Senator is the only one who objects to unanimous consent on that subject?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly the Senator's own honor would prevent it. What belongs to the committee is there, it belongs there, and it will stay there, so far as the Senate is concerned, until the committee is prepared to make its report.

Mr. WINDOM. Ought it not, then, to stay there by way of intimation as well as by direct statement?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We will give the Senator all he wants, and it will be a little more than intimation.

Mr. WINDOM. About when shall we get it?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Just wait your time; you will get it in time enough for yourself. Wait your time, my friend.

The Senator has asked how long the Committee on Treasury Accounts has been at work. I will tell that Senator. This is the second session in which they are at work; one session has passed. He asked how many clerks it has. It has two clerks. What are the duties of that committee? The duties of that committee are to examine sixteen years' work of probably five thousand clerks; I do not recollect the exact number, but I think it is the work of about five thousand clerks in the Treasury Department. This committee has two clerks to examine and go over the work of those five thousand, if that is the proper number; I do not recollect the exact number, but I estimate that that is about the number; I have some idea that that is about the number. They are going over it, and they are going over it pretty rapidly. There has been testimony taken, and I will state here in my place as a Senator, and I will state it publicly, and state it to the Senator from Minnesota especially, that I have never uttered a single charge of alterations, discrepancies, or changes of the books that will not be borne out clear and clean, and more too. I do not state this as coming from the committee; I state it upon my own responsibility, which was an exception from the rule. We were to keep confidential the proceedings of the committee, but that was an exception; and I state that here now, and I have stated heretofore, that every single sentence and every figure, including the one that the debt of the Government had been largely increased, and in a single year nearly $100,000,000, will be and is true.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. WINDOM. Does the Senator mean to say that a hundred million dollars——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will listen to my former colleague on the committee, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. WINDOM. I have the floor.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator from Minnesota has the floor, let him take it.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to ask the Senator from West Virginia a question, inasmuch as he has been stating the findings of the committee.

Mr. WINDOM. Very well, ask the question.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from West Virginia to state that there has been a single particle of testimony taken by the committee of which he is a member and the chairman showing the slightest discrepancy in the statements with reference to the public debt? If so, that testimony has been taken since I ceased to be a member of the committee, because until the 4th of March last there was not a scintilla of evidence, so far as I could see, that in the slightest degree affected the statements with reference to the public debt. Of course there were two different methods of stating that debt, but nothing more.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should hardly be justified in replying to my former colleague upon the committee as to what testimony has been taken by the committee. I should be glad if I could do so under the circumstances.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator makes a statement here that his charges or statements heretofore made with reference to the public debt will be borne out. Now, if they are to be borne out, it cannot be by reason of any testimony that has been taken thus far.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. How does the Senator know? He has not been a member of the committee at this Congress. How does he know?

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly; I would be glad to hear the Senator from Kansas, who is a member of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. The observation the Senator from West Virginia has just made in regard to the Senator from Iowa does not at least apply to me, for I have been a member of that committee since it was organized, and am a member to-day. It has been understood that this subject was not to be referred to until the committee had completed their examination and was ready to report; and it appears to me, with all justice to the Senator, that he is acting a very disingenuous part, after his allegations have been referred to a committee with instructions to examine and report, and they have been at work for several years and have been unable to complete their labors, for him to come into the Senate now and repeat the allegations upon which that committee was created and say that the testimony will substantiate every single allegation that he has made.

Mr. President, that is an injurious assertion. It is a statement that in my opinion the Senator ought not to have made. Inasmuch as he is the chairman and organ of that committee, and has repeated that assertion, I feel myself as a member of the committee authorized to say that the testimony taken up to this time utterly fails to substantiate a single allegation that he has made. It absolutely fails to substantiate one of the allegations. On the contrary, the testimony that has been taken shows that every discrepancy that exists is one that has arisen in consequence of a change in the method of stating the accounts upon the books of the Treasury, and not in consequence of any malappropriation of public funds or misconduct on the part of any public officer. It is, as I said, simply a question of book-keeping. It is a question that has arisen in consequence of the transferring of running balances from year to year. If the Senator desires to have it understood, even by inference, even by insinuation, that there has been any proof taken that inculpates any officer of the Treasury, that inculpates any clerk of the Treasury, that inculpates any republican official in malappropriation of the public funds, I venture to say that his statement is not borne out by the testimony taken by that committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator, who is a member of the committee and has been a member of the committee, has made some statements relating to the testimony taken by the committee, to which I will not refer. Whether other Senators do so or not, I intend not to refer to the testimony the committee has taken. There is a wide difference between what the Senator says and what I know to be the fact. When it was understood in the committee that the testimony before the committee was to be confidential, it was expressly understood that what had already taken place in the Senate was public property and could be referred to. In that the minutes of the committee will bear me out. But it is not worth while to go any further with that. The Senator says that there has been no testimony taken which will show the facts that I have stated in the Senate, that the public debt has been largely increased.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator refer to me? I made no such statement.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am glad the Senator did not. I understood the Senator to say that there had been no testimony taken to show the facts I stated.

Mr. INGALLS. I said the charges the Senator had made in regard to malappropriation of public funds, increase of the public debt, or the misconduct of any official of the Treasury.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have always avoided making a charge against any individual in the Treasury, and I have not done so. Senators who have heard the charges will bear me out that I have in no instance done that, but I have avoided it always. I do not intend to do so now, nor do I intend to do so until the report comes, unless under different circumstances.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator ought to allow me to go a little further, and then I will hear him with pleasure. As to the action of the committee as far as testimony has been taken, that, as I said, belongs to the committee, and I shall not refer to what the facts are; but as to the statements I have heretofore made in the Senate and the reply of the Treasury Department, which have been printed and belong to the Senate, and were printed for the public, I state now that in no single instance to my knowledge did I misstate a single figure. Neither of the Senators on the other side can say that I misquoted or misstated a figure in the Senate while making statements heretofore. Neither of the Senators can say that what I have heretofore stated as to a large increase, an apparent increase, in the public debt is not the fact. It is the fact, and they well know it. Now I will listen to my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. CARPENTER. I understand the Senator to-day to say that there are some very serious charges that he has heretofore made in the Senate which will be sustained, are sustained, by testimony taken.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not charges; I said changes, alterations, &c., of the finance reports and books.

Mr. CARPENTER. Did the Senator mean by that to say it was anything more than a mere question of bookkeeping, or whether there was any dishonesty in it?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That will be a question when the report comes in. It will show for itself.

Mr. CARPENTER. I submit the Senator ought not to arouse our curiosity here and then turn around and refuse us the information he says he has got. I understood him to say—I think the Senate so understood him—that various charges that had been made would be sustained.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Changes, not charges.

Mr. CARPENTER. And the insinuation was that the republicans were going to be troubled with the testimony when it came. I am not a member of that committee, and was not in the Senate when the Senator made his charges, or his changes; and I therefore ask for information what are the charges of changes, or the changes of charges, that are to overwhelm us when this report comes?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator will wait until the report of the committee comes in, he will probably find out.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is too long to wait. Life is short, and I may die, and not know at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will have to wait.

Mr. CARPENTER. I will ask the Senator in that connection why he does not wait until the report comes in? If he states that the report of this committee is upon his side, let us know what these bomb-shells are that are expected to explode in vacation, or some time. We want to get our nerves steadied; we want to prepare ourselves.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator ought to get them prepared, for he will hear something that he has not heard before. I hope he will content himself until the report comes. Now I will listen to my friend from Minnesota.

Mr. WINDOM. The question when the honorable Senator took the floor, when I yielded the floor to him, was what republican official the thirty-odd democratic investigating committees had proved to have stolen money from the Government. The Senator takes the floor and reiterates some of his old charges as to changes in the accounts of the Treasury Department, and he is even so very particular now not to allege that there is any corruption about it that he insists that he said "changes" not "charges." He also insists that he has not heretofore and has not now named any person as having been guilty of corruption in connection with them. The very challenge which I made was that he should name some person, and he took the floor for that purpose. I submit to the Senator that he has utterly failed to do it, as utterly as the Senator from Delaware. The Senator from Delaware has been very busy with the help of his friends, since I called on him before, in hunting up something. I hope he may be able to enlighten me now.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will state to the Senator from Minnesota that I shall not be betrayed into a repetition before the Senate of individual names. I could give the Senator names of individuals, if I saw proper to do so, who have defrauded the Government; but I do not desire to specify individual names in the discussion. I do not desire when a man has been disgraced and has fallen under the ban of public opinion to be constantly dragging him into the debates of the Senate of the United States. But I will refer the Senator to subjects. I will give him some subjects that he may ponder well upon and examine them himself to ascertain whether there has been any defalcation or any mismanagement and loss to the Government.

Mr. WINDOM. Thank you; I shall be glad to have them.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I refer to defalcations and peculations committed by those who were intrusted by the republican party with public affairs. The Senator remembers the San Domingo job. I commend a re-examination of that subject to his consideration, and suggest to him that he may possibly find in that some evidence of the manner in which the public money has been squandered by his political associates. I will commend to him the Sanborn frauds, and ask if there was nothing revealed by the investigations of the committee to the prejudice of republican officials in connection with that subject. I will refer him to the whisky rings and ask him if there is nothing in connection with that subject prejudicial to his party.

Mr. WINDOM. What was the last subject that the Senator mentioned?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The whisky rings in Saint Louis, Chicago, and other points. I will give the Senator subjects and not refer to individual names. It has been said that a Secretary of the Treasury, acknowledged to be an honest, faithful, public servant, was dismissed the public service for the energy and devotion with which he prosecuted those claims to protect the Government against the wrongs and robberies that were committed by these whisky rings.

There is one matter of such public notoriety that I must refer to it. I presume that I will not do injustice to an individual, although I dislike to refer to names, because it was a matter so widely known, and the trial of the person alluded to took place right in this Senate, that I may be allowed to speak in reference to one who was ably defended by the Senator from Wisconsin now before me; and yet without mentioning his name, I suppose a simple reference to the occasion will call to mind a man who was a Cabinet officer, and who escaped conviction on impeachment because he resigned his position in the Cabinet, and whose resignation, in the judgment of a great many, should not have been accepted while he was liable to impeachment, but who should have been suspended until his trial had been had.

But I desire now, in connection with the case of this Cabinet officer who had resigned to escape impeachment, to call attention to what was said by a Senator upon this floor upon the occasion of that impeachment, the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] in connection with this very subject. He is a gentleman who is not wanting, as a general rule, in fidelity to his party, who generally takes up the cudgel and comes to the rescue of his party when he finds that it is pressed on any point. The Senator from Massachusetts said in his speech on the Belknap case:

> My own public life has been a very brief and insignificant one, extending little beyond the duration of a single term of senatorial office; but in that brief period I have seen five judges of a high court of the United States driven from office by threats of impeachment for corruption or maladministration. I have heard the taunt, from friendliest lips, that when the United States presented herself in the East to take part with the civilized world in generous competition in the arts of life, the only product of her institutions in which she surpassed all others beyond question was her corruption.

This is republican authority.

> I have seen in the State in the Union foremost in power and wealth four judges of her courts impeached for corruption, and the political administration of her chief city become a disgrace and a by-word throughout the world. I have seen the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House, now a distinguished member of this court, rise in his place and demand the expulsion of four of his associates for making sale of their official privilege of selecting the youths to be educated at our great military school. When the greatest railroad of the world, binding together the continent and uniting the two great seas which wash our shores, was finished, I have seen our national triumph and exaltation turned to bitterness and shame by the unanimous reports of three committees of Congress—two of the House and one here—that every step of that mighty enterprise had been taken in fraud. I have heard in highest places the shameless doctrine avowed by men grown old in public office that the true way by which power should be gained in the Republic is to bribe the people with the offices created for their service, and the true end for which it should be used when gained is the promotion of selfish ambition and the gratification of personal revenge. I have heard that suspicion haunts the footsteps of the trusted companions of the President.
>
> These things have passed into history. The Hallam or the Tacitus or the Sismondi or the Macaulay who writes the annals of our time will record them with his inexorable pen. And now, when a high Cabinet officer, the constitutional advisor of the Executive, flees from office before charges of corruption, shall the historian add that the Senate treated the demand of the people for its judgment of condemnation as a farce and laid down its high functions before the sophistries and jeers of the criminal lawyer? Shall he speculate about the petty political calculations as to the effect on one party or the other which induced his judges to connive at the escape of the great public criminal? Or, on the other hand, shall he close the chapter by narrating how these things were detected, reformed, and punished by constitutional processes which the wisdom of our fathers devised for us, and the virtue and purity of the people found their vindication in the justice of the Senate?

I should think the Senator from Minnesota, when charges of corruption are made against his party, after that authority, coming from his own side of the Chamber, has been read in his hearing, would not insist upon specifications, upon the giving of particular names.

But the Senator from Minnesota perhaps may remember something in connection with the Freedman's Bank. Who had the control of that matter? Who was it that originated that institution, and who were its trusty agents? Was it not the child of the republican party, and watched by its fostering care? Yet it is a matter of public notoriety that even the poor negroes out of the petty earnings which they deposited in that institution have been defrauded, robbed, not by the democrats, but by republicans intrusted with its management. Perhaps the Senator from Minnesota may have some explanation, but I cannot conceive what explanation he can give or what apology he can make for the wrong which was perpetrated upon the wards of the nation of whom he has become of late the champion and the leader.

I referred to the Freedman's Bank. I will now call attention to the Navy and to the management of the funds appropriated to the Navy. I have said before upon the floor of the Senate that during the administration of President Grant from $175,000,000 to $200,000,000 were appropriated to the Navy. What has become of that money? I propound that question to the Senator from Minnesota to answer after I am through. What has become of the large appropriations to the Navy of the country? We had in 1860 a respectable Navy, one that could cope with the naval power of most of the nations of the earth, yet after having spent during the administration of President Lincoln nearly $400,000,000 upon the Navy, and afterward made appropriations averaging about $20,000,000 annually during the whole term of President Grant, aggregating during his administration from $175,000,000 to $200,000,000.

Yet our Navy is a reproach to this great country, not in the character of its officers, not in the character of its men, for there are as brave men to-day who tread our rotten hulks as ever trod the decks of an American Navy; I have no fault to find with the men of the Navy, with the brave men and officers of the Navy, but with the management of the Navy Department of this Government and with the squandering and wasting of public money whereby these brave men have been deprived of that class of vessels which would enable them to meet any foreign power on the high seas on equal terms. With our present Navy, a third-class power is our superior; and this is the result of waste in the money appropriated to that arm of the service.

Can the Senator account for that large expenditure of public money upon any other ground than that it was wasted in jobs, that it was given to party favorites? Does he not know that investigations of the two Houses of Congress have revealed the fact that large amounts of money were expended in placing men at the navy-yards just before the elections with a view of controlling their votes? Does he not know that large amounts of money were given in contracts to special favorites? Do not these investigations reveal the fact that one Mr. Grant, a brother of the late President himself, was given a contract to furnish materials to the Navy, a contract for knees for vessels, which he purchased for $9 each and he turned them over to the Government for $27 or $28 apiece?

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is shown by the reports of the committee that investigated that subject, and it is contained in the reports of the committee of the other House. The Senator is oblivious to everything that makes against his party, and he rises in his place and calls for particular names. We point him to stubborn facts, and he turns from them, or is oblivious to the facts that are revealed in these investigations, and seeks to draw gentlemen into a controversy about the names of particular individuals.

Perhaps it may be an unpleasant reminder, but as the Senator from Minnesota wants information I will remind him of the Credit Mobilier. Has he forgotten that? Did not that reveal corruption in high places? Did it not disgrace the American name? Yet the Senator affects to know nothing about the corruption that has existed in his party in the last eighteen years. I call upon him as an honest man to acknowledge the wrongs that his party has done, and join with the democrats in seeking to correct and prevent abuses of this kind in the future.

But the Senator has sought for years to parry the force and effect of these investigations, as I shall have occasion hereafter to show, and now he rises and before the whole American people affects to be utterly ignorant of the corruptions and stealings and wrongs that have been done by his party. I give his party credit for the good they have done, but I stand in my place and assert that they are not the immaculate party which the Senator from Minnesota would attempt to make the people of this country believe.

Sir, even the graves of the poor soldiers that we honor cannot be marked with a head-stone or a foot-stone but that some republican must make money out of the job. The investigations upon that subject have revealed even jobs and stealing connected with the grave-stones that mark the resting-places of the poor soldiers who died in battle.

Yet with such a record the Senator from Minnesota, I will not say with unbecoming audacity, but I will say with an affected ignorance upon these subjects which he does not possess, rises here and attempts to make the Senate and the country believe that his party is pure and stainless and free from all charges of corruption and peculation. But this is not a new business of the Senator in attempting to whitewash and to defend his party against these accusations of corruption and wrong. The Senator made a speech in August, 1876, in which he says that the losses to the Government by defalcation, &c., during the whole republican régime had been but $1,276,882.60. His speech is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 12, 1876. But an inquiry was made at the Treasury Department in reference to this very thing, and I now propose to show what that report from Secretary Bristow reveals. I suppose coming from a republican Secretary of the Treasury the Senator will not question its accuracy and truth, though it may contrast very strongly with his own statements in that regard.

That report shows that there were balances due from postmasters indebted to the Government at that time, $373,371.74; balances due from ex-United States marshals on account of expenses of courts from 1869 to June 19, 1876, $249,260.01; balances due from officers of the courts on account of official emoluments from 1869 to June 19, 1876, $58,067.83; defalcation of H. B. Swoope, $20,000; balances due the United States from governors and secretaries of Territories, $10,788.22; balances due from sundry public officers, &c., out of service from 1869 to June 19, 1876, $265,713.12; balances due the United States from late assessors of internal revenue, $1,469.50. I will ask the permission of the Senate, without reading all these items, to put them into my speech, giving the aggregate as shown by the report of Secretary Bristow of $5,500,595.93, a very different estimate and figure from that which the Senator from Minnesota in his speech of August 12, 1876, made and published to the world.

The recapitulation is as follows:

Balances due from postmasters indebted to the United States whose accounts have terminated since 1869 up to June 19, 1876	$373,371 74
Balances due from ex-United States marshals on account of expenses of courts, from 1869 to June 19, 1876	249,260 01
Balances due from officers of courts on account of official emoluments, from 1869 to June 19, 1876	58,067 83
Defalcation of H. B. Swoope	20,000 00
Balances due the United States from governors and secretaries of Territories	10,788 22
Balances due from sundry public officers, &c., out of service, from 1869 to June 19, 1876	265,713 12
Balances due the United States from late assessors of internal revenue	1,469 50
Balances due from ex-collectors of internal revenue on their accounts as disbursing agents, from 1869 to June 19, 1876	33,518 10
Balances due the United States from late stamp agents, from 1869 to June 19, 1876	69,306 94
Balances due the United States from diplomatic and consular officers, from 1869 to June, 1876	41,333 09
Balances due from United States bankers (C. H. & Co)	130,178 84
Balances due the United States on account of Indian service by officers out of service from 1869 to June, 1876	38,872 04
Balances due the United States from pension agents out of service from 1869 to June, 1876	228,824 80
Balances due the United States from ex-collectors of internal revenue appointed by President Grant from 1869 to June, 1876	2,312,544 20
Balances due the United States by ex-officers of the customs, since 1869	73,752 67
Balances due the United States from receivers of public money, disbursing agents, surveyors, general registers of land offices, &c., from 1869 to 1876	103,636 65

Balances due the Government by ex-commissioners of direct taxes for the insurrectionary States of Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Texas, and Virginia, from 1864 to 1867	$82,665 21
Balances due from ex-officers of the United States Navy and others on the books of the Fourth Auditor, from the year 1869 to June, 1876	623,208 79
Balances due from Army officers out of service, from the year 1869 to June, 1876	784,553 07
Total	5,500,595 93

The Senator from Minnesota cannot escape another fact of which I must remind him. He remembers that we have been apropriating here for the Department of Justice. He remembers that in 1876 his own party employed over $200,000 of that money for deputy marshals to aid the republican party.

Mr. ALLISON. When was that?

Mr. SAULSBURY. In 1876.

Mr. ALLISON. Over $200,000?

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is my information.

Mr. ALLISON. Toward deputy marshals?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Election officers.

Mr. ALLISON. Toward deputy marshals?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not say they were all deputy marshals, but the machinery by which the republican party, the Senator's own party, sought to control the election, and to defeat the will of the people. It was part of that machinery which resulted in defeating the will of the people of this country for their President and in installing in the White House a gentleman who has never received the approval of the people of this country by their votes. It was a part of that very machinery which enabled the Senator and his party to commit a great fraud upon the American people by defeating their will and installing in the executive office a man who never was elected by the votes of the people of this country, but who on the contrary was a minority candidate by more than a quarter million votes of the freemen of this land.

Then in 1878 they used large sums of money (I do not remember the precise amount used in 1878) for the same purpose—the employment of deputy marshals to control elections and to perpetuate the republicans in power. Let me say that in the judgment of the people of this country it is for the purpose of accomplishing the same improper object by the same improper means that the republican Senators upon the other side of this floor have resisted so strenuously the efforts of the democracy of the country and of democratic Senators to wipe from the statute-book the nefarious laws by which it is possible to do such great wrong and commit such frauds upon the American people.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to suggest that if the Senator is still hunting for the names——

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WINDOM. I do not ask the Senator to yield; I have the floor.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator will have the floor when I am through, and can make his own comments.

Mr. WINDOM. I have the floor. I yielded to the Senator for him to answer my question; and I want to say if he is still searching for the names of individuals I will yield further.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have not understood myself as trespassing at all on the time of the Senator, for I should not have done so. He took his seat and I rose to reply.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator has been answering my question. I asked him to answer it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I beg pardon; the Senator cannot take me off the floor in that kind of style. I will yield the floor in a very few minutes.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not ask the Senator to yield; I insist that I have the floor; but I want the Senator to answer my question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Which Senator yields to the other?

Mr. WINDOM. I yield to the Senator to answer my question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I beg the Senator's pardon; I do not accept his courtesy. I am entitled to the floor because the Senator had abandoned it.

Mr. WINDOM. I had not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have not been speaking in the Senator's time. I certainly will extend all proper courtesy to the Senator, but I observe that he is very reluctant at times to have questions put to himself.

Mr. WINDOM. I would not have reminded the Senator of the fact that he was speaking in my time, if he had answered my question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say that as I belong to the dominant party in the Chamber perhaps it is becoming in me to extend courtesy to the other side. If the Senator claims that he had the floor I will yield without further comment and let him go on.

Mr. WINDOM. I thank the Senator; but I do not wish to take the Senator off the floor if he will answer my question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will let the Senator make his comments on my speech when I am through.

Mr. WINDOM. I shall yield to the Senator for a while longer, to see if he will answer my question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I simply wanted to remind the Senator of some things he seemed to forget. That was all.

In the course of the debate on the measures we have proposed for getting clear of the obnoxious laws which deprive the people of the right to free elections, I have noticed that republican Senators do not seem to comprehend the high purpose which actuates the democracy. They say we have a small Army and therefore there is no danger of interference with elections by the Army.

It has been said also that there were very few points at which deputy marshals could be employed. They seem to measure the character of these laws by the use that is made of them. Why, sir, the democracy of this land rise to a higher view of that question. Suppose your Army is west of the Rocky Mountains, suppose your deputy marshals should not interfere at the next election, that does not meet our view of the case. We say to you that we want the statute-book purged from laws that make it possible to deprive the people of this land of their liberty, which make it possible for an Army under President Hayes, or "the man on horseback" if he should come back into power, to interfere with the rights of the people. Our fathers went to war upon a sentiment, it has been said, but it was a sentiment of liberty and right. They did not and would not consent that any claim should be recognized made on the part of the British government that would deprive them of their just rights. So the democratic party, even if we knew that your Army would not be used at the polls at the next election, or at any other election, if we knew that your deputy marshals would not interfere with the proper exercise of the elective franchise in any city of this land, would insist on a repeal of these laws, because they are a standing menace to the liberty of the people of this country, and we propose to wipe them out; and hence our efforts at this session. It is because your laws are an offense, a stench in the nostrils of the American people, and because you have in the past and still propose to exercise, through the Army and deputy marshals, the right to deprive freemen of their just rights, that we protest against them. And, sir, we intend to hold your party responsible for the continuance of these laws. We call on our republican friends to avow their purpose honestly, and to put it in the platform of their party, that the people of this country are to be controlled by bayonets, and to be controlled by marshals appointed by Federal power, so far as they can secure that result.

We on our side intend to insert in our platforms and adopt as our creed equal and just rights to all persons to vote according to the dictates of their own judgment, without let or hinderance from Federal power. We want no files of soldiers to come to the ballot-box, and we want no overseers or deputy marshals to question the right of the freemen of this land to vote, and arresting and incarcerating them because they see proper to exercise their rights. If the Senator from Minnesota had the test applied to his own locality, if his neighbors should come up to vote, he would feel indignant to see one of these deputy marshals arrest his neighbor and carry him off and lodge him in some dungeon until election day was passed. If some young man, the son of his friend, just come to manhood, inspired with the feeling which animates all young men to take part in public affairs, some young man of promise in his community, should be arrested by some scalawag that had been appointed a deputy marshal, and incarcerated, and deprived of the privilege of casting his vote as a freeman, the indignation of the Senator would be aroused.

The Senator would not be willing to see it applied to his own immediate constituents, but he stands up here and insists upon a law which makes it possible to do it in other communities; and when the record is produced and when John Davenport and his nefarious acts are brought to his attention, he becomes the defender and excuser of such practices in New York and elsewhere.

Sir, for one, and I think I speak for all democrats, I want every man that the law has clothed with the right to cast a ballot, to do it unhindered by anybody; and I am therefore in favor of repealing every Federal statute that makes it possible through Federal power to interfere with the people in the exercise of their right to cast their votes as they please, unawed and unintimidated by Federal bayonets and without the supervision of Federal officials or interference of deputy marshals.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I will occupy only three or four minutes in reply to the Senator from Delaware, and I will call the attention of the Senator again to the question which I asked him and asked every other Senator on that side, namely, to point out one individual whom all their investigating committees, thirty-odd in number, at a cost of a quarter to half a million dollars, had proven to have stolen any money from the Government. The Senator from Delaware has tried it; the Senator from West Virginia has made his effort. The Senator from Delaware has been advised by his friends who have given him their assistance on the subject, and the result is that up to this time not one man has been named as having been discovered by these thirty-three committees, unless it be that the Senator named Orville Grant, I believe, who sold some ship-knees for more than he paid for them. Whether that was a fraud or not, he has not informed the Senate. We all remember distinctly the investigations, which extended during three or four months, into the Navy Department, and that everybody regarded them as a dead failure; and that Secretary of the Navy is to-day a member of the House of Representatives, and not one of the men who followed him and hounded him for months would dare mention that question in his presence to-day. That is the only man who has been named.

The Senator from Delaware attempts to hedge behind his disinclination to name individuals. Why, Mr. President, if these parties have been proven guilty of fraud, if they have stolen money from the Government, who would hesitate to name them? The Senator from Delaware does not hesitate to name one gentleman, and names him as the brother of an ex-President of the United States. If he is so free to name that gentleman, he would be equally free to name others if he or his friends on that side could give him one name which he could utter in answer to my question. I say then that all the money expended by these thirty-odd committees has been thrown away in an effort to prove corruption, that they have utterly failed to prove it, and if the Senator from Alabama, whom I see rising, has a man, I will yield to him to give his name.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought I could refresh the memory of the Senator from Minnesota with one name, Secretary Belknap.

Mr. WINDOM. Ah, Mr. President, these committees did not discover that Mr. Belknap had stolen one dollar from this Government, and I challenge the Senator to say that he did. I say nobody has ever charged that the Government lost a dollar by Mr. Belknap.

Mr. MORGAN. The Government did not! I understand he made some money by the sale of offices.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know; it was not proven; the Senate did not convict him; but if he did that, I want the Senator to stick to the text and remember the question; it was not even alleged that the Government lost one cent by Belknap.

Mr. MORGAN. No; but he made a good deal.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senators on the other side are loud in their charges of corruption and of what wonderful things the democratic party has accomplished by the expenditure of two or three hundred thousand dollars in these investigations. The point I have made here to-day, which thus far no Senator on the other side has met or attempted to meet, is that with all your expenditure in four years of searching, with thirty-three committees armed with all the powers Congress could give them, backed by all the money in the Treasury, you have not by those committees proved that one republican official stole one dollar from this Government, and all the efforts to show it to-day have utterly failed.

The Senator from Delaware has named a number of things; he has spoken of "the San Domingo job," of "the Sanborn frauds." None of these were discovered by your investigating committees, whatever they may have been. I am not here to admit that there was anything wrong in them; but your committees did not discover them, if there was. "The whisky ring" the Senator from Delaware alludes to. No democratic investigating committee discovered the transactions of the whisky ring; they were discovered by a republican Secretary of the Treasury. Now I come to Mr. Belknap, of whom you speak.

I may say, as is suggested by another Senator, that even in the whisky ring there were more democrats than republicans convicted of rascality; but your committees did not discover them, nor any of them. In the Belknap case, I have just said not a dollar was stolen from the Government. Take the Freedmen's Bank. Whatever there was wrong in it, the Government did not lose a cent. Take the case of "gravestones." I am informed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] who was Secretary of War for some time, that the only complaint made was that republicans bid cheaper for that work than democrats did, and, therefore, democrats did not get the job and thought there was a swindle. They wanted to make more than republicans did. The post-traderships the Senator has mentioned, and he has also paraded here the unadjusted balances from the Internal Revenue department. I submit to the Senate and to the country (if any portion of the country should ever read this debate) that these gentlemen have utterly failed, on the broadest challenge I could make, to name one man or one dollar that your two or three hundred thousand dollars of expenditure have found of corruption by republican officials.

The Senator from Delaware has been pretty free in his attempts to find these names. I would like with his consent to publish a list of defaulters in amounts exceeding $10,000, as taken from an official report, giving the names of delinquent officers, and the amounts in which they were short from 1830 to 1861, being the thirty years of which I spoke to-day of democratic rule in this country, the total being $6,874,302.38, and the names are all given and the dates, purporting to be taken from an official document. It will take some time to read it; I can do it, if Senators prefer; otherwise I should like to publish it in the RECORD.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not want to assert——

Mr. WINDOM. Is there any objection to my publishing the statement?

DEMOCRATIC DEFAULTERS.

List of defaulters in amounts exceeding $10,000 in connection with the various departments of the Government from 1830 to 1861.

Name.	Rank.	Locality.	Period.	Am't due.
I. V. Fowler	Postmaster	New York	1853-1860	$170,947 67
W. H. Kerr	do	New Orleans	1830-1838	39,604 67
F. S. Marks	do	do	1858-1860	17,346 53
Jonathan Ritter	do	Sacramento, California	1850	18,857 76
D. F. Douglass	United States marshal	California	1851-1853	10,651 59
J. L. Robinson	do	Indiana	1858-1860	10,082 53
E. S. Davis	do	Kansas	1857-1858	13,337 42
W. P. Fain	do	do	1858-1859	13,226 89
J. M. Kennedy	do	Louisiana	1853-1860	18,551 65
A. Miller	do	Mississippi	1841-1845	42,120 75
B. P. Rankin	do	Nebraska	1856-1858	10,248 35
J. M. Mott	do	New York	1837-1841	21,758 85
H. F. Tallmadge	do	do	1849-1853	11,843 98
A. F. Hillyer	do	do	1853-1857	24,855 57
F. M. Wynkoop	do	Pennsylvania	1853-1857	10,773 22
J. P. Anderson	do	Washington Territory	1853-1855	14,418 90
Samuel Swartwout	Collector	New York	1829-1838	1,205,030 60
Jesse Hoyt	do	do	1838-1841	248,871 86
John B. Hogan	do	Mobile, Alabama	1840-1841	14,381 50
Thomas G. Morgan	do	New Orleans	1841-1843	212,232 34
Thomas Barrell	do	do	1843-1844	41,376 64
C. L. Russell	do	Cleveland	1849-1853	29,796 07
O. M. Hyde	do	Detroit	1850-1853	13,544 75
T. B. King	do	San Francisco	1850-1852	46,974 39
F. W. Latham	do	Brownsville, Texas	1858-1861	15,264 16
Harlow Case	do	Sandusky, Ohio	1851-1853	31,308 83
D. A. Boker	Naval officer	New York	1853-1853	22,133 76
B. C. Sanders	Collector	San Francisco	1853-1853	92,256 42
R. P. Hammond	do	do	1853-1855	372,122 54
William A. Linn	do	Saint Louis, Missouri	1854-1859	20,407 87
Amos Binney	Purser in the Navy		1834	70,562 07
J. W. Bronought	Contractor in the Navy		1846	11,341 53
James Brooks	Purser in the Navy		1834	59,346 90
B. F. Brown	do		1830	32,569 69
Uriah Brown	do		1848	10,000 00
W. Badger	Navy agent		1857-1861	12,329 92
Josiah Colston	Purser in the Navy		1839	33,369 18
G. W. Clark	Paymaster in the Navy		1858-1861	16,762 30
N. Denby	Navy agent	Marseilles	1854	135,378 22
T. H. Easton	do		1841	28,669 04
S. C Gonzales	Naval storekeeper		1854	109,606 32
J. C. Holland	Purser in the Navy		1838-1842	23,696 83
Do	Paymaster in the Navy		1838-1841	19,336 64
William McMurtrie	Purser in the Navy		1835	12,644 25
E. McCall & Co	Navy agents		1857-1860	82,671 19
F. A. Parker	Commander in the Navy		1844	13,145 33
G. H. Ritchie	Paymaster in the Navy		1859-1861	13,155 00
P. A. Southall	Purser in the Navy		1836-1840	40,550 08
Edward Storer	do		1856	21,574 94
J. A. Semple	Paymaster in the Navy		1855-1860	57,771 33
C. Swackhamer	Navy agent		1853-1857	33,234 06
D. F. Thornton	Purser in the Navy		1850	26,454 84
J. B. Timberlake	do		1856	10,747 23
J. N. Todd	do		1847	26,637 07
P. M. Whitmore	Navy agent		1851	87,000 21
M. T. Woolsey	Captain in the Navy		1837	14,935 10

DEMOCRATIC DEFAULTERS.

List of defaulters in amounts exceeding $10,000 in connection with the various departments of the Government from 1830 to 1861—Continued.

Name.	Rank.	Locality.	Period.	Am't due.
G. W. Hawkins	Quartermaster, War Department		1849-1853	$71,721 17
E. H. Harris	do		1848-1849	43,896 69
H. W. Halleck	do		1847-1849	14,137 85
A. R. Hetzel	do		1838-1858	15,495 16
P. H. Mumphries	do		1850-1853	10,541 57
R. M. Hundle	do		1846-1848	13,965 07
C. E. Erwin	do		1849-1851	59,662 56
Thos. Gordan	do		1847-1861	17,9?2 33
E. R. Kane	do		1847-1853	38,773 16
W. Kearney	do		1855-1860	24,898 88
James Lea	Quartermaster and Subsistence department		1846-1849	68,954 28
L. Loeser	do		1850-1856	13,933 19
H. Lowery	do		1847-1848	11,2?2 11
T. D. Martin	do		1847-1848	17,666 92
L. H. Marshall	do		1852-1861	13,964 77
W. M. D. McKessack	do		1847	44,092 08
I. McClure	Quartermaster, War Department		1846	26,704 53
L. Hill	do		1848-1856	10,416 33
H. Randall	do		1856-1861	17,125 55
A. W. Reynolds	do		1850-1860	46,374 91
T. S. Russell	Quartermaster and Subsistence department		1848-1851	60,219 96
W. R. Stevens	Engineer and Subsistence department		1855-1861	16,023 30
H. B. Sears	Quartermaster, War Department		1847-1848	28,727 12
Thomas Tupper	do		1837	22,496 03
F. Richards	Storekeeper, War Department		1858-1860	176,858 06
Murphy Dennis	Ordnance Office		1858-1861	81,901 13
H. R. Selden	Recruiting officer		1854-1857	21,049 77
A. J. Coffee	Paymaster, War Department		1848-1849	52,312 26
T. Y. Daskeill	do		1855-1858	19,050 55
A. W. Gaines	do		1857-1860	22,318 41
S. Macklin	do		1857-1861	32,764 14
A. B. Ragan	do		1857-1861	15,904 87
T. J. Rhett	do		1858-1861	49,367 87
F. S. Armstrong	Quartermaster, War Department		1856-1860	10,138 91
J. O. Bradshaw	do		1837-1847	18,755 27
Charles Leslie	do		1847-1850	74,235 65
T. F. Chapman	do		1849-1850	11,319 32
C. M. Creamer	do		1847-1848	66,972 48
R. C. D. Collins	do		1835-1839	17,262 24
Freeman Cross	do		1846-1853	16,762 60
R. R. Cunn	do		1836-1837	294,729 15
Do	Captain Quartermaster's Department		1847-1849	39,243 89
B. Edwards	Quartermaster, War Department		1836-1844	28,324 32
J. B. Grayson	do		1834-1861	63,740 40
Samuel Gulley	do		1856-1857	25,730 95
Luther Blake	Indian agent		1851-1852	45,060 00
R. D. C. Collins	Subsistence agent		1830-1839	68,878 21
Milton C. Dickey	Indian agent		1859-1861	18,956 57
H. L. Fort	Subsistence agent		1857-1860	27,194 21
A. B. Greenwood	Commissioner of Indian Affairs		1859-1860	28,906 23
J. B. F. Russell	Captain and commissary		1834-1836	47,464 50
Jacob Thompson	Secretary of the Interior Department		1857-1861	871,000 00
Robert Temple	Pension agent	Rutland, Vermont	1838-1857	100,424 07
				6,874,302 38

Defaulting depository and other banks and bankers, from 1830 to 1861.

Name and locality.	Period.	Amount due.
Manufacturers' Bank, Chillicothe, Ohio	1830-1845	$$29,729 45
Bank of Vincennes	1830-1833	168,511 30
Agricultural Bank, Mississippi	1830-1837	583,404 30
Franklin Bank, Massachusetts	1830-1837	12,331 25
Franklin Bank, Alexandria, District of Columbia	1830-1839	48,000 00
Bank of Edwardsville	1830-1839	46,973 00
Farmers and Merchants' Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio	1830-1845	36,966 01
Bank of Missouri, St. Louis, Missouri	1830-1839	159,199 87
Bank of Steubenville, Ohio	1830-1843	300,056 33
Elkton Bank, Maryland	1830-1844	25,372 19
Bank of Somerset, Maryland	1830-1844	62,420 36
City Bank, Columbus, Ohio	1830-1853	100,000 00
Bank of Columbia, Georgetown, District of Columbia	1830-1845	610,115 42
Virginia Saline Bank	1830-1845	10,121 00
T. P. Crutchfield, depositary, Little Rock, Arkansas	1855-1856	68,000 28
W. M. Harrison, depositary, Richmond, Virginia	1854-1856	14,071 97
J. J. Simkins, depositary, Norfolk, Virginia	1858-1861	11,795 58
J. A. Guirot, assistant treasurer, New Orleans	1857-1861	146,226 74
Charles W. Morgan, contractor to Army	1837-1839	13,446 55
Edmund Randolph, Secretary of State		61,355 07
Green W. Caldwell, treasurer, branch mint, Charlotte, North Carolina	1853-1860	34,960 46
J. A. Guirot, treasurer, branch mint, New Orleans	1858-1861	415,959 22
R. Hutchinson, clerk in mint, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania	1830-1847	16,018 31
George Kellogg, treasurer branch mint, Georgia	1830-1860	28,853 54
Joseph Dunbar, surveyor	1830-1831	16,633 13
Thomas Freeman, surveyor	1830-1839	24,446 91
J. P. Turner, surveyor	1830-1832	10,889 27
Harszthy, melter and refiner in mint	1854-1855	152,327 03
William S. Smith, agent General Land Office	1831-1837	10,383 44
		3,218,619 34
		6,874,302 38
Sums total		10,092,921 72

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In connection with that, I hold here a statement published over the signature of Secretary Boutwell of the delinquencies in one Department, making over $120,000,000, and I should like this to go in too.

Mr. WINDOM. Everybody knows what those delinquencies were. That list has been discussed over and over again in the Senate. Everybody knows it does not represent losses to the Government, but simply uncollected balances, nearly all of which have since been collected and accounted for.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. They were out of office at that time, and they are called delinquencies by Secretary Boutwell and he names the men name after name with just the exact amount; and I should like to have this go with my friend's list.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator from West Virginia if he does not know that the amounts were assessed by the assessors in each district, are charged up to the collector and that they remain charged to him until collected, and that the amounts on that list are simply uncollected balances that the Senator is attempting to present here as $20,000,000 of losses? I ask him if he does not know that?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no; here is what it is, under the signature of Secretary Boutwell. It was published on the 18th of February, 1871, and it was a list of collectors out of office on the 1st day of July, 1870, and every one of these balances was then due by these men who were then out of office.

Mr. WINDOM. But collected by their successors.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Just one minute. Here are the different amounts each one owed, how long it had been owing, some of them several years, some of them going back to 1864, and every officer named here on this list was a defaulter at the time, and so published in this report. These defalcations in one bureau alone amount to over $20,000,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I know, and I think the Senator knows, that these are not defaulters at all. Whenever the assessor assesses a certain amount, it is charged up to the collector. If it is uncollectable, it appears charged until finally stricken off the books as uncollectable. All over the United States assessments were made, the books turned over, and charged to the collector. All the millions that were uncollected from the democratic moonshine distillers down in Kentucky where my friend over yonder lives, down in Georgia, and all through that mountain region, were included; I presume there were more than $20,000,000 of uncollected taxes from those whisky distillers, who have been robbing the Government ever since and killing our officers when they go down to collect those taxes. All those were charged up as part of this $20,000,000.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Minnesota names the State of Kentucky; he wants to call me up I suppose. I will just take one case on the list my friend from West Virginia has before him, that of Joshua F. Bailey, collector of internal revenue in the fourth district of New York, a defaulter for $603,951, who was transferred afterward by President Grant to the thirty-second district of New York, and turned out in that district to be a defaulter for $586,201.46, and who absconded March 15, 1870, without paying a dollar of either sum. Henry Clews, George Opdyke, and some other leading men, who were afterward placed in power and position by the President, were sureties on his bond, and they were not sued, certainly not for years afterward, and they have not been sued to this day, so far as I know. Not a dollar has been paid. Each one of these cases is of the same sort.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President——

Mr. WALLACE. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. WINDOM. I shall be through in a minute and will then yield.

Mr. BECK. Only one word. After that default was made and those men were on that bond, resolutions were offered in the House inquiring why those men had not been sued, and the answer came that they had not been sued. They may have been sued since, but I am not aware of it.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President——

Mr. WINDOM. I yield a moment to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator from Kentucky is not an accurate historian now. The case of Joshua F. Bailey is a familiar case in New York, very familiar to the Committee on Finance as that committee was constituted at the time. Joshua F. Bailey was appointed by Andrew Johnson. It was one of those acts so free from the influence of politicians that it won great applause from the party which the honorable Senator from Kentucky leads. It was a striking illustration of what had then begun to be called "civil-service reform."

Mr. Bailey was recommended by two or three very good men; I do not care to name them. They never distinguished themselves by practical sagacity although they were very high authorities in the civil-service-reform church everywhere. Mr. Bailey having been recommended as I have said, was appointed by Mr. Johnson, appointed to the fourth district if I remember aright.

Mr. BECK. To the fourth district by Johnson and to the thirty-second by Grant.

Mr. CONKLING. I will come to that. Subsequently a district was created arbitrarily, known as the thirty-second district. It was a very important district. It covered much manufacture of tobacco and spirits, and was conspicuously an important district. The same influences which had so glorified Mr. Bailey selected him and commended him as soon as General Grant came in as a collector the like of whom could not be found anywhere. The "machine politicians" in New York as they are called thought they knew better. They advised strongly against the selection of Mr. Bailey. They had reasons for doing it, outward appearances pretty conspicuous to everybody; but they were overborne by the persons and the sentiment which I have sufficiently referred to, and Mr. Bailey was transferred to this thirty-second district.

Mr. Opdyke, whom the Senator has named, and other gentlemen were sureties upon the bond of Mr. Bailey. It turned out when it was too late (not to the surprise of those who had remonstrated but I am bound to believe to the surprise of those who had pushed this individual as such a very competent man) that he was a defaulter in a large amount; and upon investigation it turned out that his defalcation dated back behind the time when this bond to which the Senator has referred was given. Thereupon these gentlemen, very excusably as I think, employed counsel to know whether they were liable to make good a default concealed from them and antedating the time when they so generously but unwisely became his sureties. They were advised that they had a defense. There was a good deal of delay in the way of negotiation, offers being made to pay something of this large amount rather than to have the vexation and distress of a litigation; and the time which elapsed, elapsed in consequence of this question which I now state to the Senator. Exactly how it resulted finally, I am not sure enough to venture to state; but my impression is that it turned out in law and in fact that these sureties were not liable, and therefore the case stands, so far as it is instructive at all, like some other cases to which reference might be made, as one illustrating the danger of selecting officers under this somewhat emotional sort of sentiment which appeals to those, honestly decrying no doubt, established methods, enthusiastic about novel ways of doing things, and possessed with the idea that by as much as they have little to do with politics and little knowledge of it, therefore their judgment of men is more likely to be discreet and pure and wholesome than the judgment of other people.

You remember, Mr. President, that even as early as that it came to be a belief by a class of persons that, although the Senator of Kentucky as a man of honor, a man of intelligence, a man of practical wisdom, might be an excellent judge of who should be selected for an office in Kentucky if he was not a Senator or if he was not a Member of the House, yet when he came to be a Senator or Member, immediately it must be supposed that he would have some sinister purpose, some ambition, some obliqnity of mental or moral vision, something or other which would render it unsafe to rely upon him. That idea had started then, and Mr. Bailey was one of the first fruits of them who thought that great reform would be brought about by going to somebody else, anybody rather than a man belonging to that class, officially or otherwise, who it had been supposed were referred to, and somewhat relied upon in the selection of officers. Mr. Bailey is a conspicuous example of the wisdom of that sort of thing. Some of the men who have been referred to as connected with the whisky frauds are almost equally conspicuous. I might mention one who came from the State of Missouri who was put in an official position, if I remember aright, against the united protest of the entire congressional delegation from that State, possibly with one exception. If there was any member of the delegation from Missouri who assented to this appointment, there was, if I am correctly informed, but one. But beyond the delegation, excellent people, clergymen, members of the bench, the most estimable people in the world, whose judgment would have been of the utmost value but for the circumstance that they did not know much about it, recommended this man; and as an example of an opportunity to select office-holders by going beyond the politicians for information, this man was selected, and he brought disgrace upon himself, great injury upon himself. The Senator who sits behind me, [Mr. CARPENTER,] owing to his proximity, knows much more about it than I do; I believe one of the indictments in which he was concerned was tried in the State of Wisconsin.

So I might give other illustrations of what I say; but I repeat that the case of Mr. Bailey is valuable as one; it is not valuable to show anything of the kind which the Senator from Kentucky had in mind when he cited it, except that having been appointed by Andrew Johnson when Andrew Johnson was not a republican President, he was continued by General Grant under such advice as I have stated. He proved to be a defaulter, and a defaulter under such circumstances that his sureties had, as they were advised, a good defense in law; and like any other men, however honorable they might be, they made that defense. That is all there is of it.

Mr. WINDOM. I will take but one minute, unless the Senator from Kentucky wishes to take it from me.

Mr. BECK. I would not have risen at all, I took no part in this debate, except that intimations were made that all these men had settled up their accounts, and that the Kentucky distillers, &c., were responsible for the defalcations. That suggestion about my State led to my interference. I took out the one case that I happened to know something about, not accurately as the Senator from New York does, wherein there was a defalcation of $1,200,000 according to the report—it may have been collected afterward, I do not know—by Joshua F. Bailey, first in the fourth district of New York, appointed by President Johnson, and then in the thirty-second district, appointed by General Grant. That was lost to the Government, when very prominent men who were trusted very largely were his sureties. I happened to name them; George Opdyke and Henry Clews were two of them, and two years afterward they had not been even sued to make good that default. While I was a member of the House I inquired why they had not been sued, and no good excuse was ever given. The Senator from New York says they made defense afterward. Perhaps they did, but I did not know it. That $1,200,000 had no connection with Kentucky distillers, or anything except the default of men who were supposed to be good, but who were allowed to go free because they seemed to be pets of the Administration. I hope the Government has obtained it since. But the statement made by the Senator from West Virginia, so far as Bailey is concerned, was exactly correct as he stated it; and many other cases no doubt could be stated in the same way. That one I happened to know about.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator's case was not a very fortunate one so far as his party is concerned. But I want before I take my seat to suggest to my good friend from Delaware that I should be obliged if he would devote his leisure hours between now and the meeting to-morrow, when we take up this bill, to ascertaining the name of some one republican official whom his thirty-three democratic committees have proven to have stolen money from the Government; and having said that, I will merely give in one minute the percentage of losses under various administrations. During Jackson's administration the loss was $10.55 per $1,000; under Van Buren's administration, $21.15 per $1,000; under Harrison's administration, $10.37 per $1,000; under Polk's administration, $8.34 per $1,000; under Taylor's and Fillmore's administrations, $7.64 per $1,000; under Pierce, $5.86; under Buchanan, $6.98 per $1,000; under Lincoln, $1.41 per $1,000. You see how it dropped as soon as the republicans came into power. Under Johnson it was forty-eight cents to the thousand dollars. We had a republican Congress at that time and watched him. Under Grant's first administration the percentage was forty cents on the thousand dollars, and his second administration twenty-six cents on the thousand dollars disbursed. This is a document prepared at the Treasury Department, and no doubt is correct.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Senator allow me to make a parliamentary inquiry which may——

Mr. WALLACE. No, sir; I move that the Senate do now adjourn, and insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and (at three o'clock and twenty-four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 25, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

TREATY WITH MEXICO.

Mr. WILSON. I do not desire to be regarded as importunate; but I must again call the attention of the House to the importance of action being taken on the joint resolution (H. R. No. 28) providing for a treaty with the Republic of Mexico. And I ask that some day be fixed for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. What day?

Mr. WILSON. I will say to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand the object of the gentleman's request is merely to get consent for the consideration of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks that the consideration of the joint resolution be assigned for to-morrow, before the morning hour, immediately after the reading of the Journal. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON. I will say after the morning hour.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Not to interfere with the existing order.

Mr. COX. This joint resolution ought to be considered; let it be after the existing order, as the gentleman from Tennessee suggests.

Mr. CONGER. What is the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will repeat it. The gentleman from West Virginia asks that to-morrow after the morning hour be assigned for the consideration of the joint resolution which he is instructed to report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs in reference to further treaty intercourse between Mexico and the United States.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman will except the consideration of appropriation bills and the special order, the National Board of Health bill, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman agree to that exception?

Mr. WILSON. I do.

There being no objection, the order was made.

RIGHTS OF RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS IN INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. SCALES. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 1370) giving to all religious denominations equal rights and privileges in the Indian reservations be made a special order for consideration on the third Thursday of January next. I hope the bill will then be considered and disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman request that the bill be assigned for consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. SCALES. No, sir; in the House.

Mr. CONGER. Under this order can the bill come back on a motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks that the bill be made a special order for the third Thursday in January. It will not come back on a motion to reconsider.

There was no objection, and the order was made.

MONUMENT TO UNION DEAD AT CHALMETTE.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time a joint resolution, to which I think no gentleman on either side of the House will make the slightest objection. I ask that the resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate to Mower Post Grand Army of the Republic at New Orleans, certain blocks of granite now lying at Fort Livingston, Louisiana, and which are of no use to the Government, for the purpose of completing a monument for the Union dead at Chalmette National Cemetery, near New Orleans.

Mr. ELLIS. In remodeling Fort Livingston a few years ago certain blocks of granite which had formed a part of the construction of the fort, and which were used for the traverse circles of the fort, were thrown out by the Government as useless. That granite is now lying on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, and, in the opinion of gentlemen familiar with the locality, the waves will soon wash it into the Gulf and it will be totally lost. The Union soldiers who constitute Mower Post Grand Army of the Republic are erecting at Fort Chalmette a beautiful monument to the Union dead who sleep there. They ask that this granite, which is of no use to the Government, be donated to them for the purpose of completing that monument to the gallant dead.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 114) donating certain granite blocks was read three times, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to make a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to report the resolution which I send to the desk and to which I ask the assent of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and it is hereby, authorized to sit during the recess, at Washington or elsewhere, for the purpose of revising, codifying, and simplifying the rules of the House; and the journal clerk of the House shall act as clerk to the said committee; and the necessary actual expenses incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I wish the gentleman from Kentucky to state before I make objection where the committee wish to travel this summer.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state it is not the intention of the committee, if this resolution is adopted, to travel anywhere.

Mr. CONGER. Why put in the words "or elsewhere?"

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the question of the gentleman after I have made a brief statement to the House. I am directed by the Committee on Rules unanimously to make this report. As the members of this House know, our rules now number one hundred and sixty-six. They have become very voluminous, and in more instances than one different rules may be found which at least in part conflict with each other. It is impossible for the Committee on Rules during a session of Congress to be able to effect a general revision or modification of this bunglesome and overgrown system under which we now suffer. I appeal to every gentleman on this floor if it is not the fact that these rules, which constitute the implements by means of which every member here must do his work, are so voluminous, so conflicting, even so crude, as to render it almost impossible for any one to arrive at a clear comprehension of their purpose and scope.

As I have said, the resolution which the Committee on Rules have directed me to report has received the indorsement of every member of that committee. I cannot say that the committee itself, or any member of it, will be the beneficiary of the action of the House should this resolution be adopted. Of course there is no additional compensation provided. In the judgment of the committee it will take probably one month, or nearly so long, to effect something like a revision of these rules.

I may call the attention of the House to the further fact that a concurrent resolution has been passed by the Senate, which has by the action of this House been sent to its Committee on Rules for consideration, looking to a revision of the joint rules of the two Houses. It is for this House to determine whether it will instruct and authorize its Committee on Rules during the coming recess to sit for such length of time as may be necessary to consider both propositions—the Senate proposition to revise the joint rules of the two Houses and the proposition to revise the rules of the House itself.

This resolution provides that the committee shall sit for such length of time as may be necessary to do the work "in Washington or elsewhere." Now, so far as I am concerned, as a member of that committee, it is a matter of perfect indifference to me; and if it be the pleasure of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to have stated in the resolution where the committee shall sit, I for one at least will have no objection to that. It is for the House to determine whether it desires to have this work of revision and codification of its rules undertaken or not; that is all.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] desire to move to strike out the words "or elsewhere?"

Mr. CONGER. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state in reference to this proposition——

Mr. CONGER. If I did move to strike out those words I should also move to insert in lieu thereof the words "in some cool and comfortable place."

The SPEAKER. That is just the point. In case the committee should determine to sit immediately, and it should get to be too warm here, the committee should have the right to hold its meeting in some other place where it would be more comfortable, without extra expense.

Mr. CONGER. I think the committee should sit in the most convenient and comfortable place on the continent. I do not wish to strike out the words "or elsewhere." My objection is simply to the proposition itself.

For eighty years we have acted under a system of rules, modifying them as occasion arose. As the Speaker properly and pertinently once remarked, no committee can beforehand prepare a set of rules for this body; but as the occasion arises, if we have a Speaker in the chair capable of discriminating in regard to the necessities of business and the proprieties of rules, he will necessarily himself work into the best system of rules that can be obtained.

I object to this resolution because, although not so intended, it is a reflection upon our present Speaker. It has been my pleasure and my duty very often to call the attention of the Chair to the construction of the rules and to raise points of order for the Chair to determine. I have been very happy in the belief that our Speaker is adequate to every emergency of that kind [laughter] and that his decisions from time to time have been satisfactory to the House.

If he alone were designated to make this revision of the rules, I might perhaps have no objection to it. But there are to be associated with him gentlemen who are not thoroughly familiar with the rules of the House, [laughter,] who are not thoroughly aware of the best kind of rules for this House, as I have noticed by the amendments which they have from time to time proposed to the rules. [Renewed laughter.] Now, if it were possible that this committee would forego the pleasure of sitting together and would invest our Speaker with all the powers which this resolution proposes to confer upon the whole committee, I should anticipate a recommendation for the change of any of the rules which seem to need change without any political considerations being brought into the question, because the Speaker cannot in his decisions here indulge in political preferences without attempting to introduce new rules that would curb and confine the minority for the brief time they are in the minority. [Laughter.] He would leave the old rules of the House, of long standing and sufficient for all purposes, sufficient to hold this House in order and manage its business, when the majority here were opposed by the acute leadership of the present Speaker, and when the rules are now enforced here by such feeble efforts as we on this side, following the example that the present Speaker of the House set us in the days when he led the minority, and which have been sufficient to control the business of the House without hinderance and without interruption.

But if the Committee on Rules desire to undertake the revision of the rules—if they think they can improve these rules—if the majority think we have become so turbulent that a new set of restrictions is necessary to control this side of the House, I am the last one to prevent them undertaking that office; and if when the report is made we are not adequate to the emergency, it will be our own fault. I will not object to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no wish about this matter one way or another, because he can conform himself to any rules, trying to get common sense and equity out of them. But if the gentleman from Michigan supposes that the committee would report anything which would be final, that idea is a mistake. The committee could only submit its action to the House for adoption or rejection; and if the report contained anything objectionable, the power of correction would be with the House.

Mr. CONGER. But the Chair will bear witness to the correctness of my remark when I say that if we authorize the Committee on Rules to revise the rules and to report as they may at any time, we place ourselves in the power of the majority to pass whatever rules they may choose.

The SPEAKER. The notable rules which have heretofore been adopted to restrict and chain the minority were introduced when the present occupant of the chair did not hold the position of presiding officer, but when he was a member on the floor. As soon as the party now in the majority obtained control in the House, they immediately repealed those clauses of the rules which fettered the minority as they thought unduly; and those restrictions have never been re-enacted since. The Chair refers particularly to former Rules 165 and 166, now vacated.

Mr. CONGER. Is it proposed that this committee may report at any time?

The SPEAKER. The committee has generally been conceded that right until it has grown into a practice.

Mr. CONGER. Well, I think we will run the risk of a struggle on this matter when it comes. I will not object.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the reminder which the Chair has anticipated me in giving the gentleman from Michigan will serve to quiet his apprehensions. It was in the Forty-fourth Congress, when the party on this side had a majority on this floor, as they have had in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses, that the rule enacted by a former republican House restricting the powers and rights of the minority here was repealed. The gentleman need not be apprehensive. The republican, the minority, side of this House is represented, I am sure, very ably on this committee. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the equally distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] constitute two of the five members of the Committee on Rules; and if our friend from Michigan feels that this fact does not give ample security and protection to the interests and rights of that side of the Chamber, I for one would have no objection to having his good company in this work and amending the resolution so as to constitute him a member ex officio of the Committee on Rules, thus giving us the benefit of his counsel.

The gentleman undertakes to complain, and doubtless very justly, (I am sure in one instance without any injustice,) of the want of familiarity of some of the members of the committee with the rules of the House; but he shows that his own information is at fault when he states that these rules have stood for eighty years. The gentleman should brighten his recollection. There was a revision of the rules of this House in 1860. Two decades have not passed since these rules were revised; and it is a question not for the Committee on Rules but for the House to determine whether there is now a necessity for a revision, simplification, and codification of the rules. Personally I am content to leave them as they are. But there are now numerous amendments to the rules pending before the committee. In the course of nineteen years these rules have become a piece of patchwork. It is for the House to determine whether it desires an effort made to simplify these rules. Surely this task is not a matter of pleasure for the committee. I imagine that no member who has been here during this long and tedious session will find it an enticing thing to come back here, away from his home and business, to spend one month in this gratuitous service. But whether this work shall result successfully or not, no harm can come of it. The committee under the resolution can simply report the result of its work for the adoption of the House.

In justice to the republican members of the committee, one of whom is absent and the other of whom I see has just entered the Chamber, I wish to say that in the discussions which have led up to the adoption of this resolution by the committee there has never been one atom of disagreement, nor one scintilla of political controversy, nor any division whatever among the members of the committee.

It was believed by the committee that the result of this effort would be beneficial, and they were led to submit the proposition in consequence of the complaints made by members as to the voluminous nature of the rules and in some cases their conflicting character. Numerous amendments to the rules which have been brought to the attention of the committee they have not been able to adopt, because of the incongruous provisions found in other portions of the book of rules. Hence they determined to make to the House this tender of service. If it be not the pleasure of the House to impose this duty upon them, I am very sure that I speak the sentiment of the committee when I say that, having discharged what they conceive their duty, they will take no offense in the world at any action the House may see fit to adopt.

The SPEAKER. It may not be uninteresting to state the fact that the present Committee on Rules have never, so far as the Chair recollects, been divided politically on any subject, and almost every report made by them, except in two instances, (the report on the liquor traffic and that on the woman's rights question,) has been unanimous.

Mr. CONGER. There was no need of any personal remarks on the part of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.] I did not intend to make any. I did not desire to reflect at all upon the Committee on Rules. I have no fault to find with the committee or its members. I believe them well qualified for their duties; and I think the republican side of the House is well represented on the committee.

I have said nothing that would warrant the remarks of the gentleman that I envied a position upon that committee, or desired to fill it. I simply said that although there were revisions of the rules from time to time, yet any one who takes up our Manual will find under each rule the date of its adoption. And whatever revision there may have been the rules remain as they have been adopted from the commencement of the Government, as the necessities of the case required, and the revision will unquestionably leave all the rules unchanged. There may be changes suggested by the committee, but I know very well that some amendment to the rules, which are complained of by this side of the House, were introduced by the committee and sustained by the party majority, which were thought to be objectionable. I know, and the gentleman knows, that however intelligent the members of the committee from this side of the House may be, yet they cannot control the subject of a report from the Committee on Rules, because they are in a minority, and whatever they may or may not do, they have no controlling power in the committee.

The point I wish to make is that whatever is done by this committee in remodeling or codifying the rules could be done in one report, and could be passed by a majority of this House; whereas if we met rule by rule, each one with proper time to discuss it, the House at least could act advisedly in each case. I have no objection, as I said before, to the committee meeting here or elsewhere to see if the rules can be amended. There has been some restiveness under the present rules, and some members of the House have thought that there ought to be some rule to compel the minority to stop dilatory motions, and stop what we call filibustering, and compel members to vote as the rule requires them to do.

Now, I do not know but that this proposition arose from the suggestion which was made here that the rules ought to be so modified that when a recusant republican member refuses to vote, or do what the rules require him to do, a strong hand ought to be laid upon him, and pains and penalties inflicted for political contumacy on his part.

Mr. SPARKS. So as to keep the peace in the House?

Mr. CONGER. Yes: to keep the peace in the House without the presence of an armed force.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will suggest to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that whenever a revision of the rules is had the report is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and is there subject to debate, rule by rule, just as a general appropriation bill is considered, clause by clause, so I do not think there was any just grounds for the apprehension that the minority of the House will be cut off from a fair consideration of every proposed alteration or change in the rules.

Mr. GARFIELD. I was not present in the Committee on Rules when this report was adopted, but I know that the subject-matter has been talked over in the committee a number of times when I was present. As I understand the purpose of the resolution, it meets my hearty concurrence.

We have a body of rules which are the accretion of ninety years' practice. Almost every Congress had added some modification or made some new rules or repealed some old ones. There have been a variety of rulings by different Speakers on nearly all the rules, and the result is that the House, by a simple cumulation of parliamentary practices, has thrown them together by a mere accident of time and place where the change may have happened to come, so that as they now stand they are not thrown together in any distinct form. The thing most needed is to simplify the present rules of the House, and if we did not make a single material change in the rules, we might get them put in order and when any collision of the rules is found to rectify that collision and make them clear and plain. That would be of very great value.

I suppose it has been the experience of every member here that when he first came into the House he found the rules of the House were an inexplicable mystery, and supposed to be known only to some of the older members; but some gentlemen who have been here many years have never so far mastered the rules as to feel in any degree certain of themselves.

Now, I do not suppose we can ever make a body of rules that is simple, because of the complicated nature of our business; but I am satisfied that they can be made much simpler than they are now; and with the understanding that the report of the Committee on Rules is to be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union where no advantage can be taken of a privileged report to bring it to a vote without the fullest consideration of the rights of the minority, I hope this resolution will prevail. I say that, although I know it will entail a large amount of work on the committee, and I say it also with the strong probability that I shall not be able to do my share of it if the committee do meet, but I do hope that somebody will be patriotic enough to do this work.

Mr. MILLS rose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. As pertinent to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, and with the permission of the gentleman from Texas, I will just interject the statement that about a half dozen rules of this House as they stand in this Manual now, rules 20, 24, 97, 154, and 156, though they stand here in the present codification of rules for the government of this House, are positively obsolete, having been repealed by existing statute law; so that we have this number of rules here which have been repealed, which fact can be ascertained by searching through the statutes. They are actually and positively obsolete, and yet under our present codification they are given to us here for our government and guidance.

Now, as to one point suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, I will say I do not think there is any danger, I do not think there can be any danger, of this committee undertaking to abridge the rights of the minority in the matter of dilatory motions any further than the existing rules do. If the gentleman will take Rule 31 he will see that it makes it absolutely obligatory on every member in this House, when the question is put, to give his vote unless excused by the House; and no motion for such excuse shall be made after the House is dividing or after the call of the yeas and nays has begun. So that the right of the minority in that regard cannot be abridged by any thing within the power of human expression made plainer or more obligatory than the rule is now. And yet under that rule we know very well what the practice of the House is; and I cannot for the life of me see there is any danger of the minority party in the House suffering anything in the shape of abridgment of privileges by reason of the revision of the rules.

Mr. CONGER. I do not quite understand the gentleman from Kentucky when he says our rules have been repealed by law. The right to make its own rules is a constitutional right of the House, and I do not understand how any law can repeal rules of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman from Michigan will refer to the statutes he will find that the rules I have named are absolutely obsolete, and that in virtue of their repeal by positive law existing to-day.

Mr. MILLS. I simply desire to say that I appreciate fully the force of what has been said about the difficulty of understanding our rules. It was said of John J. Crittenden, who spent a life-time in Congress, that he never did understand when he was entitled to the floor, even to make a motion to adjourn, and he had to consult his friends on the subject. It must have occurred to every one who has spent any time in the House how difficult it is to understand anything about the rules.

There are two points in reference to a revision of the rules of the House, one or the other of which must be observed. One is to make rules to obstruct legislation, and the other is to revise the rules so that a majority of this House can crystallize the will of the American people into law. Now, if the committee is to take that view and simplify the rules, then it is well that the committee should be authorized to sit in vacation that they may so simplify the rules that the majority can control the legislation of this House. If they are not going to do that, the revision is wholly unnecessary in my opinion. The difficulty that the rules now throw in the way of a majority of the House, it makes no difference which party has it, of giving its views the force of law, is almost insurmountable.

Now here is the morning hour. All committees have to report in the morning hour; and there is only one hour. It has been called the "nine holes." A bill comes in which is distasteful to the minority and they can delay it a whole Congress if they want, keeping it in the morning hour and preventing other committees from reporting. They ought not to have that power. We should have the rules so drawn that all the committees can report; that their reports may go on the Calendar, and that the Calendar shall be called in regular order and the business disposed of.

I hope if the House grants permission to the committee to sit during recess the committee will take that part of the subject into consideration and endeavor so to simplify the rules that the majority can make their will the law so far as the action of the House is concerned.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say a single word about this proposition now before the House, and but a single word.

On the first day of this session I had occasion to offer in common with other gentlemen propositions modifying the rules of this House in regard to the work which was to be performed by certain committees. The resolutions which I then had the honor to offer proposed to leave to the various committees of the House, to the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, &c., to make the estimates for the expenditures of the respective Departments of the Government. I hope the resolution offered by my friend from Kentucky will receive a favorable consideration from the House, and that these propositions will be acted upon. They were referred to the Committee on Rules and have never been acted upon during the entire session; and we have gone on for the three or four months of this extra session under the rules as they formerly existed. But, Mr. Speaker, I hope if this resolution is adopted by the House and the Committee on Rules is authorized to sit during the vacation to consider the general question of the revision of the rules of this House, that they will not only consider the various propositions offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] by myself, and by others, but that they will go still further and simplify the rules of the House by returning to the general parliamentary law by which all other deliberative assemblies in Christendom are governed in their proceedings.

If you would abolish every single rule in the House except such as are pertinent to its organization, and return to the general parliamentary law as laid down by Mr. Jefferson in his Manual, or more elaborately still by Mr. Cushing in his work on parliamentary law, you would then be able to have a system of rules for the government of this House easily stated and comprehended by every member; whereas now, under the existing rules, as was said by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] and under the precedents which have grown up under the various Speakers in reference to them, there seems to be no written parliamentary law, and all our proceedings are governed by the precedents which have been established under the rules as they stand. I hope the resolution will be adopted and that the committee, if they adopt a new set of rules, will adopt them in accordance with the parliamentary law as it has existed time immemorial.

The question was taken on the resolution, and it was agreed to.

HENRY CONARD.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, bill (S. No. 681) for the relief of the estate of Henry Conard; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

RICHARD DILLON.

Mr. PRESCOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2375) granting a pension to Richard Dillon, of Utica, Oneida County, New York; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WILLIAM GILFOIL.

Mr. PRESCOTT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2376) for the relief of William Gilfoil; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CATHARINE I. GILLIS.

Mr. KNOTT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2377) for the relief of Catharine I. Gillis; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

ISAAC S. LYON.

On motion of Mr. COFFROTH, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2315) for the relief of Isaac S. Lyon, and the same was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PAY OF EMPLOYÉS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. COFFROTH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay to each of the following persons, to wit, William T. Revels, Harry C. Acton, Joseph F. Knipe, Charles M. Henry, Richard Granger, Walter H. Robertson, John J. Tytherleigh, Perry S. Goodsell, the sum of $114 28, being in payment for services rendered by them as messengers in the House Post-Office from March 4, 1879, to April 4, 1879. And the Clerk of the House is hereby further directed to pay said amounts out of the moneys heretofore appropriated for session messengers in the House Post-Office for the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES POST-OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1879.

I do hereby certify that the above-named messengers were on duty between the dates as above stated, and that their services were required.

J. M. STEWART,
Postmaster House of Representatives.

CHANGE OF NAME.

Mr. LOUNSBERY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2378) to change the name of the ferry-boat James Fisk, jr., to Passaic; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the various votes by which these bills had been referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL TAXES OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HUNTON submitted the following report of a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House agree to the first amendment of the Senate in line 3, page 1, striking out the word "they," and to amendment 4 on page 2, striking out all after "assessments," in line 4, down to and including "obligations," in line 6.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2, striking out section 2, and from its amendment numbered 3, changing section 3 to section 2, and from its amendment numbered 5, changing section 4 to section 3; and agree thereto.

EPPA HUNTON,
HENRY S. NEAL,
GILBERT DE LA MATYR,
Managers on the part of the House.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
WM. PINKNEY WHYTE,
E. H. ROLLINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEPREDATIONS ON THE MEXICAN FRONTIER.

Mr. UPSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to instruct, if not incompatible with the public interest, Brigadier-General E. O. C. Ord, commanding the military department of Texas, to inform, through the Secretary of War, as early as practicable, the House of Representatives of the United States what massacres, raids, and depredations, if any, have been committed by Indians and Mexicans, or either, or by other lawless bands, within said department, since the 1st day of January, 1878; also, to report, through the Secretary of War, the number and class of troops under his command and where and how stationed or quartered, the services performed by said troops during said period; whether or not any additional troops and expenditures in the construction of posts, roads, wells, and tanks, or otherwise, and if so, what, are needed to give security and efficient protection to the lives and property of American citizens upon the Texas frontier, and generally to give such information as will show the condition and character of, and tend to secure peace and safety upon, said frontier.

C. S. HENRY.

Mr. MULDROW, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 115) for the payment of C. S. Henry, a page in the Forty-fifth Congress; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Accounts.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Commerce which it is important shall be considered during this present session.

Mr. MANNING. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to have a bill referred.

Mr. MANNING. I do not object to bills for reference, but I object to action upon any bill.

Mr. BREWER. Then I object to everything not in order.

Mr. FINLEY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. ACKLEN. If my matter is to be cut out by objection, I must object to everything.

Mr. MANNING. Then I call for the regular order.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1856) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to extend the area for the taking up and impounding of domestic animals into the county of Washington; and

An act (H. R. No. 2274) concerning the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories of the United States.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. McCOID. A request was submitted yesterday just before adjournment on behalf of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] and myself for leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks prepared by us as a portion of the debates of the House. Objection was made, which was intended to be, and really was, against both applications. I notice by the RECORD of this morning that it is there stated that the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] was granted without objection, but that objection was made to my request. I ask to have that corrected. I understand that the objection is now withdrawn and that the request for leave to print will not be opposed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] made the objection yesterday.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MCMAHON,] who with myself objected, now withdraws his objection as to both requests. The RECORD need not be corrected, but the request can now be granted.

Mr. McCOID. The objection really was made as to both requests.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] objected to the requests of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCOID] to have remarks prepared by them printed in the RECORD. Does that gentleman now withdraw his objection?

Mr. MCMAHON. I heard but one request made yesterday and I objected to that, not as a personal matter, but because I was opposed to the further printing of remarks in the RECORD. I have reconsidered that matter and now withdraw objection to either request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no further objection; and leave is granted to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCOID] to have printed in the RECORD remarks as indicated by them. [See Appendix.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The Chair submits requests for leave of absence as follows:

To Mr. KIMMEL, indefinitely, on account of illness;

To Mr. URNER, for one week, on account of sickness in his family; and

To Mr. COLERICK, indefinitely, on account of the dangerous illness of his mother.

Mr. O'NEILL. I think it would be a good plan to secure the services of a physician for our sick members.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would inquire of the Chair how near we have become reduced to a bare quorum?

The SPEAKER. The votes yesterday——

Mr. GARFIELD. I know what the vote on yesterday was; but if these leaves of absence are granted how will we then stand?

The SPEAKER. There were recorded as not voting one hundred and thirty-one members on two propositions yesterday. That would leave one hundred and fifty-five as voting. There are about sixty members absent on leave.

Mr. GARFIELD. Showing only five or six more than a quorum in the city. If the Speaker is satisfied that the granting of these leaves of absence will not leave us without a quorum, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no agency in the matter, but submits the request to the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have made inquiries as to the knowledge of the Speaker upon the subject.

WILLIAM NEPHEW KING, JR.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider, the bill (S. No. 696) for the relief of William Nephew King, jr.

Mr. STEPHENS. I trust the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] who objected yesterday——

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will agree to have that bill acted on at once.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask a question about this bill. The young lad, King, called upon me a day or two ago and stated a case that appealed very strongly to my sympathy. If this bill does not pass at this session it will be comparatively of no use at all to him. It is a question whether he shall be permitted again to enter the Naval Academy.

The SPEAKER. Then the committee can be authorized to report the bill at any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the bill is to be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs I wish to have it understood that it shall report it back to the House to-morrow.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am willing for that.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the committee be authorized and directed to report the bill back to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs with leave to report it back at any time.

There was no objection; and accordingly the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. MANNING. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ACKLEN. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

CANAL-BOATS, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The regular order coming over from yesterday as unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 671) relating to vessels not propelled wholly by sail or internal motive power of their own. On this bill the main question was ordered.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered. I make this motion in order to reach a stage when a motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce will be in order. At present such a motion cannot be entertained.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman make?

Mr. ACKLEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered. I have stated my reason for the motion, in order to enable the House to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. O'NEILL. I think the House can amend the bill without sending it to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I think that all objection to this bill can be obviated by an amendment which seems to be satisfactory to the members of the House. I hope, therefore, the motion to reconsider will not be adopted with the view of referring the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. CONGER. If this motion to lay on the table be adopted, it will compel us to act on the bill in its present shape, when I presume there are not five men in the House who desire to pass it in that shape.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] has stated that the intention is to modify the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope my colleague [Mr. FINLEY] will withdraw the motion to lay on the table, so that we may have a chance to modify the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I suggest that by unanimous consent an amendment to the bill can be made which will make it unobjectionable. I ask that unanimous consent be given to strike out the word "wholly," leaving the text of the bill otherwise as it stands.

Mr. ACKLEN. I wish the Chair would be kind enough to state to the House the object of my motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman himself has stated that he desired the reference of the bill to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ACKLEN. Or to allow amendments, if the House shall choose. As the main question has been ordered, amendments would not now be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left [Mr. BAYNE] asks unanimous consent that the word "wholly" be struck from the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. That is a mere verbal amendment, and I think it ought to prevail.

Mr. ACKLEN. Upon a careful examination of the bill, and upon consultation both with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Second Assistant Secretary of the Treasury I think this whole matter should undergo a thorough revision by the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BAYNE?]

Mr. ACKLEN. I object to it.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I think it unfair after the gentleman has discussed the bill and given to the House his construction of it, which construction I apprehend is not in accordance with its spirit and meaning, that he should attempt now to cut off any explanation or amendment of the measure.

Mr. FORT. Why the very effect of the gentleman's motion is to open the bill to discussion and amendment.

Mr. KENNA. I would like to make a brief statement in order to set right a misapprehension into which I fell myself yesterday. I was apprehensive from the reading of this bill, as I understood it, that its effect would be to impose additional burdens upon flatboats and barges navigating the inland waters of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General have heretofore construed existing laws so as not to impose such burdens. I was apprehensive that, as this bill undertook to state the exemptions existing under previous laws, it would be held that no other exemptions existed than those embraced within the limits of this particular bill. In order to ascertain what would be the construction of the Department upon that question, I telegraphed this morning to the Secretary of the Treasury. His answer (which I have not at this moment in my possession, having handed it to another gentleman who is interested in this subject) states that this bill, if passed, will be construed to effect nothing further than the releasement of the fees and obligations which the bill itself names. This being the case, I see no objection to the bill.

Mr. ACKLEN. One word. There has evidently been a misapprehension on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] as to the effect and purport of my motion to reconsider. I desire to say that if this motion be adopted, I shall withhold a motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce until ample opportunity shall have been had to discuss it; and it will then remain in the discretion of the House whether the bill shall be referred or passed.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. FINLEY to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, it was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered, it was agreed to.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania, rose.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire now to move to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I was recognized by the Speaker and have the floor.

Mr. ACKLEN. I desire to say to my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that in his absence from the House I agreed that the motion to refer the bill should be withheld until the gentleman from Pennsylvania should be heard.

Mr. FORT. The House has the right to refer the bill.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. REAGAN. I gave no authority to any gentleman to speak for me in this matter.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] moves to amend the bill, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the word "wholly" from the bill where it occurs in the fourth line, after the word "propelled." I ask the Clerk to read the bill as it will be if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the payment of any fee or charge for the enrolling or licensing of vessels built in the United States and owned by citizens thereof, not propelled by sail or by internal motive power of their own, and not in any case carrying passengers, whether navigating the internal waters of a State or the navigable waters of the United States, and not engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territories.

Mr. REAGAN. If the bill is adopted in that form it will impose on public officers——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] has the floor.

Mr. O'NEILL. Why does not the gentleman from Texas have read the letter which the Secretary of the Treasury wrote to the Committee on Commerce in which he assents to the passage of the bill?

Mr. REAGAN. I have not that letter.

Mr. O'NEILL. You know where it is.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope it will be read.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced into the Senate for the purpose of correcting a construction that was placed upon the act of 1792 so far as it related to the class of boats engaged in the transportation of coal to the port of New York and adjacent ports from the anthracite coal-fields. For a number of years there has been from time to time a difficulty in the Departments of the Government in construing the act of 1792 so far as it related to that class of vessels. Whenever they have been required by an order of the Department to be enrolled and to take out license, applications have been made to the Departments and they have been relieved, until recently.

In order to fully understand how the coal trade is affected by the recent opinion of the Attorney-General it will be necessary for me to occupy a few moments in explaining to this House how this trade is carried on. The coal regions of Pennsylvania, particularly the anthracite regions, are reached by great lines of railway extending from the seaboard to the coal basins of Pennsylvania. In connection with those railway lines there are two or three canals also extending from the anthracite coal basins to the sea-coast on the eastern coast of New Jersey and terminating upon the waters of the Hudson River. Within about eight miles on the coast of New Jersey there are eight coal stations where the coal product of the anthracite regions, amounting to fifteen or twenty millions of tons annually, is brought by these railways and canals. Three of these coal stations are in the district known as the New York district; two of them are in the Newark district; two more of them in the Perth Amboy district. The coal is taken from these stations by means of barges and canal-boats and carried along the coast behind Staten Island and behind Long Island and along the Sound to the places of distribution. These vessels have no means of propelling themselves, but are carried along up the coast to the places of distribution by the employment of tug-power.

As I have said before, these boats have never been subject to these charges and impositions until by a recent decision of the law officer of the Government those boats engaged in the transportation of coal from these coaling stations along the coast are required to pay the charges incident to enrollment, to surveys, and to license.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania or anybody else know of a single boat, wholly or partly engaged in a canal, that has been stopped? Has not every boat that has been stopped been wholly engaged in the coasting trade?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I will answer the gentleman's question, not directly, but I will answer it fully and perfectly in the explanation which I propose to give of the scope of this bill.

Those boats engaged in transporting coal from the coal regions to the city of New York and elsewhere along the coast under the construction given to the act of 1874, as they were engaged partly upon the internal waters of the State were not subject to these charges while thus engaged. But, sir, the boats that are thus engaged are a part of the time engaged in transporting coal from the railway terminus along the coast and the navigable waters of the United States to the points of distribution at New York and places eastward of New York. The very moment they leave the internal waters of their State and engage in this coastwise trade, the same boats which are exempt while engaged in the internal waters of the State become subject to these charges; and many of the boatmen, finding it more to their advantage to engage in transporting coal along the coast only for a few miles to the points of distribution, are made subject to these charges, and their boats are seized because they are not licensed. There are now seized at Perth Amboy sixty-five of those canal-boats and barges engaged in that trade. By no construction that has ever been put upon this act of 1792 were they required to pay these duties until the opinion of the present Attorney-General was delivered and made public on the 18th of May. These charges fall upon a class of men that are ill able to bear them.

They are men of limited means. All they possess in the world is a single boat, which gives them occupation and affords them the means of subsistence. Their boats are required to be enrolled, and they are required to pay license-fees from the time their boats have been in the service, thus piling upon them in the shape of fees, penalties, and fines, from year to year, a sum of money that virtually amounts to a confiscation of their property; and it is to relieve that class of boatmen that this bill was introduced in the Senate of the United States and received the approval of the members of that body.

I have this morning submitted to an amendment in order to meet objections which have been made by gentlemen on the floor of this House, although the final passage of the bill may be put in jeopardy and leave the people engaged in this trade liable to have their property confiscated.

How much of this money thus charged to these boats goes into the coffers of the Federal Government? Nothing but the license fee, which amounts to a dollar and a half; the balance of all these charges imposed upon these boat-owners goes into the pockets of the officers, who are already receiving an adequate salary from this Government.

Since the depression of the coal business the business of transporting coal by this mode has afforded but a bare subsistence, and when the condition of this trade was made known to the Secretary of the Treasury he ordered the collector at the port of Perth Amboy to suspend further proceedings in the seizure of these vessels until the people could get relief through this Congress.

This bill meets the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I have here his letter which was written in response to an application and a presentation and examination of this very bill by him. He wrote in answer to my application, and addressing the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of this House said that he was in favor of the passage of this bill, in order that this difficulty might be relieved. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 20, 1879.

SIR: My attention has been called by members of your committee to the draught of a bill entitled "An act relating to vessels not propelled wholly by sail or internal motive power," (S. 671,) which has already received the favorable action of the Senate. This bill, as introduced in the Senate on the 16th instant, as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in effect exempted the classes of boats described therein from enrollment and license. The bill now proposes to suffer the enrollment and licensing of these boats to stand as provided in the act of April 17, 1874, (volume 18, part 3, United States Statutes, chapter 106,) but to abolish any fee or charge for such enrollment or license.

In its present form the bill will relieve the Department from much embarrassment in the execution of the law of 1874, and I offer no objection to its passage.

I return herewith the draught of the bill.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. REAGAN,
Chairman Committee on Commerce,
House of Representatives.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Speaker, the construction given to the act of 1792 and the act of 1874 by the Attorney-General, whose views of the question were embodied in the instruction by the Secretary of the Treasury to the collectors of these ports, changes the construction previously given to that law as applicable to barges and canal-boats navigating the public waters of the United States. As the construction of that act to-day stands, there is not a barge in the United States navigating exclusively the public waters of the United States—the great rivers of this country—engaged in the transportation of domestic commerce without sail and without steam, without any means of propulsion except the employment of hired power, but that under this construction of the law given by the Attorney-General is liable to pay these dues, and upon their neglecting to pay their property becomes forfeited to the United States.

Coal barges on the western waters of Pennsylvania, coal barges upon the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, and on the navigable tributaries of these great rivers, engaged in the transportation of the commerce of the country are subject to these charges, and it is to relieve these vessels from these impositions that this bill was introduced and passed through the Senate.

Now I will refer for a single moment to the view taken of that act of 1874 by the Secretary of the Treasury in his report made in 1877. Speaking of this act of 1874 he says:

In this connection I would call attention to the fact that a large number of vessels, as defined by section 3 of the Revised Statutes, propelled neither by steam nor sails, go to make up the tonnage of enrolled and licensed vessels, while a large class of vessels with no internal appliances for propulsion is exempt from enrollment and license under the act of April 18, 1874. These vessels consist mainly of barges and open flats engaged in the transportation of coal and lumber on the large navigable rivers of the country. For many years this class of vessels has been increasing, and the water-transportation of merchandise upon such rivers has been gradually passing from steam-vessels to barges and other craft of temporary structure, which are towed or propelled by steam or sail-vessels. The act of 1874 exempted canal-boats and boats employed on the internal waters of States from enrollment, so that a discrimination now practically exists between vessels propelled neither by steam nor sails, as regards their liability to enrollment, dependent simply upon the question whether they are or are not usually employed on the internal waters of a State in connection with their employment on navigable waters of the United States. The purely temporary character of many of these vessels renders it difficult to apply to them the provisions for enrollment that are applicable to vessels propelled by steam or sails, especially as they are so constructed as to admit neither of a permanent crew nor of a master who remains on board.

The discrimination as regards enrollment is, besides, a gratuitous cause of dissatisfaction among that portion of the mercantile community which makes use of craft not propelled directly by steam or sails. All these vessels should be subjected to a system of license and enrollment different from that now in force, or all should be exempted from enrollment.

Now it will be seen that under the act of 1874 a boat engaged in commercial transactions, partly upon the internal waters of a State and partly upon the navigable waters of the United States, was not subject to any of these charges. It will further be seen that there was a discrimination between classes of boats, so that a certain portion engaged upon the waters of the United States, owing to their temporary character, were not subject to these charges.

But how does it stand now? How is the question presented by the recent opinion of the Attorney-General? It does not depend, he says, upon the nature of the craft, but upon the use to which it is put. Therefore, if it be a craft that under the construction put upon the act of 1874 was not liable to these charges, yet if it is employed anywhere upon the public waters of the United States in the transportation of domestic commerce it becomes chargeable with these dues, without regard to the character of the craft employed for that purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill was attacked by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] upon the ground that its tendency was to relieve vessels of the class intended to be exempted from its operation, from inspection, and from the necessity of a survey, enrollment, and taking out of a license. I do not understand this act to accomplish any such thing. On the contrary, the gentleman is entirely mistaken in his construction of it as will appear from an examination of the bill itself. It provides:

That the provision of title 50 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be so construed as to require the payment of any fee or charge for the enrolling or licensing of vessels built in the United States and owned by citizens thereof, not propelled by steam or by internal motive power of their own, &c.

Does that exempt any vessel or any boat from taking out a license that is required by the provisions of the act of 1792 to take out a license?

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will allow me, the objection was that the bill exempts those boats from the payment of fees, which other vessels must pay; not to the taking out of a license.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I will read from the gentleman's remarks upon that point:

One further point to which I ask the earnest attention of the House. If this bill be passed we exempt from inspection, from enrollment, from license, vessels engaged in the coasting trade and open wide the door to smuggling upon the great lakes and on the Rio Grande frontier, thus doing infinite damage to the commerce of the United States.

It may be possible that the reporter misunderstood the remarks of the gentleman; but if he is correctly reported he did say to this House that the purpose of this bill was to exempt these boats from enrollment and from the taking out of a license; and it was upon that allegation that he predicated his charge here that it would open the door to smuggling.

I propose to answer both of those propositions and to show that the gentleman is entirely mistaken, and then to ask him as an honest man, and I know him to be one, to support this bill. It does not exempt any vessel from the necessity of taking out a license, if by the act of 1792 it is required to take out one. The only exemption is from those impositions and those charges made by the collector and put into his own pocket, and which never by law reach the Treasury of the United States or are required to go there.

But even if it were true that these boats would not be required to take out licenses, I deny that it would affect the question in the view that the gentleman has presented it, in the slightest degree whatever. Coasting vessels have no right as licensed vessels to engage in the transportation of foreign merchandise or the products of foreign labor or the products of foreign countries. A coasting vessel with or without a license that should engage in that trade would fall under the laws relating to foreign importations, to be found upon the statute-book. A vessel, even though licensed, that engages in the transportation of foreign goods, would be subject to seizure and forfeiture with its entire outfit.

A vessel has a right to carry domestic goods, the products of the industry, energy, and enterprise of the American people. If my friend intended to embrace that kind of business, then I ask him why it is not true that every train of cars that loads in Chicago and goes into New York City loaded down with the products of the industry of this country is not engaged in a contraband trade? I believe they are not required to take out a license; they are not required to be enrolled; they are not subject to these impositions. The hundred thousand miles of railway in this country, extending everywhere, built for the purpose of facilitating trade and commerce among the people of this country, are not taxed; and they are not engaged in smuggling, although they carry and distribute everywhere in this country the products of the labor and the capital of this land, adding to the comfort and convenience and wealth of this great nation.

Yet when a poor man with his little boat, loaded perhaps with the toil of men deep down in the bowels of the earth, with a few hundred tons of coal, seeks a market somewhere along the great national arteries of trade and commerce, his little boat is seized and confiscated. And I am sorry to say that we have gentlemen in this House who will hardly vote to relieve him from that imposition and injustice.

Mr. O'NEILL. Will my colleague be kind enough to state to the House the amount of money paid by the boatmen for enrollment and admeasurement, specifying how much goes into the pocket of the surveyor and how much into the Treasury of the Government.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I have here a statement taken from the books of the collector's office at Perth Amboy. The fee for admeasurement amounts to $16.50; for license, $1; for enrollment, fifty cents; making a total of $18 on each boat.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. How much of that does the Government get?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. One dollar—merely the fee for license.

Mr. WILSON. Where does the rest of the money go?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. The rest of the money is a part of the perquisites going into the pockets of the collector.

Mr. HUBBELL. Does the gentleman intend that the provisions of this bill shall apply to those large barges of one thousand tons or more used on the lakes?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I think the bill as amended will not apply to them; but as it stood before, I believe it would. I will ask the gentleman whether those barges take out license now.

Mr. HUBBELL. They are obliged to do so now; but under this bill they would not. Now I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman so as to see whether we cannot get some bill which will cover all these cases. In the last Congress this subject was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and the question of exempting these barges from these heavy taxes naturally arose. A bill prepared by the committee with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury was, upon a very exhaustive report, passed by the House.

Mr. ACKLEN. I have the bill here.

Mr. HUBBELL. But that bill was not allowed to pass in the Senate. I think a bill containing the provisions which at that time received the sanction of the House would meet every objection which gentlemen are now urging as to the hardships of the existing law, while it would at the same time afford all necessary safeguards for the protection of the Government against smuggling.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I will give the gentleman very briefly my views on that question.

Mr. HUBBELL. Will the gentleman allow me to read that bill?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I know what it is. The objection to the passage of that bill at the present time is simply that by its passage, instead of relieving the people who are suffering these hardships, you would put it beyond the ability of the Government to relieve them. Proceedings against those boats, as I have already stated, have been suspended for twelve days in order to enable those people to get relief from Congress. I cannot agree to substitute for this bill another which must start here as an original bill and which cannot get through the two Houses before the day of final adjournment.

Mr. HUBBELL. This bill will have to go to the Senate.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. It will go to the Senate for concurrence only in the amendments.

Mr. HUBBELL. The substitute I suggest would go in the same way.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. But I cannot consent to it. If I did I should abandon those people for whose relief I am pleading in favor of the passage of this bill.

Mr. HUBBELL. Will the gentleman allow the report which was made on the former bill to be read?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I cannot yield for that purpose.

Mr. HUBBELL. The pending bill is a very dangerous measure, I think.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. There is no sort of difficulty in regard to this bill. The idea that it will open the door to smuggling is the merest chimera. Whatever laws may be passed, smuggling will no doubt continue, as stealing and murder will. It is only by the vigilance of the Government officials that smuggling can be suppressed; and if you strike from the statute-book the entire act of 1792 there would still remain in full force every essential provision for the prevention of smuggling. Gentlemen mistake when they confound domestic commerce and the laws regulating domestic commerce with foreign commerce, out of which the practice of smuggling grows. Suppose you bring goods from a foreign country in a canoe, or as they used to bring them from Pembina, in a cart drawn by oxen. There is no enrollment, no license; how do you prevent goods from being brought in without the payment of duties? You subject the goods to forfeiture and the owner of them to fine and imprisonment, if he does not report his goods at the first collection office in the district that he reaches. The laws on that subject are as nearly perfect as they can be made; and it is idle twaddle for any one to say that the omission to give a coasting vessel a license is a free charter for that vessel to engage in foreign commerce. The bill before the House provides an exemption from these charges in respect only to boats owned by citizens of the United States and engaged in domestic commerce. This restriction ought to satisfy gentlemen that there is no risk of encouraging smuggling by the passage of the bill.

Another objection taken to the phraseology of this bill I will briefly notice. My friend from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] seems to think that because the bill speaks of sail-vessels and of vessels propelled in part by steam-power within themselves, it therefore includes vessels propelled by both steam and sail. Although in the bill the words are used in the alternative, divided by "or," he says that vessels possessing both sailing-power and steam-power will come within the scope of the bill, and be exempt from the payment of license.

Mr. ACKLEN. Does not the gentleman think that a construction which would be readily placed upon the bill?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Not by any lawyer under the sun.

Mr. ACKLEN. Why, then, did the gentleman make the motion to strike out?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I have moved to strike out the word "wholly."

Mr. ACKLEN. That is what I had reference to.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I have moved to strike out the word "wholly" for the simple reason that I was informed by gentlemen in this House that there was a class of boats navigating the upper lakes which sometimes used temporary masts, and I thought possibly the word "wholly" would exempt them from the necessity of paying dues to the Government; and for that reason I agreed to strike out the word "wholly," so as to exclude them from the operation of this law and to leave them, as they are now, liable to pay dues.

Mr. FIELD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.

Mr. FIELD. Why do you put in the word "contiguous?"

Not engaged in trade with contiguous foreign territory.

Why should the law not apply to trade with all foreign territories, the island of Cuba, for example? That is my first question. My second question is, if these vessels are to be enrolled and licensed, that are required by law to be enrolled and licensed, why should they not pay the customary fees?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. In answer to the gentleman's first question I will say, for the simple reason that a vessel without sails or without steam-power never could navigate the open ocean, and there is no possibility of its ever reaching any foreign territory unless it be contiguous territory. I hope, sir, that no member of this House would be guilty of the infinite folly of putting in the form of a law a declaration that a boat, an open boat, a flat, a canal boat, a barge, would ever be likely to find its way to any foreign territory not contiguous to this country.

Mr. HUBBELL. We have barges on the upper lakes which would come under this law that can go to Europe as well as any sail-boat ever constructed; vessels carrying two thousand tons.

I will answer the gentleman's other question. I want to know why a barge that has no motive power of its own, but is compelled to purchase its motive power wherever it moves, should have the same burden imposed upon it which you would impose upon a steam-vessel? That is my reason for exempting a barge that has no means of propulsion within itself; and it is a good and substantial reason.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman allow me an opportunity of making a few remarks upon this bill? I desire to have two or three minutes.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I will in a few moments give the gentleman as much time as he wants.

I was referring, in bringing to a conclusion my remarks on this bill, to the attitude of my friend from Louisiana, [Mr. ACKLEN,] who, in my judgment, instead of reaching the meat of this questton, has stuck fast in the bark. It is neither the province of a lawyer nor of a judge, in putting a construction on a statute, to take out two or three words and make the whole meaning of the statute turn upon them. He has to ascertain the spirit and the intent and purpose of the law and from that to determine its true meaning and purport. Now, the gentleman says that vessels propelled by sail or by steam would be subject to these charges; but if propelled by both steam and sail, then they would not be—they would be exempt. Is that the meaning and purport of this law? Would any court on earth put such a construction as that upon it—that the small sail-vessel shall pay these charges, that the large steamer shall pay these charges, but that the larger steamer that had both sail and steam shall be exempt? Do you think that would be a sensible construction? No, sir. If a vessel employs both sail and steam, then it is part of the time, perhaps, running by sail, part of the time by steam, and part of the time by both. Is not that a vessel propelled by steam or by sail within the meaning, spirit, and intent of this law?

Now, sir, I give you a notable example which is right before me in the construction which the Department put upon the act of 1874. If we take the literal words of that act, it does not apply to boats doing business partly in the interior waters of the State and partly in the public waters of the United States. I will give you the language of the act:

That the act to which this is a supplement shall not be so construed as to extend the provisions of said act to canal-boats or boats employed in the internal waters of any State.

The Department was asked to put a construction upon that act that the very moment the boat left the internal waters of the State, which it might be necessary to do in order to reach its place of destination, it would be subject to these charges; but that was not the purpose of this law. The Department knew that it was not the intent and meaning of this statute; that it was intended to embrace all boats engaged in trade upon the internal waters of a State where they might be required and were required to go beyond the internal waters to reach the point of the distribution of their cargoes; and in that view the Department has extended the literal provisions of this act in order to meet its spirit and intent.

Therefore, I apprehend that the Secretary of the Treasury with this bill before him understood it as lawyers would understand it and construed it to mean as lawyers would construe such a law in order to carry out its purpose, which was to exempt a certain class of boats that had neither sails nor steam, engaged in the transportation of domestic commerce along the coast of the United States; not from enrollment, but to exempt them from paying these excessive charges which in times of great financial depression such as exist in this country now bear heavily on the owners of that class of boats. It is to relieve them from these burdens that we ask the passage of this bill. I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. REAGAN. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] the right to control the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not occupied his hour. He has a right to yield a portion of his hour.

Mr. ACKLEN. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understood from the Chair yesterday that this debate was proceeding by unanimous consent. I know that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and myself had both to proceed for a very short time by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That was after the main question was ordered; but the main question has been lifted from the bill to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The debate is now open; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] has not occupied the whole of his hour.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] whatever time he desires, and if he does not occupy the whole of the residue of my hour, I shall claim the right to control it.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to make a remark or two upon this subject. The object of the law of 1874 when it was reported from the Committee on Commerce, of which I was then a member, was to exempt canal-boats and barges, used partly on canals and partly in passing from canals to other places, from the payment of these dues and fees.

For a long time there was no trouble in regard to this matter in the construction of the law, but there has been within the last few years a number of material changes all over the United States in the mode of ship-building and transportation; notably so, upon our great inland lakes, on the Hudson, and in the coasting trade upon our waters between the Atlantic, the bays of New York, and Long Island Sound.

There are now used, and necessarily used, to secure cheaper transportation for our own productions on our inland waters, a class of vessels unknown formerly. They have come into use within the last six or seven years. On the great lakes there are now propellers of ten, twelve, fourteen, and sixteen hundred tons burden, with propelling machinery of steam and with the power to go by sail or by wind, constructed for these lakes.

There are also constructed what are called consorts of these vessels. Immense barges are constructed, or the hulls of old steamboats are taken for the purpose, and immense barges of ten, twelve, fifteen, and eighteen hundred tons burden, with no masts at all, some of them with only a jury-mast, on which a sail can be used in case the line is broken during a storm, and which enables them to work their way to the shore or away from the breakers.

Now, that class of transportation on the lakes, and on the waters along our coasts, on Long Island Sound, and on our great bays, and on the sounds lying south of Norfolk and the inland waters there, and also upon our great interior rivers, is becoming, and from the very nature of the case will become, the mode of transportation of probably five-sixths of the internal productions of this country. Grain will be taken from Duluth, Chicago, Milwaukee, Buffalo, and Cleveland at cheaper rates than ever before, by means of these immense barges, towed by one barge, having propelling power.

There are scarcely any vessels built on our lakes with masts, and rigged either as a bark or schooner, or vessels of that kind.

Our commerce on the lakes has become almost entirely the commerce of these immense barges. You see towed together down the straits between the lakes a barge carrying two or three million feet of lumber, or carrying an immense freight of grain or corn or wheat, or coal upward and iron downward.

On the Mississippi River it is proposed to construct iron barges of light draught, with a great power of carriage, to take from Saint Louis and places higher up the river corn and grain destined for the foreign markets; to take it on these vessels to New Orleans, and there with the additional depth of water which the jetties have afforded for the entrance and passage of deep-draught vessels, take the products of the Mississippi Valley, in that direction, by barges to New Orleans and by vessels carrying immense freights to foreign countries. It is so all over this country.

Any one who has examined into this question will find that the entire mode of transshipment of articles of produce on our inland lakes, upon our inland rivers, and all up and down what is called the inland line of communication upon our coast from Maine to the Rio Grande, is changing every year.

Now there is no reason why these great barges, which are as helpless as cradles by themselves, with no power of locomotion within themselves, either by wind or steam, dependent entirely on another vessel to take them from port to port, should be hampered and subjected to the payment of these old-fashioned fees and duties for enrollment and tonnage which have for so many years crippled our commerce and forced upon the producers all over this broad land the necessity of paying these fees and exactions which have made transportation so troublesome and so expensive to the land.

I have hailed with great satisfaction the fact that our inland commerce had been from year to year exempted from unnecessary taxation; that the transportation and freight upon our inland waters of grain, of iron, of lumber, of coal, and all those products that can be carried in this class of vessels, were year by year and one by one relieved from these impositions.

Upon our great lakes there is an absolute necessity to the producers of our immense harvests there that there shall be cheap transportation to the seaboard. Our committees in this House have been laboring for years to devise some means by which this transportation of our inland waters, and up and down the inland waters of our coasts, may be cheapened. Report after report has been made, and silently, while all these efforts were being made, a new kind of ship-building has been established, a new mode of transportation has been found out by the seamen themselves for the transportation of freight at lower rates, thereby saving from one to five cents upon every bushel of wheat and corn transported to the seaboard; and also a great saving made upon the transportation of coal along the inland waters of our Atlantic coast.

Now, as there is no necessity for all these exactions, let this Congress in a spirit of justice as well as of liberality remove as far as can be done with safety everything which taxes both the producer and the consumer of this vast amount of material which is distributed up and down and back and forth throughout all our land.

One word more and I will not longer detain the House. This bill does not prevent the enrollment of these vessels, it does not do away with any of the safeguards providing for identifying these vessels; it does not do away with numbering the vessels, with registering them, with enrolling them, or with any of the means by which they can be identified and traced and followed for any violation of the law. They can be described just as well under this bill, if it should pass, as they can be now. It merely removes the unnecessary taxation upon the commerce, upon the transportation, upon the products of the country.

Mr. HUBBELL. Will my colleague yield to me for a question?

Mr. CONGER. Certainly.

Mr. HUBBELL. I want to ask the gentleman——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. MCLANE.) The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has expired, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] as next entitled to the floor.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. HUBBELL] wishes to ask me a question. Will the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] yield for that purpose?

Mr. KENNA. For a question only.

Mr. CONGER. My colleague represents so much of this great interest on our upper lakes——

Mr. KENNA. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HUBBELL. I concur with my colleague [Mr. CONGER] in the necessity of putting barges on the same basis as canal-boats. But I wish to ask him if there ought not to be some restrictions imposed by which the Treasury Department can be furnished with statistics of the amount of commerce transacted in this way?

Mr. CONGER. I can answer that question in a moment. Under the present law every vessel of every description on our lakes and inland waters and engaged in our coasting trade is required to have its manifest, upon which is stated whatever is received on the craft in the way of freight, whether it be baked beans or anything else.

Mr. HUBBELL. That is a licensed vessel.

Mr. CONGER. No. Each vessel must have a manifest, and whenever it takes on a cargo the items of that cargo are entered upon that manifest and the manifest is sworn to. Every addition to the cargo which is made during the voyage is entered upon the manifest, and everything taken from the cargo during the voyage is also noted on the manifest, and when the trip is finished the master of that vessel, of whatever kind it may be, must swear to the truth of the manifest.

Mr. HUBBELL. Now, I want to ask the gentleman, in all fairness, if he does not know that this matter of manifest applies only to enrolled and licensed vessels?

Mr. CONGER. This bill applies to enrolled licensed vessels.

Mr. HUBBELL. But it exempts them from enrollment.

Mr. CONGER. Not from enrollment or license; but it exempts them from fees, from those customary exactions which amount sometimes to three hundred or four hundred or five hundred dollars a trip on our lakes. It provides that those exactions shall not be imposed upon the transportation of the products of our people.

Mr. KENNA. As is known to such members of the House who paid any attention to the debate upon this subject on a former occasion, I stated at the time my opposition to this bill in its present form. My opposition was based upon this view of the bill: as I understand the facts, the Secretary of the Treasury, supported by the opinion of the Attorney-General upon the act of 1874, which has been alluded to, and the opinion of the Attorney-General in interpreting and construing the Revised Statutes, has heretofore held that the law operated to exempt from enrollment and license and the payment of fees all of the classes of vessels named in this bill. Under a recent decision of the Attorney-General, however, which reverses that construction of the statutes, it has been held that certain vessels named in this bill are not exempt by the act of 1874. This opinion was respected by the Secretary of the Treasury, who instructed his subordinates accordingly.

Now, my apprehension was that this bill, which undertakes to define the exemptions and exceptions that have existed heretofore under our laws, would be construed to embrace the only authorized exemptions, and that therefore, under the construction which would be placed upon it, flatboats, barges, coal-boats, &c., on our inland waters would be compelled to be enrolled and licensed. In my previous remarks to-day I referred to a telegram which I had received this morning from the Secretary of the Treasury, stating that such would not be his construction of the bill, and I then announced that my difficulty in regard to the measure was at an end. I have, however, since received from the Secretary of the Treasury another telegram, in which he states substantially that under the act of 1874, according to the recent interpretation of it by the Attorney-General, every flatboat, barge, or boat of any character not propelled by steam or sail on any of the inland waters of the country, would be required to be registered and enrolled.

Mr. Speaker, this is a new interpretation of the law, and would impose upon that class of craft which carry nine-tenths of the heavy commerce of our inland waters a burden which they have never heretofore suffered. With the view of remedying this difficulty (and it was in this connection that I felt interested in the bill) I desire to offer the following amendment, to be inserted at an appropriate place:

Nor shall this or any existing law be construed to require the enrolling, registering or licensing of any flatboat, barge, or like craft for carriage of freight, employed on the interior waters of the United States.

The whole object and scope of this amendment is to give such construction to the navigation laws of the country as they have always received from the Department up to the time of the rendering of this recent decision. This amendment will in no wise affect the other objects of the bill in reference to vessels engaged in the coasting trade.

Mr. BARBER. Will the gentleman have the kindness to read the latest communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, to which he has referred.

Mr. KENNA. I will read it:

Coal-boats and barges on that part of the Kanawha River—

The inquiry addressed to the Department referred particularly to the Kanawha River; but this ruling of the Department would apply as well to the Ohio and other rivers—

Coal-boats and barges on that part of the Kanawha River not made navigable by locks and dams—

And this would apply to the whole river, because it is all naturally navigable, and always has been for the shipping of heavy freight by this class of boats—would not be exempt from enrollment or license under the act of April 17, 1874.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that there can be no reason for imposing this burden on boats of that character on inland waters; for the only object of the enrollment and license is that vessels may not improperly and unlawfully engage in a class of business upon which the laws of the country have imposed restrictions. That consideration cannot apply to these inland waters, because in that case there is no such danger.

Mr. HUBBELL. Will the gentleman allow me to add to his amendment the following proviso?

Provided, however, That the masters of registered, enrolled, or licensed vessels towing or propelling vessels of the character herein described, shall be liable to produce manifests of the cargoes of vessels so towed or propelled to the collector at the port of entry, or the surveyor or collector at any port of delivery nearest the place at which the delivery of any cargo of a vessel so towed or propelled shall be completed.

Mr. KENNA. I am not prepared to say that I would be hostile to that proposition; but it has no relation to the amendment which I desire to offer, and I would very much prefer that the gentleman should submit it as an independent amendment to some other part of the bill.

Mr. WARD. Under the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. KENNA,] would not vessels propelled by steam be exempt from enrollment and licensing?

Mr. KENNA. Certainly not. If such could be the construction of my amendment, I am very willing to change the phraseology. That was certainly not the purpose of the language. It is designed merely to exempt from enrolling and licensing "any flatboat, barge, or like craft."

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman explain what he means by the phrase "like craft?"

Mr. KENNA. I will change the phraseology of my amendment so as to relieve it of all doubt. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] with the understanding that my time shall not all be consumed.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, if under existing laws any unnecessary burden is imposed upon the commerce of the country, I would cheerfully join in removing such burden. I feel somewhat perplexed in this discussion from the earnestness with which gentlemen urge this bill as a matter of justice. It is certainly very far from my desire to interpose an obstacle to the enactment of any proper law. I am compelled, however, to believe that there is something which does not fully come to the surface in this debate. It is urged that the passage of this bill is necessary, in the language of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for the relief of those engaged in transporting by canal minerals dug from the bowels of the earth to markets on the sea-coast. I wish to show that persons engaged in that business are not affected by this legislation. In this connection I wish to read the telegram which was read by my friend from West Virginia, [Mr. KENNA,] and to comment upon the construction which he places on that telegram. There must be some egregious misunderstanding if his interpretation of that telegram is correct. I will read it:

Coal boats and barges on that part of the Kanawha River not made navigable by locks and dams would not be exempt from enrollment or license under the act of April 17, 1874.

Coal boats and barges would not be exempt from license. Why? They would not be exempt from license when propelled by sail or by steam.

Mr. KENNA. There is not a boat of that kind on those waters.

Mr. REAGAN. Now, in regard to both those questions, I beg the attention of the House for a moment to the law as it stands to-day for the purpose of demonstrating that it is not the object of this bill to relieve the class of persons referred to. I think I can show it has an entirely different object.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. I would be glad to go through with my statement; but I will hear the gentleman's question and answer it if I can.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Do you contend that canal-boats engaged in carrying coal from the terminus of the railroad on the eastern coast of New Jersey along the coast of New Jersey up the inland bay of New York to the port of New York are by the terms of that act of 1874, or by any construction that has ever been put upon it, exempt from these dues?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not so contend. On the contrary, I contend that they are subject to these dues and that it was the intention of this bill to relieve that class and other classes of vessels engaged in the coast trade from the obligation to be enrolled and licensed. I am endeavoring to get at that point, and I will be just as brief as I can; but it seems I cannot come to the discussion of this subject without being hedged in at both ends and all around. I will read from the act of 18th February, 1793:

Every vessel of twenty tons or upward, other than registered vessels found trading between district and district, or between different places in the same district, or carrying on the fishery without being enrolled and licensed, or if less than twenty tons and not less than five tons, without a license, in the manner provided by this title, if laden with merchandise the growth or manufacture of the United States only, distilled spirits excepted, or in ballast, shall pay the same fees and tonnage in every port of the United States at which she may arrive as vessels not belonging to a citizen of the United States; and if she have on board any articles of foreign growth or manufacture, or distilled spirits, other than sea stores, she shall, together with her tackle, apparel, and furniture, and the lading found on board, be forfeited.

Now, it was thought that that act of 1793 imposed undue burdens on boats engaged in the canal trade and in the trade in the internal waters of the United States. That means in waters inside of the headlands of the sea as contradistinguished from the waters outside the headlands of the sea. Now, then, to relieve that trouble the act of 1874 was passed, to which I beg attention for one moment. That provides:

That the act to which this is a supplement—

The one I have just read—

shall not be so construed as to extend the provisions of said act to canal-boats or boats employed on the internal waters or canals of any State—

Clearly exempting all the boats that any of the gentlemen have spoken of—

and all such boats, excepting only such as are provided with sails or propelling machinery of their own, adapted to lake or coastwise navigation, and excepting such as are employed in trade with the Canadas, shall be exempt from the provisions of said act and from the payment of all customs and other fees under any act of Congress.

Now, sir, that exempts by law all canal-boats and other light boats trading on canals and in the waters of a State, in all the internal waters, whether it be the rivers or the bays or the lakes, wherever they are internal waters within a State. And to show that that construction is maintained both by the Attorney-General and by the Secretary of the Treasury I shall tax the patience of the House while I again call attention to the opinion of the Attorney-General of January 13, 1879, and to the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury of May 17, 1879. The letter of the Attorney-General is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1879.

SIR: Upon the 5th of September last you submitted the following question:

Whether, under Revised Statutes, section 4371, as amended by the act of April 18, 1874, a boat answering to the description of a canal-boat, of more than five tons burden, is required to be documented as a vessel of the United States if found trading between different ports or districts, on navigable waters of the United States, provided such boat has never been used upon a canal, was not intended for such use, and does not in its present employment enter a canal? You explain that your inquiry relates to such craft devoted wholly to the transportation of coal from Perth Amboy, New Jersey, to New York City.

That is, boats not engaged in the canal trade at all.

In my opinion, it was the intention of Congress that such vessel, so used, should be treated, if laden with domestic freight, as a foreign vessel; and if loaded with foreign goods, should be forfeited, (under Revised Statutes, section 4371,) unless licensed as provided by the laws regulating the coasting trade and the documenting of vessels engaged in such trade. The act of April 18, 1874, dispenses with the necessity of such a license "to canal-boats or boats employed on the internal waters or canals of any State." (18 Stats., 31.)

It is the use made of the vessel, and not its mechanical structure, that determines whether or not it is entitled to the exemption allowed by this statute.

That is, it depends on whether it is used as a canal-boat or is used in the coasting trade.

Vessels employed as stated in your question are not excepted from the operation of Revised Statutes, section 4371, by the act of April 18, 1874.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Upon that the Secretary of the Treasury writes a letter addressed to the surveyor of customs, at Albany, New York:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 17, 1879.

SIR: Your letter of the 14th instant is received, in which you direct attention to a contradiction between printed decision No. 3717, September 5, 1878, in relation to documenting canal-boats, and Department letter of the 30th ultimo, to you, on the same subject.

Decision No. 3717 was based upon the opinion of the Attorney-General, dated October 19, 1875, (synopsis 2478)—

A different opinion from what I have just read—

which in effect construed the law of April 18, 1874, (Statutes at Large, volume 13, part 3, page 31,) to exempt from enrollment and license all vessels "answering to the description of a canal-boat" which were not provided with propelling machinery of their own and not engaged in trade with Canada.

This decision was not deemed satisfactory, and on September 5, 1878, the question was again submitted to the Attorney-General, and a copy of his reply, dated January 13 last, is inclosed.

That is the one I have just read.

In his latter opinion the Attorney-General takes the ground that a vessel is not entitled to be designated as a canal-boat within the meaning of the law of April 18, 1874, unless she is employed in whole or in part upon a canal.

This ruling is in consonance with the opinion of this Department, and the following rules are laid down for your future guidance in relation to these vessels:

Canal-boats having no propelling machinery of their own and not engaged in trade with Canada, but which are employed wholly or in part upon canals or the internal waters of a State, are exempted from enrollment and license by act of April 18, 1874.

2. Canal-boats, so called, which are engaged in the coasting trade exclusively within the navigable waters of the United States, are not exempted by the act cited, and, unless they fall within the provisions of section 4385, Revised Statutes, should be provided with marine documents.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS, Albany, New York.

Upon that it is perfectly clear that any canal-boat or like boat engaged not only on canals but on the inland waters of the States is not subject to these license fees nor to enrollment, because they are exempted from it.

A word now in relation to the point presented in the telegram which has been read by the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. KENNA.] Under our laws the system of enrollment, registration, and licensing and a system of inspection to give security to life and property have been adopted, which in part apply to vessels engaged on the rivers and on the inland lakes, whether propelled by sail or steam, not to vessels not propelled by sail or steam. Another part of the system applies to the enrollment, registration, and licensing of the class of vessels engaged in the coasting trade of the United States, and the third part of the regulations relate to the enrollment, registration, and licensing of vessels engaged in the foreign trade.

It was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] that of the large fees collected out of this inspection not one dollar goes into the Treasury. That was a very grievous mistake. It has been repeated over and over again, and gentlemen who have not examined the subject may believe it to be true that this money does not go into the Treasury.

A MEMBER. Where does it go?

Mr. REAGAN. I will tell you. We have a board of supervising inspectors with a Supervising Inspector-General at an expense, I believe, of three or four hundred thousand dollars a year. It is not paid out of the general fund of the Treasury. The salaries of these officers and the expenses of keeping up the board and of licensing, enrolling, and registration of vessels are paid out of the funds charged upon the vessels, which are paid into the Treasury for the purpose of meeting the expenses of keeping up this board of inspection. I call attention to a single section of the Revised Statutes, section 4461, which is as follows:

SEC. 4461. The salaries of the supervising inspector-general, of all supervising inspectors, local inspectors, assistant inspectors, and clerks, provided for by this title, together with their traveling and other expenses when on official duty, and all instruments, books, blanks, stationery, furniture, and other things necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this title, shall be paid for, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, out of the revenues received into the Treasury from the inspection of steam-vessels, and the licensing of the officers of such vessels, which revenues, or so much of them as may be necessary for these purposes, shall be permanently appropriated therefor.

Each member of the board of supervising inspectors makes a report of all the revenues received there for licensing vessels or the officers who command the vessels, and that fund goes into the Treasury to meet the expenses of this board of inspectors and their assistants and clerks. This system was brought about by the demands of the commerce of the country for the purpose of giving greater security to life and property on vessels that navigate the lakes and bays of this country. It overcomes the dangers to life and property. It reduces the amount of insurance required upon these vessels. This system of supervising inspectors was adopted and applied to the three different classes of shipping to which I have referred—the river shipping, the coastwise shipping, and the ocean shipping. That system with all its advantages is kept up and preserved by the fees which the gentlemen seem to suppose go into the pockets of the officers.

Mr. WARD. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to section 4461 of the Revised Statutes?

Mr. REAGAN. The truth undoubtedly is, and it is referred to in the finance report for 1877, to which I call attention, that a new condition of things has grown up, in this, that a large part of the coasting trade of this country is now being done by vessels which are not licensed and are not authorized to be run without license, and some legislation may be necessary to designate their positions and the circumstances under which they shall be enrolled and licensed. It is no doubt true, as is said here in this report:

The discrimination as regards enrollment is, besides, a gratuitous cause of dissatisfaction among that portion of the mercantile community which makes use of craft not propelled directly by steam or sails. All these vessels should be subjected to a system of license and enrollment different from that now in force or all should be exempted from enrollment.

It may be, sir, that legislation is necessary, and I think from all I can learn that legislation is necessary—not that sort of legislation which comes up and is acted upon without mature examination by a committee to ascertain how far the internal commerce of the country is to be affected by it.

It often happens in the history of legislation that, with the very best intentions and at a time when we are meaning to do that which is best for the people, we really do the very worst thing for the people. And my apprehension now is that hasty legislation on this subject would result, like many other things done with good intentions, in great calamity to the commercial interests of the country.

I do not oppose giving relief so far as the justice of the case requires it; I shall be glad to aid in doing it. But in doing it I do not wish to disregard and overthrow the present system of laws, to produce confusion in the laws now existing for the licensing and enrollment of vessels of the three classes to which I have referred.

I must say again that my attention was called to this subject more by the fact that upon reading the law and examining the opinion of the Attorney-General and the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury I discovered that what was asked for was certainly not placed upon the true ground and not upon the tenable ground. I confess that that surprised me. It was stated that the relief asked was for the benefit of canal-boats, while the law and the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury are clear and specific that it cannot be for the relief of canal-boats or for other boats navigating the internal waters of the country.

The very explanation made in response to my question by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] shows what I have no doubt is the truth, that this bill is intended to relieve from license or registration vessels engaged solely in what we designate as the coasting trade. It may be true that relief should be had, but it should be a relief which will not commit any wrong while we are extending the relief desired.

Suppose, in view of the things mentioned by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] of the growing up of a class of vessels upon which a vast amount of commerce is being transported by means of tug-boats, we open the whole coasting trade to that class of vessels; I mean the trade along the Atlantic coast, the Gulf coast, and the coasts of the lakes. Suppose that we bring unlicensed vessels of large tonnage and free from these expenses into competition with other vessels propelled by sail or by steam, and compel those vessels licensed under the law to submit to an expense which we do not impose upon this other class of vessels, which can be run at less expense in identically the same trade, would that be right? Can any one imagine that that would be right and just? Does any one believe the next session of Congress would not witness the presenting here of protests from the shipping interests all along our coasts against the injustice inflicted upon our coastwise shipping, and asking that the same relief be extended to vessels on our rivers propelled by steam, and to vessels on the coasts and on our lakes propelled by steam or sail, in order to place them on an equal footing.

Again, as was correctly stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RYON,] this bill does not exempt these vessels from enrollment; it requires the enrollment and licensing to be gone through with, but makes no provision to pay for the licensing and enrollment. Now, the Congress of the United States may be competent to command our revenue officers to license and enroll these vessels without compensation; but when we do that we must expect, upon every ground of right and justice, that at the next session of Congress these officers will present a bill of their fees, as specified under the law, and demand that Congress shall pay them from the general revenues of the country, because they have been compelled to perform this service without charge upon the vessel or its owner.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Are not all these revenue officers salaried officers—officers who receive salaries from the Government?

Mr. REAGAN. Some of these officers are salaried officers.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Is not the collector of a port a salaried officer?

Mr. REAGAN. But many of these fees go to a purpose which I have mentioned, to sustain, as I understand, the board of supervisory inspectors, a board wisely created by the law in the past in order to give greater security to life and property, and which has done much in the interest of humanity, and much to secure the progress and success of our American shipping both inland and ocean.

There are other features of this bill which I desired to discuss, but I will not detain the House longer, except to say that I would be glad if it would accord with the feelings and views of those gentlemen who are interested in this matter to consent to the reference of this bill to a committee. When I see the sincere interest manifested in this subject by good men, I sometimes suspect my position; yet when I read the law and listen to the arguments upon the subject, I cannot doubt that the purpose is different from the one stated to the House. I cannot doubt that this bill has for its object a change of the law and its relations to the coastwise navigation, and that it deserves careful investigation at our hands. I would hope that gentlemen interested in this bill would consent to a reference of this bill to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KLOTZ. Never.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman says "never." But if he wants a fair and just bill, one that will subserve the general commercial interest of the country; if we do not wish to give class advantages, to give unjust advantages, would he say "never?" I think it is because this bill does give class advantages, because it will be wrong legislation, because it imposes burdens upon some for the benefit of others, that this persistent effort is made to rush this bill through the House without the deliberate investigation of a committee. If there is anything from which this country has suffered which is worse than others it is the unjust discriminating and class legislation which loads one part of the American people with burdens and debts and poverty for the benefit of other parts. It is because I believe this bill belongs to that category that I contest with gentlemen for whom I have the greatest respect the desirability of passing the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. I would like to put a question to the gentleman from Texas, not to embarrass him. I suppose he does not doubt that the Treasury Department knows what legislation it needs in order to carry out the laws fairly and properly. He must know that there have been embarrassments in regard to the construction of the act of 1874, and out of those embarrassments came the instructions to collectors and surveyors of ports relative to the enrollment and admeasurement of these vessels. Now, those instructions having been given, and the Treasury Department being desirous that this bill be passed, can we not safely pass it in the interest of commerce? Can it do any harm?

Mr. REAGAN. All I have to say in reply to that question is this: I respect very much the ability of the Secretary of the Treasury, and any opinion of his upon a question of this kind, where he had given his opinion deliberately with the facts before him, would command my respect. But here we stand with the law of the land and his own constructions confronting us, and draw out arguments to the effect that the Secretary of the Treasury knows what he is doing, knows that he is limiting the act of 1874 to boats used wholly or partly in canals.

I cannot see the need of the relief which gentlemen are demanding; it seems to me that they really want a law which will affect the coastwise trade. I wish I could remember the passage about him who does not come in at the front door but climbeth up the back way. I do not like this manner of approaching subjects by the back way—by indirection—especially great subjects like this. I would rather see them met frankly. If gentlemen come here and say, "We desire a modification of the laws in reference to the coastwise navigation of the United States," I will join with them in considering any proposed modifications necessary to give relief. But I do not like this way of changing the navigation laws in relation to the coastwise trade under the pretense that they have reference to canal-boats, which, in fact, need no legislation for protection.

Mr. O'NEILL. The objectionable word "wholly" has been struck out from this bill, which shows that the friends of the bill are ready and willing to put it in proper shape.

Mr. KENNA. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is right in his position in reference to the interior waters of the country, the amendment which I have already indicated cannot by any possible construction do harm to any one. If, on the other hand, the gentleman be wrong and the Secretary of the Treasury right in his construction, then the amendment is necessary. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nor shall this or any existing law be construed to require the enrolling, registering or licensing of any flatboat, barge, or like craft for carriage of freight, not propelled by sail or by internal motive power of its own, on the interior rivers of the United States.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are no exterior rivers. I suggest that the gentleman omit the word "interior."

Mr. KENNA. I will accept the gentleman's suggestion. The original draught contained the words "interior waters;" and the word "rivers" was afterward substituted. Let the amendment be modified by striking out the word "interior."

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker, I believe that, being recognized in my own right, I have one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman from Louisiana is recognized in his own right.

Mr. ACKLEN. How does the Chair understand the matter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that the gentleman from West Virginia yielded the floor to the gentleman.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman from West Virginia said that he closed his remarks. I then appealed to the Chair for recognition, and have been recognized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana is certainly entitled to one hour, if the gentleman from West Virginia surrendered the floor.

Mr. ACKLEN. Very good. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce; and I demand the previous question on that motion.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) And on the bill and amendments.

Mr. ACKLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I hope the House will vote down the motion to refer.

Mr. ACKLEN. Allow me to explain to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I make this motion for the purpose of——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Louisiana that debate is not in order.

Mr. ACKLEN. I presume that by unanimous consent I can make an explanation.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I object. I want a vote.

The question being taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 21, noes 25.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the question was not understood.

Mr. ACKLEN. I hope the Chair will restate the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman make the point of order that no quorum voted?

Mr. ACKLEN. I must do so, and insist on a count by tellers unless the Chair will be kind enough to restate the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will restate the question by unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN. The question was not understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) On what?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the motion to refer.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) And upon the bill and amendments.

Mr. COX. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at two o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. KING: Memorial of the constitutional convention of Louisiana, asking for the establishment of a naval and marine school at the port of New Orleans—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MONROE: The petition of F. B. Case and others, of Norwalk, Ohio, against the passage of the free leaf-tobacco bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa: Papers relating to the claim of Homer Fellows, for services rendered as a messenger, Doorkeeper's department, House of Representatives, Forty-fifth Congress—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. WARNER: The petition of Mrs. Isabella Kortz and 110 others, against any change in the revenue laws that will promote the interest of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 26, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

NAMING OF A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The CHIEF CLERK [Mr. F. E. SHOBER] called the Senate to order and said: I read a communication this day received from the President pro tempore, addressed to the Secretary of the Senate:

THURSDAY, June 26, 1879.

SIR: Being still too unwell to attend the Senate to-day, I name, under Rule 4, Senator EATON to perform the duties of the Chair until the adjournment of the Senate to-day. I expect to be in attendance to-morrow.

Very respectfully,

A. G. THURMAN.

Colonel BURCH,
Secretary United States Senate.

Mr. EATON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer of the Senate for to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to renew the notice I gave yesterday morning, that after the conclusion of the morning business I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2275) extending the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands," approved March 3, 1877, until the 1st day of October, 1880.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I present the petition of Seth Griggs, praying to be allowed a rehearing and re-examination of his claims against the Republic of New Grenada. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that I have presented the petition by request, and without knowing anything in regard to the merits of the matter.

Mr. FERRY presented the memorial of Julia A. Upton and 250 other women, citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against the repeal of the amended internal-revenue law of March 1, 1879, or any change or modification of the same to promote the interest of dealers in spirituous liquors; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

CENTENNIAL COMMISSION REPORTS.

Mr. WINDOM. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 113) to provide for the purchase of the stereotype plates of the final reports of the centennial commission upon the centennial exhibition of 1876, which the committee recommend shall pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire immediate action?

Mr. WINDOM. I should like immediate action. I think there will be no objection to the joint resolution.

Mr. PADDOCK. I must interpose an objection to immediate action, for I have given notice already that I desire to call up a bill.

Mr. WINDOM. This will not take two minutes, I think.

Mr. PADDOCK. My bill will not take any time.

Mr. WINDOM. I give notice that at the earliest moment I shall call up the joint resolution for action. The Senator from Nebraska objects to its present consideration.

Mr. PADDOCK. I withdraw my objection on the representation of the Senator from Minnesota that it will take no time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It appropriates $8,600 to purchase the stereotpye plates of the final reports of the centennial commission upon centennial exhibition of 1876, as transmitted by the United States centennial commission, the plates being now in the hands of the centennial board of finance, to be delivered, with the copyright duly assigned, to the Public Printer.

Mr. WINDOM. I will explain the joint resolution in one minute. The Senate and House have already passed a resolution ordering the printing of these reports. The board of finance have, at their own expense, printed a large number of them, and the stereotype plates are all prepared and ready for use. As we are informed, it cost to produce these plates some $60,000. I hold in my hand an estimate from the Public Printing Office, stating that to reproduce them, to set the type and to stereotype the plates, would cost from thirty to thirty-five thousand dollars. They can be purchased for $8,600. It will be a clear saving to the Government of the difference between the cost of setting them up and what we are to pay for them, a difference of about $25,000.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. And it will save a year's time.

Mr. WINDOM. It would take a year's time to place them in the condition they now are. In other words, the passage of this joint resolution will save some $25,000 and one year's time in doing a work which we have already directed to be done by act of Congress. The committee are unanimous in reporting the bill.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let the joint resolution be read again.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Has the joint resolution come from the Committee on Printing? Does it come from any committee?

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know that it has been referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think it had better go to that committee. It is a matter that properly belongs to that committee and I think it had better be referred to the Committee on Printing for their consideration.

Mr. WINDOM. It came from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom it was regularly referred, and unless there is some special objection made to it I think it had better be acted upon now. Of course it is subject to the objection of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It ought to be referred to the Committee on Printing. Of course they are familiar with that subject, and know what the value of these plates will be to the Government. I think, therefore, it would be better for the joint resolution to follow the regular order and go to that committee.

Mr. WINDOM. It is a regular appropriation, and I think no rule requires such a measure to go to the Committee on Printing. The Senate may send it there if it desires, but it will take time and may defeat the object, and it will cost the Government $25,000 more if action is not taken in this matter.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The joint resolution under consideration was referred regularly to the Committee on Appropriations. As to whether that reference was right or wrong, it is not necessary now to speak. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations consulted the chairman of the Committee on Printing. He considered the subject to some extent and told me this morning that he was in favor of it. I see no occasion whatever for its reference to the Printing Committee. If it had been referred to the Committee on Printing when it came here, I should have made no objection; and I may have thought it proper that it should go there; but it has been considered by the Committee on Appropriations. It makes an appropriation for a specific thing, and I presume that is the reason why it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I know nothing about that, however; I had nothing to do with the reference; but I see no necessity whatever now for its reference to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WINDOM. I will add to what the Senator says that it is not a question whether these reports shall be printed, for we have already by an act approved June 20, 1878, directed them to be printed. It is a mere question whether you will set up the type and stereotype the plates at a cost of from $30,000 to $35,000 to do the work which has been ordered to be done, or whether you will buy the same thing for $8,600. The board of finance is a private corporation and has been offered $8,500 for these plates. They desire that the Government shall have them rather than that they should go into private hands.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the joint resolution has been considered by the Committee on Appropriations, I do not know that I shall insist upon its going to any other committee. I was not aware when I made the inquiry whether it had come from any committee. I supposed it had not been considered by any committee, but I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that it has been considered and reported by his committee, and therefore I interpose no objection.

Mr. WINDOM. I stated when I reported the joint resolution that it came from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not hear the Senator.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLASSIFICATION, ETC., OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. McDONALD. I send to the Secretary's desk a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and I ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 23, 1879.

SIR: In the act passed at the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, approved March 3, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1879, (pamphlet laws, chapter 182, page 377,) provision is made for a commission to consist of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Director of the United States Geological Survey, and other civilians to be appointed by the President. It is provided that "it shall be the duty of this commission to report to Congress within one year from the time of its organization: first, a codification of the present laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain; second, a system and standard of classification of public lands, as arable, irrigable, timber, pasturage, swamp, coal, mineral lands, and such other classes as may be deemed proper, having due regard to humidity of climate, supply of water for irrigation, and other physical characteristics; third, a system of land-parceling surveys adapted to the economic uses of the several classes of lands; and, fourth, such recommendations as they may deem wise in relation to the best method of disposing of the public lands of the western portion of the United States to actual settlers."

The language above quoted from the act will, I think, warrant me in saying that the work of this commission is of great importance to the country, and may result in a radical change in the methods of surveying and disposing of the public lands, which amount to more than one thousand millions of acres, the value of which may, with reason, be variously estimated at from one thousand to many thousand millions of dollars, depending upon the classification and the value given to each class; and the manner of disposal and any action having in view proper legislation in regard to the classification, valuation, and disposal of such an amount of property cannot fail to be a matter of great moment to the people of the United States, who own it.

Entertaining the views above expressed, I venture to suggest to you and through you to Congress the opinion that it would be very desirable for that body to appoint a sub-committee from the Committees on Public Lands in the Senate and House of Representatives to co-operate, as far as may be consistent and practicable, in view of their other duties, with the commission.

If such committee were appointed and should visit the various portions of the country wherein the public lands are situated and investigate the subjects which it is made the duty of the commission to report upon, wise legislation and consequent good would result from their labor.

Hoping that the suggestions herein contained may meet with your approval, I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

J. A. WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner.

(A communication similar to this has been addressed to the chairman of the House Committee on Public Lands.)

Hon. JOSEPH E. MCDONALD, United States Senate,
Chairman Senate Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McDONALD. The Committee on Public Lands of the Senate have had that communication under consideration, and have also interchanged views with the Committee on Public Lands of the House. The result is that the committee direct me to report to the Senate a concurrent resolution. I desire before any action is taken upon the resolution to have it read for information. As desired by the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, [Mr. HEREFORD,] I send to the desk a similar communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to that committee, embracing the same subject. It will not be necessary to read it, as the communication already read fully sets forth the views of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and this communication I accompany with a similar resolution providing for a sub-committee of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

I ask that the resolution I have sent to the Secretary's desk providing for a sub-committee of the Committee on Public Lands, in response to the communication of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, may be now read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring therein,) That the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate and Committee on Public Lands of the House be each authorized to appoint a sub-committee, to consist of not exceeding three members of said committees, to act in aid of the commission, authorized under the "act of March 3, 1879, charged with the duty of codifying the laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain, and provide for the classification and sale of the public lands, and other duties therewith connected," with power to sit in vacation. And any expenses incurred in the discharge of said duties shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House respectively upon the certificate of the chairmen of said committees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What disposition does the Senator from Indiana desire shall be made of the resolution?

Mr. McDONALD. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana how many committees and sub-committees of the two Houses have been now authorized to sit during the vacation, if he can tell me?

Mr. McDONALD. I am entirely unable to answer that inquiry. I can simply say to the Senator from New York that this resolution is absolutely necessary to carry out a suggestion made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in connection with the commission which the act of Congress of last session authorized to be organized; and in the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office it is very proper. The communication has been read to the Senate. The Senator from New York was not present at the time; but if attention was paid to it, it would be seen very clearly I think that this is proper, however many other sub-committees may have been authorized to sit during the vacation.

Mr. CONKLING. I have been present in the Senate every moment since coming from a meeting of one of the committees of the Senate which I was this morning attending. The Senator from Indiana is right in saying that I did not hear the communication read. It was not my purpose at all to impugn the propriety or the motive of this resolution, far from it. I rose, however, to call attention to a fact (I believe it is a fact) that the number of committees and sub-committees of the Senate and the House already authorized to sit in vacation, many of them authorized to proceed here or there or everywhere, to make the tour of the continent if they choose, during the vacation, exceeds in number very much anything of the sort that has happened before. That is my belief and impression. I do not know how many of these committees have been thus authorized, but reading day after day of authority given now to one committee and then to another, and then to a sub-committee, to sit in vacation, and to proceed to different places, it strikes me as being something far beyond anything that has occurred before. Of this particular resolution I do not venture to say anything.

Mr. McDONALD. If it is the desire of any Senator, I will ask that the communication be again read. As it was read quite early in the session, it may not have been fully noticed.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not ask for its reading. I know the Senator from Indiana well enough to presume without evidence that he does not offer a resolution of this sort unless he has some reason for doing it. I say again, I do not rise to aim any remarks at this particular resolution, but to call attention to what seems to me a policy far exceeding anything of the sort we have ever had before in the experience of Congress.

Mr. McDONALD. I would rather that the whole subject should be fully understood by the Senate and by every Senator. The communication from the Commissioner of the General Land-Office was caused by the formation of a commission charged with the duty of classifying the public lands and codifying the present land laws, and also of examining into the condition of the public lands with reference to the question whether in regard to those lands still unsold there is not a necessity for some very decided change in our system of surveys and sales.

It is well known, of course, to all Senators that a very great portion of the public lands is still in those States and Territories embracing the western and central portion of the continent, and that they are divided into lands that can only be cultivated by irrigation, into timber lands, and into mineral lands; that the water-fronts in those sections of the country that require irrigation are of the very utmost importance; and that the ordinary modes of survey by which we simply divide off into sections and quarter sections the public domain does not meet the wants of that section of country and will not furnish a proper mode of disposing of the public lands. These duties this commission is charged with in connection with the codification of the land laws. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, who is the chairman of that board, has thought that the concurrence and aid and assistance of those who represent the Senate and the House in that class of business would be of benefit to the public. It was for that purpose that he communicated with us upon the subject, and also with the Committee on Mines and Mining. A resolution of a similar import has been sent to the desk by me at the request of the chairman of that committee, who is not present this morning.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to the very large number of committees that are going to be authorized to sit during the recess. I believe that the committee asked for yesterday by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] will be granted, as it has already been agreed to be reported upon by the Committee on Finance favorably. That I may say is one of the most important and least objectionable of all the committees that will be authorized to sit during the recess. I understand the committee investigating Treasury accounts, of which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] is chairman, is continued, and that, with the one that is now proposed by the Senator from Indiana, will make twelve committees that are to sit during the recess.

Mr. CONKLING. Twelve for the Senate alone?

Mr. MORRILL. Twelve for the Senate alone. I may say, however, that there are three of these committees that always sit during the recess, and I think never subject the country to any amount of expense—the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Committee on Printing. Those always sit during the recess and are never in the habit of making up bills for expenses, so far as I am aware. But it seems to me that this is a very extraordinary number to be authorized; and it will certainly occupy the attention of about fifty or sixty Senators during the recess if they attend to the duties proposed. If it is merely for the purpose of allowing these committees to have a deputy sergeant-at-arms and to go over and all about the country, and to have a good time, I can understand it; but I do not understand that the public interest is very much consulted in having so many of these peripatetic committees.

Mr. McDONALD. I will state that it is not the purpose of the committee here proposed to have any sergeant-at-arms or special powers or anything of that kind. They are to sit with, or to act in aid of, a commission which is to be formed now within a few days under an act passed at the last Congress. It is for the Senate, of course, to determine whether in the examination by the commission of which the Commissioner of the General Land Office is the head, it would be proper for the two Houses to be represented by their committees so as to examine the work as it progresses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the passage of the resolution, but I think if we are to provide for this sub-committee we ought also to provide means whereby it shall live. From some little knowledge of the contingent fund of the two Houses respectively, and the drafts that have already been made upon that fund, I am quite satisfied that we must add largely to the fund if these committees are to have their expenses provided for. Therefore I suggest that the sum of $5,000 be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. You had better leave that for the present and we can make provision for the whole of them when the amount required is ascertained.

Mr. ALLISON. The commission of which the Senator from Indiana speaks is a commission that is to go anywhere and everywhere, to suit its own convenience and purposes.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It is to go to the arid country.

Mr. ALLISON. The arid country is a very broad region, I submit to my friend, and if this sub-committee or these two sub-committees are to be of service to the nation they must accompany the commission to the arid region of the West and Northwest.

Mr. McDONALD. That is the design of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. ALLISON. The commission consists of five persons, and six persons are proposed to be added to it, making a commission of eleven persons, who are to visit the arid country. Of course they will not have a special car or anything like that, but they will come very near occupying one car when the commission is completed. It seems to me that if we are to have these sub-committees engaged in this service we ought to provide in this resolution for the payment of the expenses. We shall be obliged to have a deficiency in the contingent expenses of the Senate as well as of the House, if we do not provide here for the payment of their expenses.

Mr. McDONALD. I have no objection to such an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. CONKLING. Did not the Senator from Iowa offer an amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. On a moment's reflection I find that this is a concurrent resolution; and of course if an amendment is offered making an appropriation it would have to be a joint resolution.

Mr. CONKLING. That would be a change of terms merely.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not offer the amendment; I merely make the suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to; ayes 24, noes not counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The other resolution offered by the Senator from Indiana will now be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Committee on Mines and Mining of the Senate and the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House be each authorized to appoint a sub-committee, to consist of not exceeding three members of said committees, to act in aid of the commission authorized under the act of March 3, 1879, charged with the duty of codifying the laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain, and provide for the classification and sale of the public lands, and other duties therewith connected. And any expenses incurred in the discharge of said duties shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House respectively upon the certificate of the chairman of said committees.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. That will make this commission consist of seventeen persons.

Mr. McDONLAD. I stated at the time the first resolution was brought up that a similar communication had been submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, and at the request of that chairman, who is not present this morning, I would submit a similar resolution to the one I had offered as directed by the Committee on Public Lands; and this is the resolution to which I had reference.

Mr. MORRILL. This is the thirteenth junketing committee, is it not, Mr. President?

Mr. McDONALD. If there is any objection to the resolution, I would rather it should stand over until the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining is present. He will be in the Senate to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana make any motion?

Mr. McDONALD. I say if there is any objection to the passage of the resolution now, I prefer that it should stand over until the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining is present. I did not have an opportunity to see him before he left, and am simply acting upon his written request. If the resolution is to encounter opposition, I would rather it should wait until he is here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to say that for myself I vote against all these resolutions. I do not believe in the policy of having peripatetic committees running all over the country, and I am opposed to this proposition.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The resolution had better lie on the table until to-morrow morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will not obstruct its passage; I shall simply vote against it.

Mr. McDONALD. I do not want the resolution voted down in the absence of the chairman of the committee to whom it properly belongs.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As a vote on the resolution would be probably uncertain, and as the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining is not present, I ask that it be laid on the table until he is here. The chairman of that committee is my colleague, [Mr. HEREFORD,] but I know nothing of the resolution now before the Senate. I make that suggestion, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. McDONALD. Entirely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the resolution will lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 720) to amend section 2763 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 721) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes, near its mouth, to its headwaters," approved June —, 1879; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries.

Mr. CONKLING (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 45) authorizing the restoration of Thomas H. Lawrence to the revenue marine; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NARRATIVE OF THE POLARIS EXPEDITION.

Mr. WHYTE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That whenever the Public Printer shall have received a sufficient number of orders for copies of the Narrative of the Polaris Expedition, accompanied by the cost price thereof with 10 per cent. additional, to warrant, in his opinion, the expense of putting the plates to press, he shall cause an edition thereof to be published: Provided, however, That the number of copies thus at any time printed shall not exceed the number ordered and paid for in advance of said publication.

Mr. WHYTE subsequently, from the Committee on Printing, reported the resolution; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REFRIGERATING SHIP FOR DISINFECTION.

Mr. HARRIS. There was an order to print a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, with certain accompanying documents, made yesterday morning. I find upon examination that the report of certain naval engineers and constructors made to the Board of Health was sent to the Senate on the 20th of June by the Secretary of the Navy, and is already printed and laid upon our tables this morning. I ask to have the order to print of yesterday morning modified so as to exclude from it that report which is already printed accompanying the letter of the Secretary of the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the order will be so modified. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so modified.

MORTON'S REPORT ON CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the following resolution——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I rise to a privileged question, a conference report.

Mr. ANTHONY. A conference report is not a privileged question.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have never yet known a conference report refused when there was no question before the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have never known one refused, but it is not a privileged question. It is a privileged question in the House, but not in the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I may have used the wrong word. I have no objection to the Senator's resolution being presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island will be read.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator from West Virginia puts it on a question of courtesy, we will all sit down and yield to him.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection to the report being received.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will not detain the Senate with any matter of mine.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the following resolution for reference:

Resolved, That the report of the late Oliver P. Morton on Chinese immigration be printed, and that 500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS, ETC.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2275.

Mr. MAXEY. I should be glad to have the conference report of the Senator from West Virginia taken up and acted upon. It is necessary, and I think we shall all agree to it.

Mr. PADDOCK. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to Rule 49.

Mr. ANTHONY. A conference report is always in order, but it is not a privileged question.

Mr. PADDOCK. I had the floor and yielded it to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I stated to the Senate that it was a privileged question. I was certainly in order then; and, as I understand, a gentleman rising to a conference report is always in order, even if another Senator is speaking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is now in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think I was in order when I rose before; but the question is not worth debating; let it go.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the Senator from West Virginia was correct. The new rule has been added latterly. The report of a committee of conference is always in order. It was not until latterly; but by the last revision of the rules it has been added.

Mr. CONKLING. It is always in order; but it is not a privileged question. According to the rules of the House, it is always in order for the Committee on Appropriations to report; but that does not make the matter reported a privileged question. So here the report of a conference committee is always in order whenever the chairman can get the floor to make it, except when the Journal is being read; but that does not make it a privileged question.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 2002 have considered the same and have agreed on the report which I send to the Chair.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, and 7.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 3, and 6, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"Provided, That no judgment shall be paid until the right of appeal has expired."

And the Senate agree to the same.

H. G. DAVIS,
S. B. MAXEY,
W. B. ALLISON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. S. COX,
HIESTER CLYMER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask the chairman of the committee of conference why the conferees refused to retain the provision for paying audited accounts of railroad mail transporters.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection to answering the Senator's question, and I think it a very proper question. The committee on the part of the Senate insisted, but after the second conference with the House finally yielded to the House. The House committee were positive that they would not sign the report with the provision referred to by the Senator from Illinois a part of it.

Mr. CONKLING. What was that about?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The payment of certain deficiencies in the Post-Office Department.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. For railroad transportation, audited accounts.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. They were deficiencies running from 1876 to 1878, belonging to the Post-Office Department, reported by the Department regularly. There was no question about that; but the House insisted that the matter belonged to a deficiency bill and not to this bill; and I would say to my friend from Illinois that the Senate committee at first and up to the last, even till this morning, after having had more than one meeting of the conference, finally yielded that point.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator state what the disposition is of the provisions of the bill about letter-carriers?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Just as it passed the House originally and as agreed to by the Senate, not as reported by the Committee on Appropriations. That part of the bill is just as it came from the House.

Mr. MAXEY. The action of the Committee of the Whole was voted down in the Senate and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations were non-concurred in and the bill passed the Senate in that respect just as it passed the House. It is just in that way in the bill as reported by the conference committee.

The report was concurred in.

THE GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2275. It is a short bill and I think will meet with no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Finance. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to ask the immediate consideration of the resolution I send to the Chair to take the place of the one referred yesterday.

Mr. PADDOCK. I cannot yield for that. If the Senator will wait five minutes, I think he will have his opportunity.

Mr. BECK. It cannot be considered to-day except by unanimous consent I know.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2275) extending the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands," approved March 3, 1877, until the 1st day of October, 1880.

The Committee on Public Lands proposed an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That it shall be lawful for homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands or pre-emption settlers on Indian reservations, where crops have been or may be destroyed or seriously injured by grasshoppers, to leave and be absent from said lands, under such rules and regulations, as to proof of the same, as the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall prescribe; but in no case shall such absence extend beyond one year continuously; and during such absence no adverse rights shall attach to said lands, such settlers being allowed to resume and perfect their settlement as though no such absence had occurred.

SEC. 2. That the time for making final proof and payment by pre-emptors whose crops shall have been destroyed or injured as aforesaid, may, in the discretion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, be extended for one year after the expiration of the term of absence provided for in the first section of this act; and all the rights and privileges extended by this act to homestead and pre-emption settlers shall apply to and include the settlers under an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on western prairies," approved March 3, 1873, and the acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska what is the object of inserting in line 4 of section 1 "or pre-emption settlers on Indian reservations?"

Mr. PADDOCK. I will state to the Senator that several Indian reservations or parts of Indian reservations have been authorized to be sold upon the pre-emption principle to actual settlers. There is one in my State, part of which extends into the State of Kansas, and another one which is entirely in my State, and in order to cover them it was thought best to insert those words. This bill came from the House, being passed there in that form, and we adopted the form as it came from the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know of any Indian reservations where authority is given to pre-empt lands.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator perhaps does not remember the act passed authorizing the sale of a part of the Otoe and Missouria reservation.

Mr. ALLISON. I remember it perfectly well.

Mr. PADDOCK. The pre-emption principle was applied to that.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, the pre-emption principle is applied; these lands are only sold to actual settlers at an appraised valuation; but this seems to imply that pre-emption may be made on Indian reservations. I do not like the phraseology.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not think it implies any such thing. I think the Senator is altogether mistaken about that. It applies simply to those lands that are considered by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and treated by that department as pre-emption lands under the acts passed authorizing the sale of Indian reservations. It applies exclusively to matters past, and not matters prospective.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to suggest to the Senator to make the bill read:

That it shall be lawful for homestead and pre-emption settlers, in all cases where pre-emptions are authorized by law.

Mr. PADDOCK. Very well; I do not object to that.

Mr. ALLISON. Strike out "on the public lands or pre-emption settlers on Indian reservations," and say "in all cases where pre-emptions are authorized by law.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think those words are in the original act and that the amendment is superfluous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. There cannot be any objection to those words being repeated.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have no objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The amendment would obviate the other point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is Senate joint resolution No. 39.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask unanimous consent to continue the consideration of House bill No. 2275. I think it will take but a very few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to lay aside informally the unfinished business and continue the bill which is before the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Subject to call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If informally laid aside it will be subject to call. It is laid aside informally, and House bill 2275 is continued before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend by inserting after the words "public lands," in line 4 of section 1, the words "and in all cases where pre-emptions are authorized by law," and by striking out "or pre-emption settlers on Indian reservations."

Mr. PADDOCK. I make no objection to that. Let the amendment be reported from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In line 4, section 1, it is proposed after the word "lands" to insert "and in all cases where pre-emptions are authorized by law," and to strike out the words "or pre-emption settlers on Indian reservations."

Mr. PADDOCK. I think the Senator does not mean to have the words "on Indian reservations" stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, yes; I mean to have them stricken out. If pre-emptions are authorized by law on Indian reservations, of course this provision will apply to them.

Mr. PADDOCK. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment submitted by the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of settlers on the public lands in districts subject to grasshopper incursions."

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC SERVICE.

Mr. BECK. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the resolution which was submitted by me yesterday for the appointment of a joint committee to examine and report what changes, if any, ought to be made in the mode of guarding or collecting the revenue, &c., to report a joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 44) appointing a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress to take into consideration what changes, if any, ought to be made in the mode of guarding or collecting the revenue, and appropriating the money so collected, was read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That a joint committee, composed of three Senators and three Representatives, be appointed, in such manner as each House may determine, to examine and report at an early day of the next December session of this Congress what changes, if any, ought to be made in the mode of guarding or collecting the revenue, either from customs or internal taxation, or in the management of the various Departments and bureaus of the Government, with a view to efficiency in service and economy in appropriations of the public money. Said committee shall report whether changes from permanent to annual appropriations would be advantageous or otherwise, in whole or in part; it shall have power to sit during the recess, to examine witnesses, send for persons and papers, administer oaths, appoint sub-committees, and visit such places as will enable it to obtain such information as it may desire, and the sum of $6,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the chairman of the said committee.

Mr. CONKLING. When was this resolution reported?

Mr. BECK. This morning. I ask unanimous consent to consider it.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not like for one to object to any request that the Senator from Kentucky makes, and seeing members of the Committee on Finance here, I do not hold it my business to object to this resolution.

Mr. BECK. It is a unanimous report of the Finance Committee.

The resolution was read three times, and passed.

SURVEYS OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. RANSOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report favorably the joint resolution (H. R. No. 102) authorizing a survey of the Mississippi River near Lake Concordia, Louisiana, and Cowpen Bend, Mississippi, and I ask the Senate to consider it now by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which directs the Secretary of War to order a survey, and recommendations thereon, of the Mississippi River, near Lake Concordia, Louisiana, and of Cowpen Bend, Mississippi, looking to the protection of the harbors of Natchez and Vidalia, by restraining the river from cutting into Lake Concordia, and of the Charenton Canal in Saint Mary's Parish, Louisiana.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF FISH COMMISSION.

Mr. BURNSIDE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 2,000 copies of the report of the United States Commission on Fish and Fisheries be printed and bound for distribution under direction of the Commissioner.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the resolution which I offered yesterday and which is lying on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the resolution offered by him yesterday——

Mr. COCKRELL. No; he moves to proceed to the consideration of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He asks unanimous consent because the unfinished business is now before the Senate.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let the resolution be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the complete remonetization of silver, its full restoration as a money metal, and its free coinage by the mints of the United States are demanded alike by the dictates of justice and wise statesmanship.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the purpose, to refer it to a committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot answer.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire of the mover what his wish or purpose is,—to speak to the resolution, to have action upon it, or to refer it to a committee?

Mr. VEST. I have no disposition to speak to the resolution. I will state very frankly what my purpose is. The Senate knows very well that a couple of days ago an attempt was made to instruct the Committee on Finance to report what is known as the Warner silver bill which came from the House. That proposition was defeated by a majority of one. Many of us feel great interest in the question of the free coinage of silver. We think it a very important question. I have received at least a hundred letters from my constituents in regard to the silver question, and very few in regard to these political questions. We feel more interest in this silver question really than in any question now pending before the Senate or before Congress. When this vote was taken some days ago various Senators on both sides of the Chamber stated that they voted then against instructing the committee for various reasons, some because it was a subject of delicacy to instruct a committee; others because they did not believe the silver bill should be now considered; others, professing that they were friends to the free coinage of silver, for various reasons peculiar to themselves and their people did not propose now to take up the question for discussion.

My only object, Mr. President, is to disabuse the public mind in regard to what I believe to be the real sentiment of Senators and of Congress upon this question. I believe a majority of the Senate to be in favor of the free coinage of silver. I know that the Senators from the West are almost unanimous in its favor, without regard to political divisions. It is not a question of political opinion. The democratic party is divided upon it; the republican party is divided upon it. All I seek to do is to make a fair, square, bold, open, issue, and find out who is in favor of the free coinage and full remonetization of silver and who is opposed to it. For one I desire this issue to come now; I desire it to be made and to be met; and I propose simply to say that we want the yeas and nays to see who will stand by the principle of the free coinage of silver and who is against it.

Mr. McMILLAN. Allow me to ask the Senator whether he refers to the sentiments of the Senate as revealed on the floor of the Senate or in some other assembly. I was not aware that there was any discussion of the silver bill on the floor of the Senate. I have seen something of the discussions of it in another assembly adverted to, and I do not know whether the Senator refers to the exhibitions in the Senate or in some other place.

Mr. VEST. I did not state that my information came from any particular source. I simply stated as my impression derived from personal intercourse with Senators and from their public expressions at different times that a majority of the Senate do hold that opinion. At any rate, I want to ascertain whether that be so or not.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution. The unfinished business is before the Senate, being Senate joint resolution No. 39.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] has the floor, or had when we adjourned.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR VARIOUS PURPOSES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. WALLACE to the amendment of Mr. INGALLS.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not desire to prolong the discussion of yesterday, but I want to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to one or two facts. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] yesterday said:

In connection with that, I hold here a statement published over the signature of Secretary Boutwell of the delinquencies in one Department, making over $120,000,000, and I should like this to go in too.

The Senator was misreported in that, as he informs me. He meant to state that the delinquencies were only $20,000,000. I want to correct that in the RECORD, so that the Senator may not go to the country as saying that it was reported by Secretary Boutwell that there were delinquencies to the amount of $120,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator has been kind enough to refer to and correct a statement, if I made it—I am not sure whether the Reporter or myself made the mistake—but the Senator will notice a little further on in the discussion that I repeated and restated it at $20,000,000, and it is so reported in the RECORD. The true amount in one Department alone for eight years was $20,000,000 and a little over; not only $20,000,000, but upward.

Mr. WINDOM. I am somewhat surprised that the Senator from West Virginia, after I have tried to correct him, should fall into an error nearly as bad as the one which I have corrected.

It is true that technically, in response to a resolution of the 13th of December, 1870, Secretary Boutwell did report delinquencies amounting to $20,700,986.33; but the Senator from West Virginia, who is so conversant with the affairs of the Treasury Department, must have known when he read to the Senate and published to the country a statement that there were $20,000,000 of delinquencies on the 13th of December, 1870, that a subsequent report had been made by the Treasury Department, under a resolution dated April 16, 1878, which read as follows:

Whereas on the 18th day of February, 1871, the Secretary of the Treasury, in obedience to a resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted December 13, 1870, made a statement (Executive Document 140, third session Forty-first Congress) showing balances due from collectors of internal revenue who were out of office on the 30th day of June, 1870, from which it appears there was due on that day from collectors not in office the sum of $20,700,983.33: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate what amount or portion of this sum has been since collected and paid into the Treasury; what amount, if any, has been settled by compromise, and the facts touching each compromise made, by whom recommended, and the amount realized; what amount or portion of said sum of $20,700,983.33 remains unpaid, and, if any balance is still due, what steps have been taken to enforce payment of the same. Also to report the amounts due by internal-revenue collectors on the 1st day of July, 1875, and how much, if any, of such amounts remains unpaid, and also the nature of the items of indebtedness.

In answer to that resolution Secretary Sherman, on the 11th day of June, 1878, made the report which I hold in my hand, and that report shows, without going into details, that the amount of balances, after deducting unadjusted credits, was only $3,760,249.44; and yet the Senator from West Virginia, who is or ought to be so well informed about the internal workings of the Treasury Department, parades before the Senate a statement, which he says purports to be an official statement, for the purpose of convincing the Senate and the country that there were over twenty millions of deficiencies, to leave the impression that they were still outstanding, and that the Government had lost that amount by the collectors named in the report of 1871.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator is entitled to the floor for a moment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator says that I want to leave the impression on the country that there was an official statement which said there were twenty millions of revenue due the Government from the collectors then out of office. Does the Senator deny the fact that such a report was made and over the signature of the then Secretary of the Treasury. Does he deny the fact?

Mr. WINDOM. I do not deny the fact.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then the Senator from West Virginia stated the truth and just as it came from the Department.

Mr. WINDOM. Does the Senator from West Virginia insist, in the presence of the Senate, when he stated that in 1870 there were over $20,000,000 balance due, and left the statement there, with the fact that here is another report showing only about $3,760,000, that he stated the whole truth upon this subject?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I read from the document and stated that the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Boutwell, had made the statement to the House of Representatives, which was an official statement. I went no further and made no statement beyond that, and left to the country and to the Senate the fact that I was talking of the fact that the statement had been made. The Senator now admits that it was made, but he says some of the money has been paid. I know a little about how some of these settlements took place; and if the Senator would take the time to go to the Department and ask how very many of these settlements had taken place, he would find that probably out of this $20,000,000 that was then due the Government, not $1,000,000 has been paid. I risk the statement here now that out of the $20,000,000 that Secretary Boutwell reported due in 1870, the Government has not received $1,000,000 in money from the whole list; but they have compromised and adjusted, as they call it, the amounts, and very many of the persons who are named here as defaulters or delinquents have been relieved, not by the payment of the money, but by adjustment, as it is termed, of the accounts.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, the Senator is as much mistaken in that as he was in the other statement.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does my friend question the statement that probably not a million has been received from this $20,000,000? Has he any information on that point?

Mr. WINDOM. I hold in my hand an analysis of this table; I have not had time yet to verify it, but I have no doubt of its truth, in which I find this statement:

We find in this report—

That is the report of 1878—

We find in this report that in closing the accounts of the two hundred and twenty-four ex-officers there was paid into the Treasury in cash $9,129,087.80, being nearly one-half the whole amount outstanding in 1870.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator does not mean to say that that $9,000,000 came out of this $20,000,000; I know he does not mean any one to have that impression. This $9,000,000 was what out of the entire indebtedness up to that time had been paid in cash.

Mr. WINDOM. I do understand that the payments were made on the deficiencies reported in 1871; and more than that, I hold in my hand a statement that the amounts compromised were $336,412.81. Whatever may have been the fact, and the Senator has offered no evidence that there was any impropriety in these settlements, it is a broad statement without any proof to sustain it. The fact as shown by official documents is that of those $20,000,000 and upward which it was sought yesterday to show to the country had been lost, only $3,760,249.44 remained in 1878 uncollected and unsettled; the balance due was that amount.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator has just stated to us that the Secretary says $9,000,000 has been collected.

Mr. WINDOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. He says now there are but $3,000,000 now due on these defaults. Nine and three are twelve. Where are the other $8,000,000?

Mr. WINDOM. I have attempted to state that a large portion of that was uncollectible. I have shown the Senate that over $9,000,000 in cash was paid, some $300,000 was compromised, and a large amount was uncollectible.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What is the difference between "compromised" and "uncollectible?" Will the Senator tell me? The money was due the Government and the Government did not receive it, and it is gone; the Government is the loser. I do not care how the Senator and the Treasury Department try to fix it up, nevertheless the fact is so. Now, I should like to call the attention of the Senator to a statement he made yesterday.

Mr. WINDOM. Wait until I get through with this matter. I yield to the Senator from Iowa a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. On that point I desire to make a single remark. I have heard that report so often discussed in this Chamber that I am rather amazed that my friend from West Virginia does not seem yet to understand it. My attention was early called to that report from the fact that three or four or five collectors in Iowa were reported there as defaulters, and I had occasion to go to the Treasury Department to see how the facts were, and I found that in every instance in the case of Iowa collectors, instead of their owing the Government the Government owed them. I have not looked at that report for three or four years.

Then again it was my fortune to have had charge of a bill here two or three years ago for the relief of a collector in Georgia, I think, or perhaps it was in Kentucky—one of those States. The Committee on Finance reported a bill paying that collector three or four thousand dollars—I have forgotten the exact sum—being a balance due him from the Government, and it turned out in debate here that this man was one of the defaulters for four or five thousand dollars according to that report. I have not looked at it lately, but instead of his being a defaulter to the Government, the Government owed him three or four thousand dollars. That is all there is of that report. It was simply a report at the time of the condition of the accounts as shown by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and in most cases the collectors' accounts were then unsettled.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But they were out of office.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly out of office.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. These different statements of the Senators show what the Treasury books do not. Here the Secretary of the Treasury sends us a statement that there is such a number of internal-revenue officers—for this is confined to the Internal Revenue department alone—out of office who owe the Government over $20,000,000, running eight years. Each of the Senators who have spoken here tells us that the accounts were not right, and that after going to the Department they found that the Government owed these collectors instead of the collectors owing the Government. If these be facts, it would show that the Treasury books would make up any kind of statement that was necessary to be made. The Secretary of the Treasury in an official communication to Congress tells us that A, B, and C in the Internal Revenue department owed the Government $20,000,000 on a certain day, and they were out of office; not one of them was then in office; their accounts had all been turned over and, as far as those men were concerned, they had no running accounts, because they had been out of office some time. And yet the Senators now tell us they go to the Department and find a different state of things from the same books. Is not that a comment on the Treasury books? Is it not a rather singular thing that the Senator from Minnesota can get one statement from them, the Senator from Iowa another statement, and the Secretary of the Treasury sends a third one to Congress? Which one are we to take?

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I had some hopes yesterday that we might get some light from the Treasury Department through the efforts of the honorable Senator from West Virginia; but when he finds discrepancies in that Department because $20,000,000 was reported uncollected in 1870, and in 1878 a balance of only $3,700,000, the balance having been collected; and when he cites this as an evidence of discrepancies which he finds in the Treasury Department, I have lost all hope of getting much light from the Treasury books through the honorable Senator's committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should think you had.

Mr. WINDOM. Allow me to finish my sentence.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend will allow me. He told us a minute ago there had been $9,000,000 collected in round numbers and there are $3,000,000 yet due, and this document says there were $20,000,000. Where is the balance? What has become of it?

Mr. WINDOM. I have already answered that question.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No; you have not told me, my friend.

Mr. WINDOM. The only discrepancy in these accounts is that since 1870 the Treasury officers find and report that all of these unadjusted balances had been settled and paid, except three million seven hundred odd thousand dollars. That is all there is of it, and I will not take the time of the Senate longer on that subject. If the Senator from West Virginia does not see it, everybody else does, I think.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator kindly yield for a question?

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly.

Mr. VANCE. I find by the RECORD this morning that the Senator from Minnesota said yesterday that the officers reported as defaulters by the Secretary of the Treasury were not defaulters at all; that there were simply accounts charged up by the assessors against the collectors, and that when the collectors could not collect them the amount was charged and then they were on settlement stricken off.

Mr. WINDOM. I said a large portion of them were, or meant so to say.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator also went on to say in the same paragraph of his remarks:

All the millions that were uncollected from the democratic moonshine-distillers down in Kentucky where my friend over yonder lives, down in Georgia, and all through that mountain region, were included.

Mr. WINDOM. If I did the Senator any injustice by not mentioning North Carolina, I will insert it.

Mr. VANCE. You did the Senator from North Carolina no injustice whatsoever; but I would be obliged to the Senator if he would wait until I propound my question.

Mr. WINDOM. I beg pardon; I thought I understood it.

Mr. VANCE. I read further:

I presume there were more than $20,000,000 of uncollected taxes from those whisky distillers, who have been robbing the Government ever since and killing our officers when they go down to collect those taxes. All those were charged up as part of this $20,000,000.

Now my question, which I ask the Senator to be kind enough to answer, is if these moonshine-distillers were distilling spirits without the knowledge and consent of the Government, how did the assessors know what amount to charge up to the collectors on their accounts?

Mr. WINDOM. I think I was mistaken in that; and wherever I find that I was mistaken I will admit it most frankly. I think there has been a vast amount of that kind of thing in North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky, and elsewhere, never charged up to collectors; and in the haste of debate I think I made a mistake on that point, and I acknowledge it to the Senator.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. But if we could get at the entire amount of Government loss from those moonshiners and others that I referred to, you would find it vastly greater than the unsettled balances I have referred to.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will be kind enough to correct one other mistake he made in the same statement, I will agree to subside; and that is that they are democratic moonshiners. I presume he has some knowledge on that subject which I have not, but I take pleasure in informing the Senator that the large majority of the moonshiners brought before the United States courts in North Carolina vote the republican ticket straight out.

Mr. WINDOM. I am surprised at that, Mr. President, because I supposed from the character of the business in which they were engaged that they were democrats. I only assumed it on that ground. They were doubtless engaged in furnishing democratic supplies for North Carolina, [laughter,] and I supposed they were democrats.

I want to say further about this report made in 1870, to my honorable friend from West Virginia, that it was mainly a report of the delinquencies of Andrew Johnson's administration. It was made just about the time General Grant was inaugurated President, you will remember; and all of these delinquencies, whatever they were, covering the twenty millions, were in existence before that time, and largely incurred during an administration over which republicans do not claim to have had much influence. It was a legacy from Johnson's administration. So it does not prove anything, even if his facts had been correct, which they are not.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Did you not elect him?

Mr. WINDOM. Yes; but you seduced him.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. You counted him in, my friend back here says.

Mr. WINDOM. You captured him. I find in this document that the Senator desired to have printed yesterday (the report made on the 18th of February, 1871) as a part of this twenty million that James B. Steedman, a collector in Louisiana, had charged to him $614,754.95 of that $20,000,000, and I do not find that this later document mentions any payment made by him; but I have another document here that I will refer to for a moment. As late as 1878 there still remained due from James B. Steedman $359,104.01. That was about one-tenth of the whole uncollected balance as reported in 1878. Now, I am informed that Mr. James B. Steedman is a very prominent democrat in the State of Ohio. I am informed also—if I am not correct the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] will correct me—that he was an officer of the late democratic convention in the State of Ohio. If I am misinformed in that I shall be glad to be corrected. It appears, therefore, that of the alleged delinquency of $20,000,000, $614,754.95 were chargeable to that gentleman, who is one of the most prominent members of the democratic party in the State of Ohio, as I understand, and should hardly be charged to the republican party. So far as I can discover from these reports nearly $400,000 of it remained unpaid in 1878. I do not mean to say that he was a defaulter, for I think a very few, if any, of the amounts embraced in this $20,000,000 can be so called.

Mr. President, I do not desire to say anything more on the subject of this $20,000,000 of reported delinquences, but on one other point, if I do not weary the Senate, I should like to make one or two very brief remarks. The Senator from Delaware——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator is going to leave the Senator from West Virginia, the Senator from West Virginia would be glad to pay his respects to him.

Mr. WINDOM. Does the Senator want to ask me a question?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I want to make a statement.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator can make his statement after I get through. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] yesterday was kind enough to say, speaking of myself:

My friend had better confine himself for the present, at least, to the wards of the nation and not assume too many offices of friendship to the foreign populations. He should devote the balance of his days in devotion to the colored population of the South that he has caused to leave their homes and go to free Kansas.

And in another place he said:

But perhaps that may be a delicate subject for the Senator at the present time.

Now I want to say to my friend from Delaware that it is by no means a delicate subject for the Senator from Minnesota. If there is any one act of my public life that I am proud of, it is that I may have aided in placing in the mind of the colored people of the South the thought that when by reason of oppression and intolerance their homes became intolerable, they have the right, which appertains to all American citizens, to remove to some other State where their personal and political rights will be respected. That is all that I have ever done. I have never urged any man to leave any State. I have argued upon the floor of the Senate that the only solution of this troublesome race question, which has created so much sectional strife in the country, will be found in withdrawing from those States of the South where the colored people are in the majority enough of the colored population so that it would not be deemed necessary by the white people to arm themselves upon "the color line" in order to prevent those colored people from voting. I withdraw not one word I said upon that subject.

It has been urged that these people who have gone to Kansas have encountered terrible privation and suffering. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] drew a picture the other day of the distress, the privations, the starvation which these people have encountered. If I were upon that side of the Chamber I would never utter one word on the subject of the sorrows, the sufferings of these poor and helpless people who, by oppression and by outrages never before practiced upon any free people on the face of the earth, have been compelled to flee from their homes and to seek an asylum among strangers in a strange land.

Now I want to say to our honorable friends on that side, and particularly to my friend from Missouri, that I hold in my hand a memorial of the people of Saint Louis, his own constituents, signed by more than one hundred leading citizens in that city. It is signed by Gustavus St. Gem, surveyor of customs; Samuel Hays, postmaster at Saint Louis; William H. Bliss, United States district attorney; Enos Clark, judge in bankruptcy; John F. Long, ex-surveyor of customs; Henry P. Wyman, deputy collector; Nathan Cole, David P. Dyer, L. S. Metcalfe, and G. A. Finkelnburg, ex-members of Congress; John B. Henderson, ex-United States Senator; David Wagner, judge of the supreme court of Missouri; John F. Dillon, judge of the United States circuit court; John W. Noble, ex-United States district attorney; A. G. Edwards, United States assistant treasurer; Thomas C. Fletcher, ex-governor of Missouri; Eugene T. Weigel, ex-secretary of state of Missouri; Henry Overstolz, mayor, elected partly by democrats, of the city of Saint Louis; J. Milton Turner, ex-United States minister to Liberia; John H. Johnson, esq., John W. Wheeler, Rev. Samuel P. Anderson, and a large number of other prominent citizens, independent of party, station, and race. What do these men say in answer to the statements of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Delaware? I will read a part of the memorial:

The condition of the great majority is absolute poverty; they are clothed in thin garments for the most part, and while here have been supported to some extent by public, but mostly by private, charity. The older ones are the former slaves of the South—all now entitled to life and liberty.

The weather from their first advent in this northern city has been unusually cold, attended with ice and snow, so that their sufferings have been greatly increased, and if there was in their hearts a single kind remembrance of their sunny southern homes they would naturally give it expression now.

We have taken occasion to examine into the causes they themselves assign for their extraordinary and unexpected transit, and beg leave to submit herewith the written statements of a number of individuals of the refugees, which were taken without any effort to have one thing said more than another, and to express the sense of the witness in his own language as nearly as possible.

The story is about the same in each instance—great privation and want from excessive rent exacted for land, connected with murder of colored neighbors and threats of personal violence to themselves. The tone of each statement is that of suffering and terror. Election days and Christmas, by the concurrent testimony, seem to have been appropriated to killing the "smart" men, while robbery and personal violence in one form and another seem to have run the year round.

Bear in mind, Mr. President, that these are statements of the most prominent citizens of Missouri who in the presence and from the lips of these refugees have ascertained the causes of their flight. Though they reached that city in the midst of a severe snow-storm, and suffered the most extreme distress from want of provisions and shelter, yet not one word do they say about returning to their homes. Their only purpose seemed to be to get away from conditions and perils which they deem more dreadful than even starvation and the snow-storms of Kansas, to which we have heard reference. The memorial goes on:

We submit that the great migration of negroes from the South is itself a fact that overbears all contradiction, and proves conclusively that great cause must exist at the South to account for it. Here they are in multitudes, not men alone, but women and children, old, middle-aged, and young, with common consent leaving their old homes in a natural climate and facing storms and unknown dangers to go to Northern Kansas. Why? Among them little is said of hope in the future; it is all of fear in the past. They are not drawn by the attractions of Kansas; they are driven by the terrors of Mississippi and Louisiana. Whatever becomes of them, they are unanimous in their unalterable determination not to return. There are others coming. Those who have come and gone on to Kansas must suffer even unto death, we fear; at all events more than any body of people entitled to liberty and law, the possession of property, the right to vote, and the pursuit of happiness should be compelled to suffer under a free government from terror inspired by robbery, threats, assaults, and murder.

The occasion is, we think, a fit one for us to protest against a state of affairs thus exhibited in those parts of the Union from which these negroes come, which is not only most barbarous toward the negro, but is destructive to the constitutional rights of all citizens of a common country.

It is intolerable to believe that with the increased representation of the Southern States in Congress those shall not be allowed freely to cast their ballots upon whose right to vote that representation has been enlarged.

We believe no government can prosper that will allow such a state of injustice to the body of its people to exist, any more than society can endure where robbery and murder go unchallenged.

We protest against the direful necessities impelling this exodus and against the violation of common rights, natural and constitutional, proven to be of most frequent occurrence in places named, and we ask such action at the hands of our representatives and our Government as shall investigate the full extent of the causes leading to this unnatural state of affairs and protect the people from its continuance, and not only protect liberty and life, but enforce law and order.

Mr. CONKLING. Is that the whole of that memorial?

Mr. WINDOM. This is substantially all the memorial except the affidavits which set out the facts upon which this memorial is based.

Now, Mr. President, I submit to the Senator from Delaware that, in view of all these facts, stated by responsible citizens of Missouri, I can hardly claim the distinguished honor of having been the cause of the exodus of these oppressed and terror-stricken people.

I want to read a brief extract also from a speech of an ex-United States Senator and a formerly distinguished member of the democratic party, but now I believe not in full sympathy with them, Ex-Governor Henry S. Foote, a speech delivered recently in the city of New Orleans and in the presence of a very large number of people. He said:

It is a most startling and alarming fact connected with this subject [he continued] a circumstance well calculated to make the exodus movement universal in the South, that democratic leaders in Congress have been fiercely and perseveringly laboring for several months to obtain the passage of bills which would tear away from every colored voter in the South all hope of being permitted to vote hereafter in elections of any descriptions; to lay open the polls in all Federal elections here to bulldozing, violence, and fraud of every kind; while the honest and unmeddling Federal soldier would be prohibited from coming near the place of voting even to prevent the perpetration of the most diabolical frauds, and ruffianly violence of every species judged necessary by these accursed agents of iniquity to the success of what they would call the democratic cause. [Loud applause.]

After all I have said * * * it is hardly necessary to do more than bring together in conclusion, in a somewhat more condensed manner, the leading considerations which belong to this subject.

And he thus enumerates the causes of the exodus in the presence of the people of New Orleans:

1. The grievances of every kind admitted to have been imposed by the resolutions of the convention at Vicksburgh.

2. The significant avoidance on the part of that body of all consultation with persons not concerned in getting up the convention.

3. The deliberate preclusion of all colored delegates present from joining in the adoption of the resolutions.

4. The refusal even to consider the expediency of providing remedial agencies of any kind.

* * * * * * *

5. The innumerable acts of bulldozing and fraud alleged so strongly to have been heretofore perpetrated, by which all independent voting was prevented, whole communities transformed in their political character, and the most valued civil rights rendered valueless.

6. The portentous and undeniable fact that within the last three months certain leading men of the democratic party in Congress have declared in the most emphatic manner their determination never to rest satisfied until every act of national legislation growing out of the war should be obliterated from the Federal statute-book.

7. The circumstance that other members of Congress of equal rank have thundered forth that their allegiance is first due to the States represented by them, respectively, and afterwards only to the General Government.

8. The fact that others with equal impudence and stupidity have been heard unblushingly to assert that during the late civil war there were no loyal persons save those who had struggled for the subversion of the Government.

9. The alarming fact that in a convention now sitting in this city, claiming to represent the embodied sovereignty of the State of Louisiana, a majority of the members thereof a few days ago deliberately refused to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

10. The significant and deplorable fact that in this same august body resolutions are at this instant pending which assert its right at its own pleasure to regulate and modify the whole system of suffrage.

11. Now blend these facts, if you please, with the particulars already mentioned connected with the fierce struggle which has been going on in the two Houses of Congress for several months, looking to the taking from the President the only means he possesses of securing purity in Federal elections, the putting down of ruffianism at the polls, and the protection of the white and colored voter alike from the loss of their most valued civil rights, and then decide at your leisure whether it is better that this exodus should or should not go on, unless some such guarantees of future safety and protection as I argued at Vicksburgh shall be at last supplied.

I have read this paper showing the views of these gentlemen on the ground as to the cause of the exodus. I have in my possession a great many other statements of a similar character, including letters from all parts of the South from leading white men as well as colored, stating the reasons why they are compelled to leave their homes. Senators have sometimes asked why I have become more radical of late. I say to them it is because I have heard the pitiful stories of those poor people; I have received hundreds of letters from all parts of the country, not written for political effect, but containing the most touching appeals, and the stories they tell of their wrongs and sufferings would stir the blood of any man who has a sympathy for the oppressed, or any sense of justice or regard for human rights.

Mr. President, we have been told that a number of these people have returned. I suppose some of them have; it would naturally be so. A very few of them have returned. I have letters from gentlemen in the South; I cannot vouch for their truth, but they state the fact that agents have been paid by the planters to go into the Northwest, pretending to act as agents for the colored people for the purpose of hunting homes for them, who go back and report that the country is uninhabitable in order to dissuade them from going. I do not know whether it is true or not; but these stories came to me and they are certainly as reliable as Mr. Lycurgus P. Jones's forged document that was read in the presence of the Senate the other day.

Now, Mr. President, for the reasons stated by these gentlemen from Saint Louis, for the reasons stated in New Orleans by public speakers, from letters I have received by the hundred from all parts of the country, and from many other sources of information, I am perfectly satisfied that unless there is a change in the treatment of the colored citizens at the South the exodus will change to a stampede within the next two or three years; and I say that there is no way, in my humble opinion, by which the exodus can be stopped but to treat those people as American citizens ought to be treated, when they will prefer to stay in their homes at the South. But I say to Senators on the other side that if the treatment of 1876 is repeated in 1880, just so certainly will they find a stampede from all sections of that country of the colored citizens who have just as much right to vote as you and I have.

Let me suggest to the honorable Senator from Delaware that if he has anything more to say about the exodus I beg he will not consider that I am at all sensitive on the subject.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator from Minnesota before he sat down if he had received any letters from North Carolina complaining that the colored people there were deprived of their right to vote?

I desire, as the subject is pertinent, to have read at the Secretary's desk a letter or statement which I received more than a month ago from two prominent colored men who were formerly members of the Legislature in North Carolina, who wrote this letter to me voluntarily, and authorized me to use it if I saw proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) Does the Senator desire to have the letter read?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NEW BERNE, NORTH CAROLINA,
April 28, 1879.

To the Hon. Messrs. CONKLING, BLAINE, and others, in the Senate of the United States, who so strenuously oppose the repeal of certain laws now being debated in Congress:

GENTLEMEN: We are all personally acquainted with the honorable Governor Vance, and we do take the liberty through him to state that to the best of our knowledge and belief there never was a black man prevented from voting in North Carolina on account of race. We speak knowingly for this county and district, notwithstanding all that you have said on the subject. We are both of dark complexion, and have represented this county in the Legislature of North Carolina.

Respectfully and truly,

RICHARD TUCKER.
H. H. SIMMONS.

Mr. WINDOM. About how dark?

Mr. LOGAN. About as dark as I am. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANCE. Fully dark enough to belong to the republican party beyond any mistake. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, am I right in hearing my name read as the first of those to whom that letter was addressed?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; as one of them.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish only to say that I never heard of it before, and the complexion of the letter seems, therefore, more doubtful than the complexion of those who wrote it. It is rather unusual, as far as I have observed, to address a letter to one Senator or to three Senators, and then in place of sending the letter to them or to either of them to send it to somebody else. As somebody suggests, perhaps it was intended to deliver it in escrow. I do not know how that is. I merely wish to say that I never heard of such a letter before.

Mr. VANCE. The letter was accompanied by a note authorizing me to make use of it in the manner which I have done.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, yesterday in the course of this debate the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] referred to what he deemed proper to term the whisky rings of the city of Chicago, Saint Louis, and other places. I have no defense to make of any whisky ring either in Chicago, in my State, or in Delaware, if one should exist there; but in order that the Senator and others interested may know exactly the difference in the execution of the laws of this country in reference to the collection of the taxes on distilled spirits, and the manner in which they are executed in democratic States and in republican States, the amount of money necessarily expended in the execution of those laws in democratic States and the amount expended in republican States, and the violence that has been used in opposition to the execution of the laws in certain democratic States, and that the difference may be perfectly understood by the country, I ask—and I am very glad that the opportunity has been afforded me—that the Clerk read a document which I send to the desk, being a letter addressed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the Secretary of the Treasury. This is an official document giving the number of seizures, the number of persons arrested, the counties and the States in which persons have been arrested, the counties and States in which seizures have been made, the number of persons pleading guilty, the number of persons showing by their own acknowledgment that they had been guilty of frauds upon the Government, and their complexion so far as politics is concerned. I ask the Clerk to read for the benefit of the Senate the document which I send to the desk, that it may go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The document will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read. Having read for some time,

Mr. WHYTE. I would suggest to the Senator from Illinois that probably unanimous consent would be given to print that long letter in the RECORD without taking up the time of the Senate in reading it in full.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection as far as I am concerned; only it is a rule of the Senate to read everything. I have no desire to have it read.

Mr. WHYTE. By unanimous consent it can go in the RECORD.

Mr. LOGAN. My object was to have it in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the document being read shall be published in the RECORD without further reading. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the reading will be suspended.

Mr. LOGAN. That is all I desire, to have this made part of the RECORD of Congress merely to show the distinguished Senator from Delaware that he was very much mistaken in his accusation against the Northern States in reference to the improprieties of certain individuals. That was the only object I had. If it is to be printed in the RECORD, that is all I desire.

The document is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, May 1, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a brief statement of the operations for the suppression of illicit distillation in several of the States where it has prevailed to the greatest extent since July 1, 1876, to the present time.

I have consolidated the work by districts, giving the number of stills seized, persons arrested, and casualties occurring in each district, with a summary of the condition of affairs therein from time to time.

You will observe that a force has been specially employed for the discovery and seizure of illicit distilleries. This force has been engaged wholly upon this work, and not upon general duties.

District of Arkansas.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
14	7 months.	$2,314 15

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
34	33	1	0

May 4, 1878, Collector Wheeler reported that Deputy Marshal Thomas E. Rogers was shot from the bushes and killed, Monday, the 29th of April. Mr. Rogers was the party who furnished the information which led to the capture of two illicit stills in Clay County in March last. It was supposed that he was killed by Frank Gatlin, who was the owner of the stills above referred to.

October 3, 1878, Collector Wheeler reported "a bad state of affairs in Baxter County," and that Deputy Marshal Wood had met with resistance so formidable from illicit distillers that he was unable to make arrests. He reported that the illicit distillers had organized, and had inclosed their stills with a formidable earthwork on Bennett's River, and defied the United States officers; that they were well armed with rifles, and that it would be impossible to capture the stills without a formidable force. Collector Wheeler was authorized to employ a force strong enough to seize the stills without bloodshed, if possible, but was instructed to enforce the laws at all hazards. Collector Wheeler organized a force of twenty-five men to support his deputy collectors and deputy marshals, and sent them to Baxter County. The illicit distillers, supposing the force was accompanied by United States troops, as had been publicly stated in the papers, sunk their stills in the bayou, and destroyed their works. The force, however, was resisted in attempting to arrest some of the distillers, shots were exchanged, and one man killed. One prisoner escaped.

Second District, Alabama.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
46	25 months.	$7,730 82

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
172	778	1	0

It has been with great difficulty that the internal-revenue laws could be enforced in the northeastern portion of Alabama, notably in Cherokee and Cleburne Counties. In May, 1875, Deputy Collector Holman Leatherwood, while attempting to seize an illicit distillery in Cherokee County, was brutally murdered.

In September, 1876, a force of officers, headed by Deputy Marshal James H. Bone, went into Cleburne County for the purpose of arresting distillers. This force was met by an organized force of about eighty men, headed by one Roberts, a notorious illicit distiller, and driven out of the county. So well organized were they that they successfully resisted the officers, and openly and defiantly continued to carry on illicit distillation for a year.

February 4, 1878, Collector Booth reported that his deputies, accompanied by a marshal's force, had been met in Winston County with armed resistance by illicit distillers in overpowering numbers, and that he was unable to enforce the laws. An increased force was given him, and he was enabled to make a few arrests.

In June, 1878, Collector Booth organized a force and made a determined attempt to arrest those law-breakers. After they had secured the arrest of several persons they were met by Roberts's band thoroughly armed, forced to release their prisoners, and driven out of the county. Collector Booth was again directed to organize a force sufficiently large to enforce the laws, and after considerable difficulty he was enabled to make some arrests. So defiant were the illicit distillers in that portion of the State that they sent word that no revenue officer should be permitted to come into the county.

In July, 1878, and after a demonstration in force had been made by the Government, some of the violators of law against whom warrants had been issued proposed to surrender. They were permitted to do so, and sentence was suspended against them during good behavior.

November 28, 1878, Collector Rapier telegraphed that his force in Cherokee County, near the State line, while seizing an illicit still, was fired upon, but he succeeded in accomplishing the seizure.

April 7, 1879, Collector Rapier reports that his force has met with resistance in Cherokee and Cleburne Counties.

On the 1st of April, 1879, a force under Deputy Collector Shouse, while attempting to seize a distillery in Cleburne County, near the State line, was attacked and several shots were fired by the assailants.

Second District, Kentucky.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
6	5 months.	$1,250 00

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
35	92	0	2

May 7, 1877, Deputy Collector Whedon and his assistants were resisted while endeavoring to arrest illicit distillers near Glasgow.

February 10, 1878, Deputy Collector Landram, while searching for illicit distilleries in Calloway County, was resisted, and he and his assistant were wounded by illicit distillers. In the same month a force composed of about thirty men accompanied by deputy collectors and deputy marshals was sent into Wayne County where illicit distilling was carried on to a great extent, and the distillers were very bold and defiant. They were met by armed bodies, but were in sufficient force to overcome all resistance.

In June, 1878, the marshal's force, in attempting to arrest illicit distillers at the distillery operated in Hart County by Ham. Choate and Harrison Ramsey, was met by a force of nine men armed with rifles, and driven off.

In September, 1878, Deputy Collector Ray's force in Allen County, near Long Creek, was overtaken by a body of armed men and forced to retire from the county.

October 3, 1878, Revenue Agent Whitfield, reporting the result of the operations of a deputy collector's force in Monroe and Allen Counties, says as they were seizing the second still they were fired upon from a bluff near by, and after leaving were again attacked. They went to the third still-house, but before reaching it were again bushwacked. On leaving the fourth still they were fired upon by a party concealed near the road, and had one man wounded and one horse killed. The firing at this point grew so hot that the men dismounted and returned the fire, with what result it is not known. He adds: "The feeling in this county is bitter in the extreme, and the people are almost a unit in upholding the illicit distillers and rallying to their support whenever a movement is made against them. They will resist to the bitter end any attempt to seize their stills. A general engagement and loss of life in the late raid was only prevented by the coolness of our men and their strict obedience to orders to capture the stills at all hazards, but to forbear bringing on or engaging in any conflict after the work was accomplished. They left the county in good order, although they were followed nearly to Glasgow by an armed band who threatened to release the prisoners."

Under date of April 28, 1879, Collector Woodcock, of the fifth Tennessee district, informs this office that Deputy Collector Ray, of the second district of Kentucky, reports that the illicit distillers are again resisting him in Allen County, and asks him to send his force to his assistance.

Fifth district, Kentucky.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
2	2 months.	$500 00

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
54	69	1	1

In December, 1877, Thomas Moore shot and killed Deputy Marshal Ellis, in Casey County, who had a warrant for his arrest for illicit distilling.

June 6, 1878, Revenue Agent Whitfield reported the operations of a force sent into Hardin County for the purpose of seizing stills, and said that it resulted in the capture of two stills and the arrest of three prisoners. The friends of the prisoners organized and pursued the revenue officers and marshal, but failed to overtake them. Disappointed in their attempts to rescue the prisoners, they returned and burnt the house of B. F. Clark, whom they had reason to believe acted as a guide. Mr. Clark was afterward driven from the county, and has not been able to return since that time on account of threats made against him.

In September, 1878, Collector Buckner reported that he sent a force into La Rue County to seize the distillery of Johnson Brothers. They were forcibly resisted and driven off, and Deputy Marshal John Wyatt very severely wounded.

On the 21st of September, 1878, the Johnson Brothers, with their friends, sent word to the officers that they were armed and ready for any emergency and would resist any attempt to seize their distillery or to secure their arrest. Revenue

Agent Whitfield made requisition for breech-loading carbines, which were furnished to him, and in connection with Collector Buckner organized a force sufficiently strong to overcome the distillers, and they succeeded in seizing the still.

Eighth district, Kentucky.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
7	7 months.	$1,560 00.

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
36	46	0	1

A good deal of lawlessness has prevailed in the mountainous part of this district.

In January, 1878, it was found necessary to organize a large force, which was done by Collector Landram, and it was sent into Wayne County. A most determined resistance on the part of illicit distillers was made; the force was met by an organized body, a fight ensued, and Deputy Collector Logan was severely wounded and his horse killed. The law-breakers, however, were overcome, and most of them fled the county. No serious difficulty has occurred in this district since that moment.

First district, West Virginia.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
0	0	0

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
40	32	0	1

June 27, 1877, Collector Duval inclosed a report from Deputy Collector Schofield, giving an account of occurrences in Roane County, in which he stated that on the Wednesday night previous fifteen disguised men came to the house of one of the witnesses who had appeared against illicit distillers, broke down the doors, dragged him from his bed, blindfolded him, put a rope around his neck, and led him to the woods and demanded that he take an oath that he would not again appear in the case. He refused, when they passed the rope over a limb and suspended him until he was almost unconscious. He still refused, and they told him that if he was found in the State after ten days he would be killed on sight; that they had banded together to prevent the prosecution of any man for violation of internal-revenue laws.

On the 23d of August, 1877, Collector Duval informed this office that his force of deputy collectors in the lower part of his district had been attacked by illicit distillers and Deputy Collector L. Doolittle was seriously wounded. Mr. Doolittle was from this wound badly crippled for life.

November 15, 1878, Collector Duval reported that eight hundred and twenty indictments had been found by the grand jury in the district court for the district of West Virginia against persons in the first collection district, West Virginia, for illicit distilling and other violations of the internal-revenue laws.

On the 1st of January, 1879, a movement was made by Collector Duval through the counties in the lower part of his district in connection with Collector Landram, of Kentucky, and Collector Rives, of Virginia. In McDowell County his force was met by a party of illicit distillers and fired into; it was strong enough, however, to overcome the opposition and successfully prosecute the work.

Fifth district, Virginia.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
14	14 months.	$4,971 93

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
105	180	1	2

There has been serious resistance to the enforcement of the laws in several portions of this district, especially in Lee County, where, on the 11th of April, 1877, the officers, having arrested six illicit distillers, while conveying their prisoners to Jonesville, were intercepted by a body of armed men, who demanded the release of the prisoners. On the next day, while the persons who had assisted the officers were at work in their field, they were attacked by an armed force numbering twenty-six men, by whom they were fired upon, and one of their number, Jesse Vanderviter, was killed. The illicit distillers arrested were placed in jail at Jonesville, after which their friends surrounded the jail and demanded their release.

On the 9th of April, 1878, the officers were resisted by an armed force in Scott County. They were fired upon, but succeeded in getting away with two prisoners.

On the 1st of May, 1878, the officers were resisted by a body of armed men while attempting to seize an illicit distillery in Franklin County, and two deputy collectors were wounded.

On the 6th of September, 1878, the officers in this district were resisted while attempting to seize an illicit distillery, shots were exchanged between the parties, and one of the illicit distillers was killed.

March 18, 1878, Collector Rives made requisition for breech-loading carbines and ammunition, stating that arms were actually necessary in his district to protect his officers in the discharge of their duties in connection with the seizure of illicit stills.

Fourth district of North Carolina.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
16	6 months.	$3,740

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
94	66	1	4

December 13, 1878, Revenue Agent Kellogg reports that the force of deputy collectors under his direction operating in Chatham and Moore Counties had seized twenty-eight illicit distilleries. They were attacked by an armed force; a sharp fight ensued, but the attacking party was repulsed with the wounding of two of their number. January 11, 1878, that his force sent into Stanley County to seize illicit distilleries had been attacked by illicit distillers, and a deputy collector shot.

March 5, 1879, Collector Young reports that Deputy Collector Moore's party, in Moore County, was resisted by the illicit distillers and a person named Seawell, who acted as guide, was killed. April 1, 1879, Collector Young reports that Deputy Collector Pennington's party, while looking for illicit stills, was attacked by armed men and driven out of the county. On the same day another force in Orange County was fired upon.

February 13, 1879, Revenue Agent Kellogg reports that stills and illicit spirits seized by him in Montgomery County were recaptured by the illicit distillers, and adds: "A detachment of my party was followed and fired upon by the illicit distillers;" and he says: "This county is infested by a lawless set of men, who bid defiance to law, but I routed them completely, destroyed their stills, and drove them into the mountains."

Under date of January 12 a deputy collector reports to Collector Young from Stanley County, as follows:

"After the first three days the moonshiners made it very warm for us, and kept it up until we were forced to leave the woods for the protection of our lives. We left under a volley fired at us from the hill-side. One of my men received two wounds in his head. The deputy marshal was also wounded. It is impossible for me to give you any idea of the condition of Stanley County and the danger to one or a dozen men in attempting to enforce the revenue laws there."

On the 14th of January Collector Young asked to be supplied with carbines and sufficient ammunition to enable his deputy collectors to enforce the revenue laws in his district.

Fifth District, North Carolina.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
18	15 months.	$7,465 25

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
237	114	0	2

On the 16th of May, 1877, James M. Gray, while assisting Deputy Collector Crosbie in seizing a still in Guilford County, was seriously wounded by persons concealed in the woods.

August 23, 1878, Collector Wheeler reported while Deputy Collector Reid was engaged in the seizure of an illicit distillery in Randolph County the party was fired upon several times by persons in ambush. Two horses were killed. He also writes that the deputy collector's life has been threatened, and that there is much lawlessness in that county.

April 18, 1879, Collector Wheeler reported that his force of deputy collectors, while near the illicit distillery of one James Smith, was fired upon, and Deputy Collector Joyce wounded.

Under date of April 26, 1879, Collector Wheeler asks that he may be furnished with arms to enable his deputies to protect themselves while enforcing the internal-revenue laws in his district.

In 1877 it became apparent to this office that frauds were being practiced in North Carolina in connection with the sale of manufactured tobacco. The loss to the Government was estimated at from $600,000 to $1,000,000 a year.

It was with a good deal of difficulty that these frauds were discovered, but by patient and discreet work Revenue Agents Wagner and Brooks succeeded in developing the violations of law, and there were seized, during the year 1877, and early in 1878, in the fifth district of North Carolina, sixteen large tobacco factories, the proprietors of fourteen of which pleaded guilty. One was convicted, and one libel is now pending.

It is well known that North and South Carolina and a portion of Georgia are infested with what are known as "blockade tobacco" peddlers, who travel through sparsely settled portions of the country selling fraudulent tobacco. To protect the Government and honest dealers against these violators of law requires the constant vigilance of officers in those districts.

Sixth district, North Carolina.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
86	24 months.	$25,488 60

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
427	673	1	2

February 9, 1877, Revenue Agent Wagner informed this office that District Attorney Lusk writes to Marshal Douglass that at the trial of a distiller before Commissioner Morris, in Henderson County, North Carolina, twenty armed men attacked the court, fatally wounding Deputy Marshal Haskins. The other officers escaped.

October 8, 1877, Collector Mott reported that Deputy Collector Gillespie, accompanied by Deputy Marshals Patterson and McDowell and two assistants, while searching for illicit stills in the South Mountains, was suddenly fired upon by persons concealed in bushes and behind trees and rocks. The number of assailants was estimated at twelve. The officers having previously arrested two persons for illicit distilling, retreated with their prisoners out of the mountains, and were met at every turn of the narrow road by the attacking party, who, out of sight and range of the officers, kept up a persistent fire. One deputy marshal and Deputy Collector Gillespie were seriously wounded. One horse was killed.

December 10, 1877, Collector Mott requested to be furnished with ten repeating carbines and a sufficient quantity of ammunition for the purpose of arming his force, to enable them to enforce the revenue laws in his district.

On the 15th of June, Collector Mott reports that his force captured five prisoners, one of whom had been forcibly released from the Pickens County jail, South Mountain. The force was attacked by a large body of armed men, with intent to rescue the prisoners. A fight ensued, and the assailants were driven off.

September 30, 1878, Deputy Collector Bryan's force in the South Mountains was fired upon by illicit distillers, and Deputy Collector Long's horse killed.

April 12, 1879, Collector Mott reports that the jail in Rutherfordton, in which illicit distillers were confined, was attacked by an armed body of men for the purpose of releasing the prisoners.

Under date of April 18, 1879, Revenue Agent Chapman reports that during the month of January a man named Tieg, in Alexander County, who was suspected of having given information in relation to illicit distillers, was dragged from his house at night and severely beaten by six disguised men, and that B. F. Kedder, who had made himself obnoxious to the illicit distillers in his section by assisting Deputy Collector Bryan, was informed that a bullet fired at one Johnson while riding through the Brushy Mountains was intended for him.

Third district, Georgia.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
28	13 months.	$6,965 25

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
60	33	1	3

April 1, 1878, Collector Wade reports that J. E. Cummings, who had furnished information against illicit distillers, was, on the 30th of March, shot at his house by disguised parties.

May 28, 1878, Collector Wade reports that a colored man, acting as a guide to Deputy Collector A. B. Smith, was seriously wounded by illicit distillers.

September 12, 1878, Collector Wade reports that a deputy marshal was shot in Baldwin County, while endeavoring to arrest parties complained of for illicit distilling.

November 16, 1878, Collector Wade reports that his force was resisted by an armed band, in Glasscock County, and one of the assailants was wounded.

January 27, 1879, Collector Wade reports that an armed force attacked his deputies in Jasper County, twelve miles from Covington, and recaptured illicit whisky which had been seized.

April 28, 1879, Collector Wade reports that his force had been resisted in the discharge of their duties, in Elbert County, and asks for arms to enable them to enforce the laws.

Second district, Georgia.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
19	18 months.	$6,594 40

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
411	1,440	4	5

February 8, 1877, a party was sent into Northern Georgia for the seizure of stills and the arrest of violators of the law, accompanied by a detachment of the United States troops under the command of Lieutenant McIntyre. The force met with formidable resistance, and Lieutenant McIntyre was shot and instantly killed.

In July, 1877, one McKinney, for giving information against illicit distillers in Gordon County, was fired upon and killed.

In July of the summer of 1877, a party of gentlemen went out deer hunting, taking for their guide a man by the name of Dearing. Dearing was shot and killed by some unknown parties who, it is supposed, thought him to be guiding a party of revenue officers.

In December, 1877, Deputy Collector George reports that in attempting to seize a still in Butts County he found the distillery strongly guarded, and in attempting to approach the same fire was opened upon his force, and he was held at bay for some time, but finally succeeded in capturing the still.

January, 1878, a deputy marshal's force, in attempting to arrest illicit distillers in Campbell County, was resisted, and the guide, named John Moore, was seriously wounded.

April 27, 1878, Collector Clark reports that Deputy Collector Hendricks's force was attacked by a body of armed citizens, and his guide, named Middleton Neal, was captured, and when attempting to escape was seriously wounded.

In July, 1878, a man named Eason, living in Campbell County, who had been a witness against illicit distillers before the court at Atlanta, was called out of his house at midnight and murdered.

During the same month Deputy Marshal Montgomery had prisoners released from him by an armed force in Chattooga County.

January 30, 1877, Collector Clark reports that Deputy Collector Fox's party, in Cherokee County, while driving along the road was fired into from the woods and the roadside. One guide was instantly killed, and the driver of the team was badly wounded.

The collector, in reporting this, says that he sincerely deplores the existence of such a state of affairs as renders the officers of the law liable to be assassinated at any turn of the road, but as matters of fact they are compelled to appear on the record.

March 3, 1879, he reports that Deputy Collector Shepherd informs him that a person who acted as guide for his party in Raven County was shot, and it is thought fatally.

District of South Carolina.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
64	23 months	$22,067

Number of illicit stills siezed.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
199	267	2	6

January 17, 1877, Collector Carpenter reported that Deputy Collector Barton and one Hendrix, while attempting to arrest Lewis Redmond, a notorious illicit distiller, were shot and almost fatally wounded. On the 20th of January, Redmond, accompanied by some twenty of his friends, surrounded Deputy Collector Barton's house early in the morning and compelled him, under the threat of instant death, to pay him $100 for the seizure he had recently made from him, and, at the same time, in addition to this, took away as a reprisal one of Barton's horses.

On the 11th of June, 1877, Revenue Agent Wagner reported that James Ledford was brutally murdered by a party of men under the lead of James Weaver at Landram railroad station. Ledford had rendered some assistance a few days previous to the revenue officers in attempting to arrest Weaver for illicit distilling. This murder was committed in the presence of a large number of citizens.

Under date of August 6, 1877, Lieutenant John Anderson, of the Eighteenth United States Infantry, who was in command of a detachment of troops stationed at Greenville, who had been called upon to assist the officers in the execution of the revenue laws, reports that in the northern part of the State, the mountainous portion of it, about 90 per cent. of the adult male population are engaged in the manufacture and sale of corn whisky, paying no tax, and wholly ignoring the United States laws. He says that the civil officers have been powerless to suppress this business, and in nearly every case when they have gone to the mountains in the execution of their duties without the protection of troops they have met with resistance and some lives have been lost in attempting to enforce the laws.

November 2, 1877, Collector Brayton reports that Thomas Bryson and Joseph Hunter were arrested and their teams seized in the town of Woodruff, Spartanburgh County, while removing illicit whisky. A crowd of their friends at once gathered, the team was forcibly recaptured, and the prisoners were released.

On the 20th of December, 1877, Deputy Collector Daniels, with two assistants, had seized a wagon from which illicit spirits were being sold by one Ira Langston. They were attacked and the property recaptured.

On the 27th of December, 1877, Deputy Collectors Kane and Cummings, assisted by Deputy Marshal Durham, seized a wagon containing fraudulently removed tobacco and arrested the owner, upon whose person were found some internal-revenue stamps which had been removed from packages. While the officers were proceeding with the prisoners and property to the United States commissioner, and near West's Store, in Union County, they were met by a rifle company, numbering about one hundred men, armed with Winchester rifles, and a portion of them mounted and uniformed. The officers were immediately surrounded by the militia company, who shouted "Release those prisoners!" After some resistance, the prisoners were released, and the property recaptured by the militia. Joseph Gibbs, a trial-justice, and B. A. Gregory, a State constable, were the principal persons in authority, and demanded the release. The deputy collector in reporting this affair says: "The offenders are persons of means and influence, and will make, no doubt, a determined resistance to arrest, backed as they are by a community hostile to the revenue laws of the United States." Subsequently warrants were issued for the arrest of the parties. They refused to be arrested by United States officers, but finally consented to appear before the commissioner.

January 29, 1878, Collector Brayton reported that the store of Mr. W. J. Roberts, at Whitaker Station, in Spartanburg County, was raided by a crowd, on account of a suspicion that he had given information of the illicit distillery of Peter Mabry. The store was broken open, and his stock of goods either stolen or destroyed. On the following night his dwelling was surrounded by a crowd of men, who fired off guns and pistols, and threatened his life. He was protected, however, by persons who happened to be spending the night with him. He was obliged to flee to Spartanburg for safety.

On the 12th of March, 1878, Collector Brayton reported that all the prisoners committed to Pickens County jail for illicit distillation had been forcibly released by an armed mob supposed to be led by Redmond. The mob also surrounded the house of one William Gray, whom they suspected of having assisted the revenue officers, demanded his surrender, and threatened his life. Finding Gray absent, they started in pursuit of him, stating that they intended to drive every revenue officer out of the county. Authority was given to the collector to employ one hundred men, if necessary, to assist in maintaining the majesty of the law. Under this authority he employed twenty-five men as a posse.

On the 10th of April, 1878, Deputy Marshal Spriggs, while engaged with the collector's force, who were in pursuit of illicit stills, was shot and instantly killed by parties concealed in the brush.

Under date of June 28, 1878, Collector Brayton reports that on the 27th of June Deputy Collector Hoffman received information that a cattle dealer named Griffin had been killed, under the supposition that he was a revenue officer, at East Fork shortly after the departure of Hoffman's force from that locality.

November 21, 1878, the collector's force, operating in Abbeville, South Carolina, had retired for the night to a farm-house; during the night it was surrounded by an armed mob and at least forty shots were fired and the officers ordered to leave.

December 11, 1878, a quantity of illicit spirits which had been seized near Walhalla by Collector Brayton's force was rescued by a party of armed Georgians.

On the 10th of February, 1879, Collector Brayton reports that Deputy Collector White, assisted by one Childers, seized a wagon containing illicit whisky, and attempted to arrest the driver, one Smith. He was forcibly resisted, and both White and Childers were wounded, and the property released.

On the 16th of April, 1879, Collector Brayton reported that his force was fired upon while seizing a still on Chattooga River, eighteen miles from Walhalla.

April 19, 1879, Collector Brayton reports that while his force was seizing a still, twelve miles from Spartanburgh, it was fired upon and Deputy Collector Byron was wounded.

Second district, Tennessee.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
9	3 months.	$1,672 20

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
159	663	4	2

June 24, 1877, Collector Cooper reported that his force was fired upon by an armed party in Union County.

July 6, 1877, Collector Cooper reported as the result of the operations of his force in Hancock County the seizure of the distillery of Dol. Ray, where his force was resisted and fired upon by the assailants and driven to the woods.

October 24, 1877, Revenue Agent Brownlow telegraphs that "Dol. Ray has again attacked, and shot and killed Rains for the reason that he believed Rains gave the information which led to the seizure of his distillery."

In the fall of 1877, two men named Legers were killed in Grainger County for having given information leading to the seizure of an illicit distillery.

January 24, 1878, Floyd Collins was shot by illicit distillers. Soon afterward, in an attempt to arrest the parties, a fight ensued which resulted in the killing of Rhea, and Cobb, an officer.

June 17, 1878, Collector Cooper reported that his deputy collectors operating in Union County were fired upon by illicit distillers, and prisoners whom they had arrested were rescued.

August 6, 1878, Deputy Collector Cooper, a son of the collector, while attempting to seize the illicit distillery of Hut. Amarine, which was strongly guarded by armed men, was fired upon by the distillers and fatally wounded.

March 30, 1879, Collector Cooper reported that his force in Hancock County was attacked by a party of nine men, who opened fire on them. His officers promptly returned the fire and put the attacking party to flight.

April 19, 1879, Collector Cooper's force of deputy collectors was fired on from ambush near the headwaters of Citico Creek and Deputy Collector Lindsay severely wounded.

Fifth district, Tennessee.

Number of special deputies employed.	Time of employment.	Cost of same.
42	17 months	$11,013 46

Number of illicit stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers and employés killed.	Officers and employés wounded.
196	322	2	3

In June, 1877, Deputy Collector Elder seized several illicit distilleries in Jackson and other counties. A month afterward a deputy marshal went to Gainesborough, and the report going out that it was Elder, a number of men gathered in to kill him, but found their mistake before proceeding to violence.

October 1, 1877, Deputy Collector Hughes telegraphed from Columbia that Thomas J. Williams, who acted as a guide for him against illicit distillers in Lawrence County, was taken from his house the Monday night previous by disguised men and murdered.

February 11, 1878, Collector Woodcock reported that Deputy Collector Davis, with a force, started out to seize illicit distillers in Jackson and Macon Counties. Soon they discovered the distillery of Campbell Morgan, located in a hollow surrounded by densely wooded hills. The distillery was constructed with double-lined doors and port-holes on every side. When the officers had reached within one hundred yards of the distillery, Morgan declared if they continued to advance he would kill every one of them. As they approached, Morgan opened fire through the port-holes. His gun was shattered, but he immediately brought out another and continued to fire very rapidly at Davis's party. Some of the party succeeded in firing at Morgan through the other port-hole, and he finally surrendered. In this distillery they found two double-barreled shot-guns, two muskets, and two pistols.

May 22, 1878, while attempting to seize an illicit distillery in Grundy County, Deputy Collecter Davis was attacked by seven armed men who fired upon him, and in defending himself one of his assailants was killed.

June 24, 1878, Deputy Collector Phillips reported that on the 12th of that month in De Kalb County, while destroying a distillery said to belong to English and Johnson, he was fired upon from the bushes; and again at a distillery said to belong to J. R. Richmond, three miles from Cookville, he was fired upon; and on the 19th, while traveling on the public road seven miles east of Cookville in Putnam County, his party was fired upon from the timber. He also stated that, from talking with some of the citizens in the different counties through which his course was taken, he found it was the determination of the illicit distillers and their sympathizers, if they could not stop their operations by armed resistance, to have them arrested in every county on some kind of charge and brought before the State courts, and to require a bond larger than they could give.

Collector Woodcock, under date of July 18, 1878, says:

"The opposition to the enforcement of the laws has taken a new turn, and it appears to be systematic. It seems that law violators have determined to have a warrant in the hands of the State authorities to arrest my deputies or some of their number as soon as they shall have arrived in a given county. A short time since I had to go to Tracie City to give bail for Davis, and this afternoon I received a telegram asking me to come to Cookville on next train, as Phillips had been arrested."

August 26, 1878, Collector Woodcock sent copy of the following telegram from Deputy Collector Ayres:

"LEBANON, TENNESSEE, August 4, 1878.

"W. M. WOODCOCK,
Collector, Nashville:

"We were attacked yesterday at 6 p. m. by Campbell Morgan and band, and under heavy fire for forty-five minutes. Phillips, Tippins, and Smith were wounded."

Collector Woodcock subsequently reported that his force, consisting of nine deputies and United States Commissioner Mather, were attacked in Overton County, nine miles from Cookville. The fight lasted nearly an hour, and the officers were forced to retire with three of their number badly wounded. Collector Woodcock was directed to organize a party of sufficient strength to overcome all opposition and to enforce the laws. He organized a force of sixty men, who left Nashville in September for operations in that county. His deputy collector, under date of October 5, reports that one portion of the force, on the West Fork of Bia River, was met by an armed body and fired into. The other portion, attempting to cross Roaring River, found a large body of men on the cliff to oppose them. They succeeded, however, in crossing at another ford, when fire was opened upon them and they were compelled to retire. The nature of the country was such that they were unable to cope with the enemy, and withdrew. They succeeded, however, in seizing nine distilleries.

On the 18th of September, 1878, Deputy Collector Davis, who had been indicted in the State court, went to Tracie City to appear at the court, and while he and some of his friends were walking from the court-house to their boarding-house, they were fired upon by some persons concealed in a thicket in the outskirts of the village, and James Spears, who was at Davis's side, was fatally wounded.

In November, 1878, I directed Collector Woodcock to organize a force to seize all the stills in Fentress and Jackson Counties, and to be careful that it was sufficiently strong to enforce the law at all hazards. I, at the same time, directed Collectors Landram, of the eighth district of Kentucky, and Cooper, of the second district of Tennessee, to organize a force to co-operate with Collector Woodcock in the counties bordering upon his district. The operations of the combined forces were eminently successful, and I think the illicit distillers became satisfied that it was the intention of the Government to enforce the laws. However, on the 15th of March, 1879, Collector Woodcock reported that fifty-two armed men attacked the jail in Hartsville and released a prisoner committed there for illicit distilling, and also recaptured a still stored in the vicinity.

Since March 1, 1877, in several of the districts in the Southern States while operations for the suppression of illicit distillation were being vigorously prosecuted, many of the illicit distillers against whom warrants had been issued expressed an earnest desire to abandon their fraudulent practices and by direction of the honorable Attorney-General, with your approval, they were permitted to come into court, plead guilty, and have their sentences suspended during good behavior. Pleas of guilty with suspension of sentence have been taken as follows:

In Georgia	792
In South Carolina	378
In North Carolina	370
In Alabama	114
In Tennessee	426
Total	2,080

The pleas of guilty in Tennessee have been taken at the term of court now in session at Nashville, where a very large number of indictments are pending, and from the best information I can obtain I think the number of pleas of guilty with suspension of sentence will reach nearly, if not quite one thousand.

Statement of expenditures from the appropriation for "punishment for violations of internal-revenue laws," covering the period from January 1, 1877, to May 1, 1879, for the discovery and punishment of frauds upon the internal-revenue laws, exclusive of expenses of collections, &c.

States.	Amounts expended.
Arkansas	$1,203 07
Alabama	5,313 34
California	551 47
Georgia	20,907 17
Iowa	227 60
Illinois	4,209 81
Indiana	1,343 40
Kentucky	20,643 79
Louisiana	4,379 55
Maryland	383 00
Missouri	3,179 21
Mississippi	500 00
New York	7,457 24
New Jersey	100 00
North Carolina	27,478 33
Nebraska	250 00
Ohio	3,166 49
Pennsylvania	2,548 57
Rhode Island	50 00
South Carolina	16,029 37
Tennessee	22,543 06
Texas	450 00
Virginia	8,858 22
Vermont	130 00
Wisconsin	250 00
West Virginia	3,518 96
Total	155,671 65

Statement of illicit stills seized and persons arrested for illicit distillation in the United States from July 1, 1876, to April 1, 1879.

State.	Stills seized.	Persons arrested.	Officers or employés killed.	Officers or employés wounded.
Alabama	172	778	1
Arkansas	34	33	1
California	6	2	.....
Connecticut	1	1	.....
Georgia	471	1,473	5	8
Illinois	12	10	.....
Indiana	13	1	.....
Kentucky	140	284	1	4
Louisiana	6	1	.....
Maine	.....	1	.....
Maryland	3	2	.....
Massachusetts	2	2	.....
Mississippi	21	13	.....
Missouri	52	130	.....
New Jersey	17	10	.....
Nebraska	1	1	.....
North Carolina	758	853	2	8
New York	68	54	.....	1
Ohio	19	20	.....
Pennsylvania	11	9	.....
South Carolina	199	267	2	6
Tennessee	417	993	6	5
Texas	9	5	.....
Vermont	2	2	.....
Virginia	126	267	1	2
Wisconsin	5	3	.....
West Virginia	73	47	.....	1

Summary.

Amount expended for special deputies for the purpose of suppressing illicit distillation, $109,135.53.

Number of illicit stills seized in Southern States, 2,485.
Number of illicit stills seized in all other States, 153.
Number of persons arrested in Southern States for illicit distilling, 5,281.
Number of persons arrested in all other States for illicit distilling, 141.
Number of persons killed in suppressing illicit distillation, 19.
Number wounded, 35.

Two important facts remain to be stated:

First. A very serious embarrassment to the enforcement of the laws of the United States has resulted from the institution of numerous unjust criminal prosecutions in the State courts against the officers of the United States by violators of the internal-revenue laws and their friends. Especially has this been the case in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee, where in some instances the State officers and even judges on the bench have lent the weight of their influence to weaken the authority of the officers and laws of the United States.

Second. The State officers and State courts, while often invoked to arrest and punish United States officers for alleged offenses, have rarely ever taken any steps to arrest or indict persons guilty of assaulting or murdering the officers of the United States.

I have entered into the details of this branch of the public service so as to show you its magnitude and importance, and to call your attention to the fact that the efforts for the suppression of frauds in the manufacture and sale of spirits and tobacco, for the want of a sufficient amount of funds, have been periodical, and not continuous.

The practice of defrauding the Government and resisting its officers has become so firmly fixed that it is impossible to enforce the laws against such offenders without the presence of a force of armed men sufficiently strong to deter resistance and, if necessary, to overcome it.

As will be seen, in a number of the collection districts the efforts to suppress frauds have been so vigorous that large bodies of men have become convinced of the determination and power of the Government to enforce its laws, and, through influential citizens, have prevailed upon the Government to pursue a lenient course toward them by allowing them to plead guilty of their offenses and have their sentences suspended during good behavior. I am advised by officers in whose judgment and experience I rely that while this course has had the effect of producing a better state of public sentiment, yet it will be necessary to maintain a strong force of deputy collectors for the purpose of policing those districts from month to month as a measure of repression, so as to prevent these violators of the law from relapsing into their old habits; and to provide for the payment of a proper number of deputy collectors there should be an appropriation for the next fiscal year of at least $1,900,000 for "salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue" instead of $1,800,000, as is proposed by the bill now pending in the Senate.

At the commencement of the present fiscal year, after the needful allowances were made for the ordinary expenses of collecting the revenue, but little more than $50,000 of the aforenamed appropriation could be set apart for this repressive service, and I found that sum totally inadequate to make proper provision for the enforcement of the laws.

So much has been done, however, that I am satisfied that we are on the eve of the extirpation of these great frauds, and if sufficient appropriation is made to enable the employment of a suitable force to thoroughly police the infected districts during the ensuing fiscal year, I am satisfied that the illicit manufacture of tobacco and spirits will be reduced to a minimum and the revenues greatly augmented by the establishment of legal distilleries and factories.

It must be borne in mind that an increased collection of revenue invariably follows the enforcement of the laws, and in a number of the districts where the illicit manufacture of spirits and tobacco has greatly prevailed and has been measurably suppressed the receipts have increased from ten to fifteen thousand dollars per month, so that money judiciously expended in this way is returned more than tenfold in the collection of taxes.

I have the honor of making the foregoing statements of facts the basis of the following recommendations:

First. I recommend that an act of Congress be passed for the punishment in the courts of the United States of the crime of murder, and assault to murder, when perpetrated upon an officer of the United States during or for the performance of his official acts as an officer.

Second. I recommend that the appropriation for "salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue" for the next fiscal year shall be $1,900,000, and if you concur in these views I have to request that this communication be laid before the proper committee of Congress.

Very respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. WHYTE. I give way to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] in concluding his address to the Senate this morning, said there would be an entire and complete stampede of the negroes from the South in 1880 unless a change in their treatment, as he was pleased to express it, was brought about in the mean time. Sir, if that stampede or exodus should occur, I hope for no more just retribution on the Senator from Minnesota than that his State may be filled up with the refugees. I ask that the gentleman may have a full and complete dose of his own physic, and then he will find whether the Northern States will esteem this population as the blessing they seem now to think it.

Mr. President, the gentleman reiterates the charge made by the Senator from Kansas that the circular of Lycurgus P. Jones read here in the Senate was an absolute forgery. Sir, I care not whether it was a forgery or not; I charge that that document was distributed among the negroes of the South, and, if a forgery, it adds simply to the crime that was perpetrated. It was used exactly as chromos painted in garish colors to catch the negro imagination, were distributed through the South, portraying homes surrounded by honeysuckles and wild prairie flowers, and the game of the western prairies, no work, no labor, exemption from all the ordinary cares of life, and the only thing to be done in return, to vote the straight republican ticket. [Laughter.] That was the picture distributed among the negroes of the South; and in addition to that, they were threatened with the tomahawk and scalping-knife of the savage; they were told that the democratic party intended to enslave all of them it could and then turn the wild Indians of the plains loose upon the remainder in order that a wholesale massacre might exterminate the race.

The Senator from Minnesota has read to the Senate the full text of that remarkable document published in the city of Saint Louis. I listened attentively—and I had read it before—to the list of names appended to that instrument. I repeat here to-day from my place in the Senate and to the people of the United States that that document was a political invention. I charge that not one single democratic name is affixed to it; I charge that it contains principally the names of Federal office-holders and ex-Federal office-holders, men who have lived upon salaries obtained from the Federal Government. In that list are the names of the men who are distinguished most in Missouri by their proscription of democrats and of the tax-paying citizens of the State. In that list are the names of those who invented that miserable scheme which disfranchised the body of the people of Missouri and that gave the elective suffrage to the ignorant, the degraded, and the debased. In that list is an ex-judge of the supreme court of Missouri who decided on the supreme bench of Missouri in favor of those laws which have stamped infamy upon the legislation of the republican party of my State—laws so infamous, decisions so iniquitous that the Supreme Court of the United States, republican as it was, was called upon, in the interest of common decency and civilization, to reverse and stamp out those infamous decisions. Those are the men that signed that proclamation or statement to the people of the country. Not one democratic name is upon it. It is a political invention; and I state here now that Ex-Senator John B. Henderson, for whom I have the highest respect, stated to me in this Senate Chamber, when I inquired of him in regard to his signature to that paper and in regard to the true condition of these negroes, that he had never seen them, and that he had signed it upon the request of political associates and upon that request alone.

But, sir, what does that instrument state? It says what the gentleman from Minnesota knows and what I know, that these negroes brought from a semi-tropical climate, clothed in cotton goods, and brought to the northern latitudes, were there shivering, without money and without food, upon the pier in the city of Saint Louis. Is that anything strange, I ask my friends on the other side of the Chamber? Was it not to be expected? I state here now that the men who are bringing the negroes from the South to the frosty plains of Kansas are bringing them there to certain destitution and certain death; and I say more, that the men to-day who are proclaiming themselves to the country the best friends of the negroes will be the first to leave them when they cease to be food for political capital and political uses.

Sir, I am a better friend this day to the negroes of this country than the gentleman from Minnesota. I was born with them, nursed by them, owned them, never sold one for profit, and treated them as I did the members of my own family, as they were; and to-day my former slaves in the State of Missouri come to me in every adversity, come to me for pecuniary assistance; and I speak it to-day without wishing to make any personal statement, simply that two of them, one the old nurse who fondled me in her arms, are to-day the recipients of my daily bounty, and live upon the means that I provide for them. How many has the gentleman assisted and so been the friend of? How many? He will go down to posterity as the father of the exodus, I suppose, along-side the Father of his Country, only second in peace and in war to that illustrious statesman and patriot. He boasts that he is the originator of this exodus!

Mr. President, the gentleman from Minnesota has brought these people from the latitude and clime where God and nature placed them, and has put them where they will become the victims of climate and the victims of what I conceive to be a fraud upon them perpetrated in the interest of a great political party. Now, sir, I have here a document sent me by the mayor of Kansas City on April 25, when he applied to the Secretary of War for the use of the Government grounds at Fort Leavenworth in order to place these negroes upon them. I will state here that these negroes came to Kansas City, where I live, absolutely destitute, almost starving, and the question then placed before our people was whether we should extend to them the ordinary charity due from one human being to another or permit them to die in the streets. Democrats furnished the money that fed them; democrats furnished the money that clothed them. The mayor of my city, a democrat, used from the contingent fund of the city enough money to give them relief and send them to the Arcadia in Kansas to which they had been allured. I ask the Secretary now to read the statement in answer to a telegram I myself sent to know the real facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, April 25, 1879.

DEAR SIR: Answering yours of 22d, concerning negro emigration, can only give you information which I have gathered from personal examination and inquiry since their arrival at this point. The arrivals so far number about two thousand; all from Mississippi and Louisiana, and seemingly from a district of country within seventy-five miles of Vicksburgh. The majority of them are either old uncles and aunties or pickaninnies; never saw so many people with no middle-aged among them. They are all, except the infants, field-hands; no house servants in the lot; of course the most ignorant of their race, with the crudest notions of liberty or freedom. Their reason for coming to Kansas is, to use their own expression, "Kansas is where everything is free."

My reason for wiring the Secretary of War was to get the use of the Government reservation at Fort Leavenworth for a few days, until we could relieve ourselves of the unusual burden. Since that time aid has been rendered in sufficient amount to enable the authorities to transport them to various places in the State of Kansas; and if there is no further shipments from the South, we don't wish any appropriation or legislation.

The conversation referred to in the press occurred betweed two colored men from Saint Louis who were here attending the shipment of negroes, and said they were carrying out a plan laid out by WINDOM, Garrison, BLAINE, and others with whom they were in daily communication. I have no proof except the statements of these two parties, who were well posted and financially well fixed.

Respectfully,

GEO. M. SHELLEY.

Hon. GEORGE G. VEST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. VEST. That is the statement made by the mayor of Kansas City, who has been as active and zealous in giving relief to these people, and more so, than any other man I know of, either in the State of Missouri or the State of Kansas. I vouch not for the correctness of the statements made by those negroes in regard to this scheme or plan of the Senator from Minnesota, the Senator from Maine, and others; but I have this to say, that this evidence is exactly what has been used by those gentlemen in debates in the Senate to prove the southern people to be assassins, murderers, thieves, and scoundrels. If we have heard one page here we have had a hundred, of the testimony or statements of field hands in the South charging outrages by the ku-klux night-riders, as they have been called, and the assassins who went through the South murdering the colored population. If such testimony is good against the people of the South, crushed by the force of arms, whose country is almost devastated by the crash and ruin of a terrible war—if that testimony is good in the mouths of gentlemen on the opposite side of this Chamber, I commend to them the same testimony to prove that this is a political plan got up by leading republicans for the purpose of making political capital.

Who sent these negroes to Kansas? They either went, driven by persecution, driven by the intolerable condition to which they were forced by the people of the South, or they went there lured by false promises and false hopes; and to-day upon the plains of Kansas they lift up their ebony hands to heaven and invoke the vengeance of God upon the men who took them from happy homes and have used them for their own purposes. I saw them myself standing upon the wharf at Wyandotte, waiting and praying for the means of transportation to that land where the bowie-knife, the revolver, and the shot-gun, according to these gentlemen, reign supreme. One hundred and eighty-eight of them went in a boat down the turbid waters of the Mississippi, and when they landed in that terrible land of oppression below Vicksburgh, they landed with shouts of joy and welcomed again the revolver, the shot-gun, the bowie-knife, in preference to dear, sweet, hospitable Kansas.

That, sir, is the history of the negro exodus, and I commend to the gentleman the advice of Fred Douglass, of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE,] and the intelligent and leading men of the colored race in the United States to their people to remain at home, to remain where God has placed them, and there by industry, by thrift, by educating themselves and their children they can build up a future worthy of themselves and the inheritance which God has given them. But if they wander after these strange gods, if they are lured away under promises that there is a land where they will be exempt from labor and the ordinary ills of human life, they will doubtless find that it is Dead Sea fruit that turns to ashes upon their lips, and they and their children will curse political jugglers who—

> Keep the word of promise to the ear,
> But break it to the hope.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, only a single word. To begin where the Senator left off, I will say that Mr. Douglass, whom he quotes, did not practice upon that theory himself which my friend from Missouri says he advises other colored people to adopt. The Senator also speaks of the exultant joy with which these people returned to their southern homes. If that is so, I ask the Senator why he is so nervous about the exodus? If they are so glad to get back again from this terrible Kansas, he need give himself no anxiety about the exodus in the future.

Mr. VEST. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I have simply to say in the name of the people of the State of Missouri, that there are some fifty or seventy-five thousand probably of these negroes in my State, and we are willing to give them transportation to any State in the Union to which they propose to go. Nervous! My God, sir, I am not affected, except that I do not propose to stand or sit on this floor and hear day after day charges made against the democratic party and the people of the South which I know myself personally to be not true.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I have only a word more to say. The Senator says that he has contributed largely to the support of these negroes, and he asks how much I have contributed. I presume I have contributed as much as he; but, whether I have or not, no human being ever worked for me all his life as my slave, and I am under no such obligation as the Senator is of remunerating the men whose unrequited labor he has lived upon so long.

Mr. VEST. I will inform the Senator again, if he pleases, that my negroes brought me in debt.

Mr. WINDOM. I apprehend, then, if the Senator's negroes brought him in debt he was in a very helpless condition, for as a general thing those who owned slaves relied upon slave labor for their support. If his negroes brought him in debt he had a hard time of it. The Senator says I threatened in my former remarks that there would be a general exodus in 1880. I made no threat, and my chief purpose in taking the floor now is to say that I made no threat. If anybody understood me as making a threat I was wholly misunderstood. I simply entered a prophecy based upon the condition of things which I know to exist.

I will say to the Senator that I do not desire this general exodus. I hope it may not take place. I believe if the colored people can be fairly treated, as American citizens ought to be treated, they are better off in the South than they are in the North or West. I hope there may be a change in their condition, so that they will stay there. I do not desire the exodus. I will do all I can, if the Senator and others who have control of them in the South will treat them fairly, to induce them to remain where they are. And I will go as far as any other Senator in aiding by all proper means to build up the waste places of the South, and secure the return of prosperity to that section by securing to every citizen all his rights under the Constitution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a very few moments, and I should be glad to have the attention of my friend from Minnesota. Yesterday he had inserted in the RECORD, by general consent, a statement of the defaulters from 1830 to 1861, and he has styled them "democratic defaulters." That Senator certainly knows that in the period named there were administrations not democratic.

Mr. WINDOM. How many?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Several.

Mr. WINDOM. What were they?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe opposition Presidents were elected in 1840, in 1848, and perhaps there were some other administrations that were not democratic.

Mr. WINDOM. Was not Tyler's administration slightly democratic?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Tyler's?

Mr. WINDOM. Tyler's administration, that came in after the election of 1840?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Tyler came in in 1840, I understand, like some of the Senator's statements, under false pretenses.

Mr. WINDOM. I said yesterday that during those thirty years the Whigs had twice elected their President, but that death and democracy had in both instances captured the administration.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend—I call him my friend because I so regard him——

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senator will not think of me in any other light.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have the greatest respect for him and I consider him a personal friend, though politically we differ very widely. My friend, instead of heading his list of defaulters as it should have been headed, "Defaulters while in Government service between 1830 and 1861," has a heading "Democratic Defaulters." That of itself is not right; it is improper; but that is not the thing especially to which I want to call attention.

In the whole of that period of thirty-one years to what do the defalcations amount? Six million dollars in round numbers is all that could be figured up in a period of thirty-odd years. Then the Senator adds the bank defaulters, and that makes a total of about $10,000,000.

Mr. WINDOM. Let me correct the Senator right there.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. WINDOM. This is a list of defaulters in amounts exceeding $10,000 each. The thousands of smaller defalcations, under $10,000, are not given.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If there had been any of them worth naming, my friend would have had them in. This list no doubt was gotten up for a political purpose, and I am going to refer to it directly and tell where it came from. If there had been any other defalcations worth naming, they would have been there. Of course there were some little ones that are probably not here, but for thirty years my friend gets up $6,000,000 of defalcation. I presented to him the fact (and he is trying to get rid of it, but cannot do it) that in a single department, the Internal Revenue department, for eight years we had upwards of $20,000,000 of defalcation; $20,000,000 for eight years in a single department under the present political administration, while $10,000,000, including the banks, is all that can be raised for thirty years under other administrations. That is a pretty fair showing of democratic administrations, and it would be better for the country if they were continued. If for thirty years of democratic administrations the defalcations, according to the statement furnished by the Senator, were $10,000,000, including the banks, and $6,000,000 exclusive of the banks, I think that is a pretty fair showing, especially when in a single department for eight years under the present political administration we have $20,000,000 of defalcations.

Mr. WINDOM. Does the Senator insist upon repeating that the amount is $20,000,000 in view of the report I have read here?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator again if it is not an official document, if it did not come from the Department, and if it was not taken from the books? He so said. It is said that it was taken from the books of the Treasury Department relating to the transactions of officers of the internal-revenue service, then out of office, and it amounts to more than $20,000,000, and the Senator cannot get rid of it.

Mr. President, another word. The Senator read yesterday as to the amount of losses to the Government commencing with the early administrations, showing that in Washington's administration, for instance, the losses of the Government from defaulters, &c., were much greater than under General Grant. That was the statement of the Senator yesterday, and he read from a document of which I presume I have a copy now, though they are printed in a different form. This document is headed "Treasury Department, Washington, D. C., August 10, 1876," and I received it from the Department this morning. The Senator having referred to it yesterday, I went there and asked for it, and they were kind enough to furnish it to me, as it was a public document. Now, what does that show? Let me state the condition of things it shows. I do not believe it is correct; but according to this document the administration of General Grant for six years cost this Government more than seventy-two years of democratic and whig rule cost. If this document be true, and if the statement that the Senator made yesterday be true, then General Grant expended more money, exclusive of the payment of interest on the public debt, in six years than was expended in seventy-two years of whig and democratic administration.

Now, what are the figures? For the seventy-two years named by me the total disbursements of the Government were $2,230,000,000. What were they for General Grant's administration for six years, and this only takes in six years of the eight years he was President, $4,007,000,000, showing nearly double as much in six years under the Grant administration as was expended in seventy-two years of democratic and whig rule, from the beginning of the Government down to 1860. In other words, the Grant administration in six years cost this Government more money, exclusive of the payments for the public debt, than the entire Government cost from the beginning down to 1860, including the debt incurred by the revolutionary war, by the Indian wars, the Mexican war, and all the pensions that grew out of them. That is the case if this document be true, and I say that it comes from the Treasury Department, and was quoted by my friend yesterday.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him just at that point?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly. I should be glad to have an explanation.

Mr. WINDOM. I will say that the pensions we were compelled to pay on account of a democratic rebellion cost in one year more than two or three years of the expenses of the General Government at that time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is no come-off at all; it amounts to nothing. The pensions have never cost over about $30,000,000, we all know, and they were never up to $30,000,000 during General Grant's administration.

Mr. WINDOM. There were many years in the earlier history of the Government when the entire expenses of the Government did not cost $10,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Of course there were, and that was when we had much better days than we have now. I see my friend is leaving the Chamber. I think he ought to leave. He is having poured into him hot shot, and he ought to leave. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINDOM. I am only going to get a drink of water. I must cool off. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, I have a word more to say, and then I shall have done. My friend from Minnesota yesterday stated that the losses to the Government in General Washington's administration were $2.20 per thousand dollars, and in Grant's administration thirty-four cents per thousand. If that be so what must have been the difference in the expenditures of those two administrations? I hope Senators will bear in mind that I am reading official figures given by the Treasury Department. The total disbursements in the administration of Washington were $55,000,000 in eight years. What were the total disbursements of General Grant's administration for six years? Four billions seven millions of dollars. That is the way in which the comparison stands. When you take eight years of Washington's administration you have $55,000,000. When you take six years of Grant's administration you have upward of $4,000,000,000. Who does not know that if you make a comparison of the percentage of loss every time a Treasury note or a bond happened to come into the Department or to go out in any form or manner, and if you call that a handling of money or a disbursement by the Government, it is all done with the intention of getting down the percentage of losses very low.

What else do we find here? If this document be true, in seventy-two years of democratic and whig rule the total loss to the Government in round numbers was $4,730,020.24. I am talking now of receipts. Let us see what the losses were from receipts in fourteen years from 1861 to 1875. You will find they were $4,348,198.10. So it is shown from this document that the losses from receipts were but a little less in the fourteen years of republican rule than they were in seventy-two years previous.

What else? The losses from the beginning of the Government down to 1860, according to this document, in disbursements were $18,000,000 in round numbers. For the fourteen years of republican rule they were $9,000,000; showing plainly that the Senator got on the wrong track when he undertook to show that in the Washington administration the loss was $2.20 per thousand, and in the Grant administration only thirty-four cents per thousand.

One word further and then I will have done, for there is other business to be attended to. I want to let the Senate know what the difference in the expenditures has been in the last few years. The Senator from Minnesota referred yesterday to the amount of expenditures under the different administrations recently. It is well known that in 1875 the House became democratic for the first time in recent years. At that time the net ordinary expenses of the Government, exclusive of the payment of interest on the public debt, were $194,000,000; the next year they were $171,000,000. I ask Senators just to notice what difference it makes whether the Houses are democratic or whether they are republican. See the difference in the expenditures. In 1874, as I said, the net ordinary expenditures of the Government were $194,000,000, in 1875 $171,000,000, in 1876 $161,000,000, in 1877 $144,000,000, in 1878 $134,000,000, showing a decrease in the expenditures of this Government, exclusive of the payments on account of the public debt, of about $60,000,000 in the four years of democratic rule as compared with what they formerly were. The saving has been about as much as it cost in 1860 to run the Government. In 1860 the expenses of the Government were about $60,000,000. That saving has taken place in the last four years under democratic rule in the House. The saving per annum has been about $60,000,000, or equal to the whole expenses of the Government in 1860.

Mr. President, I have a number of figures here and a number of documents to which I had intended to call the attention of the Senate, but I refrain from doing so, and will yield now to my friend from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.]

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT AT CHALMETTE, LOUISIANA.

Mr. WHYTE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. JONAS. If the Senator will yield a moment, I should like to have taken from the table a joint resolution from the House, which it will not take five minutes to pass.

Mr. WHYTE. If it does not lead to debate I will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS.) The Chair will lay before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives which the Senator from Louisiana asks to take up for present consideration.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 114) donating granite blocks to Mower Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Orleans, Louisiana, was read three times, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WHYTE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is entitled to the floor, and moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. Does the Senator withdraw the motion?

Mr. WHYTE. I should like to know for what purpose the Senator from Wisconsin desires me to do so.

Mr. CARPENTER. I did not understand that the Senator from Maryland had the floor.

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, sir; I made the motion for an executive session, and only yielded a moment to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator from Maryland gave away the floor; other legislative business had been transacted since, and I then first addressed the Chair.

Mr. WHYTE. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin if he wishes to bring forward some matter of short duration.

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not ask any favor about it; I thought I was entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2381) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses for the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 506) to change the name of the steam propeller Nuhpa to Metropolitan.

ENROLLED BILLS.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 674) for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields, and to increase the pension of Caroline S. Webster;

A bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 5) relative to certain accepted drafts and other papers in the Department of State; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 113) to provide for the purchase of the stereotype plates of the final reports of the centennial commission upon the centennial exhibition of 1876.

JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask that the judicial appropriation bill, which has just come from the House, be laid before the Senate for reference.

The bill (H. R. No. 2381) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses for the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS.) The bill will be read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations if there be no objection.

Mr. WINDOM. It has been read once. I object to the second reading. I am willing it should be read once and referred, if that can be done under the rules.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am certainly surprised to hear my friend object to the second reading of the bill. Is it possible——

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know what the bill contains.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and he will see it to-morrow morning.

Mr. WINDOM. It is for that very reason that I want it referred.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York rises to a question of order, which he will state.

Mr. CONKLING. The rule declares that no bill can be read more than once on one day except by unanimous consent. A Senator has risen and objected to the second reading of the bill, and I inquire, as a matter of order, whether it is in order for the Senator from West Virginia or anybody else to proceed to debate the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from New York.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is no question about the right of the Senator from Minnesota to object to the second reading of the bill, and there is no question about the right of the Senator from New York to make the point of order that he has made.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the question before the Senate?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is objection to the bill being read the second time; I understand that.

Mr. GARLAND. What is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is proceeding by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. GARLAND. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question before the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. Then debate is out of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not on the regular order?

Mr. CONKLING. The Chair differs with the honorable Senator. The Chair says there is no question before the Senate. In that the Chair is manifestly right.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is the regular order; which is before the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no regular order yet before the Senate.

Mr. GARLAND. That has not been resumed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is resumed naturally.

Mr. GARLAND. Oh, no.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. ALLISON and others. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. WINDOM. Has the appropriation bill been referred to the Committee on Appropriations? There is no objection to that, that I know of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been referred. The bill has been read once, and the question is on the second reading of the bill, to which the Chair understands the Senator from Minnesota to object.

Mr. WINDOM. Can it not be referred without a second reading?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It cannot be referred without a second reading.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand that the regular order is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I now appeal to my friend from Minnesota, and I should like to have his ear for a moment. Does my friend from Minnesota object to the second reading and reference to-day of the judicial appropriation bill?

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to the reference.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does my friend object to the second reading? It must be read the second time before it can be referred.

Mr. WINDOM. Is there any rule requiring it to be read the second time before a reference? I do not remember such a rule.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, yes; the rule requires it to be read the second time.

Mr. INGALLS. The rule requires a second reading of any bill before a motion to refer it can be entertained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota withdraw his objection to the second reading of the bill?

Mr. WINDOM. Not at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is not withdrawn.

Mr. EATON. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is before the Senate, which is Senate joint resolution No. 39.

Mr. EATON. If the Chair will permit me a moment, I hope the Senator from Minnesota, with whom I have the honor to be associated on the committee, will let the bill be read the second time and go to the Committee on Appropriations to be considered to-morrow.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know what the bill is; I am anxious to know.

Mr. EATON. I will say that the Senator shall have all the time required, so far as I have any power to give it, not only to read the bill but to discuss it on its merits; but if we can really further the public business a little by its reference to-day, I think we ought to refer it at once.

Mr. WINDOM. I will look over the bill in a moment and see. Perhaps I shall withdraw my objection to its second reading.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand my friend from Minnesota to withdraw his objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota declines to withdraw his objection for the present.

Mr. CONKLING. Regular order.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR VARIOUS PURPOSES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is Senate joint resolution No. 39, which is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, in order that the Senator from Minnesota may consider the judicial appropriation bill, and I hope it will be referred to-day. An objection to its second reading is in the nature of delay; it is in the nature of a day's continuation of this session.

Mr. CONKLING. Is the motion to go into executive session debatable?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend from New York need not be in a hurry; he will get time enough to discuss all these questions. I understand the regular order to be before the Senate, and upon that I am at liberty to speak to what I please within the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand the Senator from West Virginia to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, but to suggest that he would make such a motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. For the purpose of giving my friend from Minnesota an opportunity of looking at the judicial appropriation bill, I suggested that we go into executive session. I want the Senate to wait for that purpose, and I am occupying the floor to see what he may determine to do. My purpose is to see what the gentleman from Minnesota intends doing. Of course the regular order is before the Senate until such time as the Senate may take up the judicial bill. This morning, before the motion was made to go into executive session, I was presenting some figures to the Senate as to the expenses of the Government. I desire now to go on further in that line.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator proceeds to that point I should be glad to have him explain something he said yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the Senator explain a paragraph that I find in the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings. I do not quite understand what the Senator meant when he used this language:

> We were to keep confidential the proceedings of the committee—
>
> Referring to the committee of which my friend is chairman—
>
> but that was an exception; and I state that here now, and I have stated heretofore, that every single sentence and every figure, including the one that the debt of the Government had been largely increased, and in a single year nearly $100,000,000, will be and is true.

The impression that I gathered yesterday from the Senator's statement was, that he meant to state that there had been an increase of the public debt improperly in some way. We all know, of course, that the public debt has been frequently increased more than a hundred millions in a single year. I should like to have the Senator explain whether he means that the country is to understand, (because of course the country watches with great care the investigations being made by the Senator from West Virginia,) and whether we are to understand that this hundred millions of increase is one that appears now upon the Treasury books and did not appear there formerly?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I intended to say to the Senate, and repeat now, that in the year 1869, long after the debt ought to have been increased for any purpose whatever, when it was published that the debt was being decreased, the Secretary of the Treasury sent to Congress an official communication stating that the public debt in round numbers was $2,489,000,000. That was in the year 1869. In the year 1870 it was repeated that the public debt in round numbers was $2,480,000,000. So it was reported to the Senate for two years. But in 1871, when the report came from the same Secretary of the Treasury who had made the preceding reports, he reported to Congress that the debt was $2,588,000,000, an increase of $99,000,000 in round numbers over what it had been reported the two previous years; and, as I understand, it remains to-day upon the books of the Department and in the report sent to the last Congress the same amount of increase, that is $2,588,000,000, the statement still holding the increase of $99,000,000 over the previous years.

I will say in addition to what I have stated to my friend, that in the year 1862 Secretary Chase sent to Congress his annual official report, in which he said that the public debt in round numbers was $514,000,000. Mr. Fessenden, who succeeded Mr. Chase, and Mr. McCulloch, who came afterward, agreed that the debt was $514,000,000 on June 30, 1862. All the books of the Department, so far as we know, show it, and the different reports to Congress show it. Mr. Chase, in reviewing the indebtedness of the country in 1863, repeated that it was $514,000,000; Mr. Fessenden, in talking of the condition of the country and in reviewing the public debt, again stated that it was $514,000,000. But in 1871, when the report came to Congress, it had been changed and it was stated at $524,000,000, in round numbers. There was a statement sent to Congress for eight consecutive years, stating that the debt on June 30, 1862, was $514,000,000; but in 1871, when the report came to Congress, these figures had been changed and made $524,000,000, and it stands so to-day. There, I say, was a clear increase of about $10,000,000, speaking in round numbers, and that remains so to-day. I could continue and give probably eight or ten examples of the same kind of changes in the figures, and in each case that I cite they have been largely increased.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. WINDOM. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that I am willing to withdraw my objection and have the judicial bill read the second time and referred, if we may adjourn immediately afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly. I think this matter of the public debt will keep until to-morrow. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not go on further with his lucid explanation until to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Without reference to what the Senator from West Virginia will do to-morrow, I yield for the purpose the Senator from Minnesota has indicated.

JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I interposed the objection a moment ago for the purpose of having time to examine the bill. I am now willing to withdraw the objection and let the bill be read the second time in case we may have a vote to adjourn immediately afterward.

The bill (H. R. No. 2381) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses for the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and six minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 26, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ARMFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to offer for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all leaves of absence heretofore granted to members of the House of Representatives of the Forty-sixth Congress, which are unexpired, be, and the same are hereby, revoked; and that the Sergeant-at-Arms is directed immediately to notify every absent member to return at once to his post of duty in this Congress.

Mr. MORRISON and Mr. BAKER objected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 719) to change the name of the ferry-boat James Fisk, jr., to Passaic; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes.

DUTIES ON IMPORTED MERCHANDISE.

Mr. LAPHAM, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 167) to explain the Revised Statutes relative to duties on imported merchandise; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask that I may be allowed to present the views of the minority in reference to the bill just reported, and that they be printed with the report of the majority.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CODIFICATION OF DISTRICT LAWS.

Mr. HUNTON. With the concurrence of the members of the Committee for the District of Columbia who are present, I ask unanimous consent to offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia, by sub-committee, be authorized to sit during the recess for the purpose of considering the bill of the House (H. R. No. 2061) providing for the codification of the municipal laws and affairs of the District of Columbia, with the authority to employ the clerk of said committee and send for persons and papers; and the expenses necessarily incurred in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman explain what he means by "power to send for persons and papers?"

Mr. HUNTON. By the law passed in the Forty-fifth Congress the commissioners of the District of Columbia were directed to report to the House at its next session such laws as might be necessary for the government of the District in the shape of a codification of existing laws. That was reported at the next session and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia. As it was the short session no effort was made to act upon it then. It is a book of four hundred and odd pages.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him I will say that he did not understand me. My question was what necessity there is for power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not know there is any. We will sit here in the District and everybody will be convenient; but it was thought advisable to have that power if the necessity for it should arise.

Mr. CONGER. It is not, then, an investigating committee?

Mr. HUNTON. Oh, no; except into the laws of the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 674) for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields, and to increase the pension of Caroline S. Webster; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 5) relative to certain accepted drafts and other papers in the Department of State.

SALE OF LIQUORS IN THE CAPITOL.

Mr. BREWER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2379) to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, and ordered to be printed.

MAJOR D. WILLIAMS.

Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2380) granting a pension to Major D. Williams, Geneva, Fillmore County, Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHANGE OF NAME OF STEAM-PROPELLER NUHPA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the other day when the House went to the Speaker's table there was informally passed over the bill (S. No. 506) to change the name of the steam-propeller Nuhpa to Metropolitan. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MULLER] who was absent at that time and who has charge of the bill asks unanimous consent that it be now taken from the Speaker's table for consideration.

Mr. CONGER. I objected when that bill was reached in the consideration of business on the Speaker's table because I wanted some explanation in regard to it. Much as I am opposed to the change of name of such vessels I learn that this is a good substantial boat and that it is to run upon the same route hereafter, so that the public will not be deceived by a change of name. I therefore withdraw my objection.

Mr. MULLER. The boat is perfectly safe, and the parties owning it are reliable and responsible men.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. MULLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submits the following requests for leave of absence:

To Mr. SPARKS, indefinitely, on account of the sickness of his wife; and

To Mr. LADD, indefinitely, on account of important business.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will not object to the request of my colleague, [Mr. SPARKS,] who has been called home by the sickness of his wife.

Mr. DUNNELL. I withdraw the objection in that case. I may remark, however, that it is remarkable how sickness has increased in this House within the last few days.

NAVAL AND MARINE SCHOOL AT NEW ORLEANS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a memorial of the constitutional convention of the State of Louisiana, praying for the establishment of a naval and marine school at the port of New Orleans; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

INCOME CASE, UNITED STATES VS. JOHN S. DICKERSON.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, reported back the memorial of Fred Wallroth, of New York City, praying an investigation into the matter of the income case of the United States against John S. Dickerson; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ACKLEN. I have a matter which I have been instructed unanimously by the Committee on Commerce to report to the House for its consideration at this time. It is very important that it should pass during this extra session. It will not involve the Government in any extra expense.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ACKLEN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that demand; this will not detain the House many moments.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I must insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will begin at twenty minutes past twelve o'clock.

Mr. ACKLEN. I move to dispense with the morning hour for to-day.

The SPEAKER. That will require a two-thirds vote.

Mr. CLYMER. If the morning hour is dispensed with will that put out of place the bill in reference to canal-boats which was pending yesterday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that bill would come over as business after the morning hour. It would be subject, however, to the special order in relation to epidemic diseases.

Mr. CONGER. If the morning hour be dispensed with would not the unfinished business of yesterday be first in order?

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business of yesterday would be subject to the special order made by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. Then the regular order after the morning hour, or should the morning hour be dispensed with, would be the National Board of Health bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that by unanimous consent of the House that is made the first business in order after the morning hour to-day. After that bill shall have been disposed of in some way, then the joint resolution providing for treaty intercourse with the Republic of Mexico, reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs by the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. WILSON,] and which was made subordinate to the National Board of Health bill, will next be in order.

Mr. ACKLEN. I understand that it will rest with the majority of the House to decide what business it will take up for consideration after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the Chair merely indicates the subjects that will come up in their order.

Mr. ACKLEN. The Chair indicates the order in which those subjects will come up, but not what the House will take up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not undertake to control the matter of actual consideration; that is for the House to determine. The Chair submits the motions in due order.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman waive that motion to allow me to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ACKLEN. I have no objection.

JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2381) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed; and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman call the previous question on the bill?

Mr. ATKINS. On the motion to print and recommit.

Mr. HOUSE. The contents of that bill are so well known to the House that it does not seem to me it is necessary to have it printed.

Mr. ATKINS. I have made the usual motion. It is for the House to determine.

The SPEAKER. The House can refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I think members can become advised of what the bill contains by hearing it read.

Mr. ATKINS. I trust the gentleman will allow my motion to prevail. I can report the bill back again. However, I do not care much whether it goes to the Committee of the Whole or the Committee on Appropriations. My purpose is to try and get the floor in order to call up the bill for consideration as soon as it can be printed. I think it had better be printed.

Mr. STEVENSON. At the suggestion of members I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. HOUSE. I think the bill had better be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ATKINS. Very well. I will move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed; and on that motion I call the previous question.

The motion of Mr. ATKINS was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] to dispense with the morning hour for to-day.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the morning-hour business is to be taken up, I desire to claim the floor.

Mr. ACKLEN. I wanted to dispense with the morning hour for to-day.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will remind gentlemen that when the last debate was had in the morning hour I rose and claimed the floor. Since that time there has been no debate in the morning hour upon the pending bill in relation to what is termed political contributions. There was a speech by a gentleman on the other side, who had his time extended, so that he spoke for nearly two hours. It seems to me it would be nothing more than fair to allow a speech to be made on this side, and I would be glad to have the opportunity to submit now what remarks I desire to make.

Mr. ACKLEN. The chairman of the committee from which that bill was reported [Mr. HOSTETLER] is absent. The previous question has been demanded upon the bill, and it cannot be debated unless the previous question shall be withdrawn or voted down.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think there will be no objection to withdrawing the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ACKLEN. Then I will withdraw the motion to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at twenty-seven minutes past twelve o'clock.

Mr. HOUSE. Has the morning hour commenced?

The SPEAKER. It has. The pending question is the demand for the previous question upon the bill reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ACKLEN. He is not here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been notified that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] has been left in charge of the bill.

Mr. HOUSE. I must decline to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say that there was a distinct understanding, if gentlemen will recollect, when the debate was carried on before for an hour and twenty-five minutes I think by the other side of the House, that this side of the House should have an opportunity to be heard upon this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] was heard the other day.

Mr. HOUSE. There was no such understanding.

Mr. FINLEY. On the contrary, when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] was asked to say whether his side of the House would vote or not he declined to do so.

Mr. CONGER. If gentlemen refuse to allow a word to be said by this side of the House on this question, we are prepared to prevent the passage of the bill.

Mr. ACKLEN. I think it is only courtesy to allow the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to be heard.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make this suggestion to the House. There was an hour allowed to gentlemen on the other side and it was extended to two hours without any condition or arrangement whatever, but certainly it was the universal belief that the same courtesy, or a part of the courtesy at least, would without objection be allowed to this side to reply. It was on that understanding that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] was allowed the floor, and his time extended.

I make no appeal to gentlemen on the other side, but I ask them in view of that fact, if it is not fair to allow gentlemen on this side to reply?

Mr. HOUSE. There was no such understanding that I know of at all. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] made a speech on this bill. There have been two propositions made to the other side of the House which would have given the utmost latitude to debate on the bill, both of which were objected to, and the last was objected to by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] in terms not at all courteous to the gentleman who made the proposition and who had charge of the bill. I know of no understanding by which the other side, rejecting both propositions by which the gentleman would have the amplest debate, obtains; but if there was such understanding, I certainly would not violate it; but I know that we had no such understanding. The friends of the bill never agreed to such an understanding in view of the attitude of gentlemen upon the other side in reference to this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not say that there was any formal agreement to that effect, but I do say that according to a tacit understanding, which was manifested by the consent given to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] to proceed, there was unanimous consent granted by this side of the House to the other side. Now, if gentlemen on the other side do not see the equity of reciprocating that, if they see no moral or equitable consideration, of course we cannot insist upon it, but it strikes me that most men will see what amounts to an agreement, or at least to a moral obligation.

Mr. HOUSE. I do not see that there is any equity in that proposition, when gentlemen on the other side of the House by dilatory motions prevent the majority from acting on this bill. I do not see where they can get the right to defeat action on a bill by dilatory motions and still have time to discuss it.

Mr. CONGER. It was because of the refusal to have any discussion on the bill, and because the previous question was demanded without the right to debate and amendment, that we have prevented, and do intend to prevent, the seconding of the previous question.

Mr. HOUSE. The chairman of the Committee on Civil Service Reform withdrew the demand for the previous question, and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] got the floor and made a proposition that this bill go to the Committee of the Whole, and it was on that proposition that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] replied.

Mr. CONGER. But the other side refused to agree to any length of time that should be allowed for debate in the Committee of the Whole, as the majority can control it there as well as in the House. They have refused to allow debate.

Mr. KENNA. I call for the regular order of business.

CANAL-BOATS, ETC.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I move to dispense with the morning hour and take up the bill (S. No. 671) relating to vessels not propelled wholly by sail or internal motive power of their own.

Mr. ACKLEN. That motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. It is not, as the morning hour has already commenced.

FEES OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

Mr. COBB reported from the Committee on Appropriations a bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriations to pay the fees of United States marshals and their general deputies; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

PROHIBITION OF POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been demanded is the bill (H. R. No. 2266) to prohibit Federal officers, claimants, and contractors from making contributions for political purposes. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] who reports the bill has moved that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the pending question is the demand for the previous question upon that motion.

The question being taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, there were 79 in the affirmative, none in the negative.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOUSE and Mr. BARBER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported 74 in the affirmative, none in the negative.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. The only business now in order is a motion for a call of the House or to adjourn.

Mr. FINLEY. I move a call of the House.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. FINLEY, there were ayes 22, noes none.

Mr. CONGER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 53, not voting 121; as follows:

YEAS—112.

Acklen,	Clymer,	Forney,	House,
Aiken,	Cobb,	Fort,	Hull,
Armfield,	Coffroth,	Frost,	Hunton,
Atkins,	Converse,	Garfield,	Johnston,
Bachman,	Cook,	Gibson,	Jorgensen,
Beale,	Covert,	Gillette,	Joyce,
Bicknell,	Cravens,	Godshalk,	Keifer,
Blackburn,	Davidson,	Goode,	King,
Bouck,	Davis, Joseph J.	Gunter,	Klotz,
Brewer,	Davis, Loundes H.	Hammond, N. J.	Le Fevre,
Bright,	Deuster,	Haskell,	Lounsbery,
Browne,	Dibrell,	Hatch,	Lowe,
Burrows,	Dickey,	Herbert,	Manning,
Caldwell,	Elam,	Herndon,	Martin, Benj. F.
Caswell,	Evins,	Hill,	McKenzie,
Clardy,	Felton,	Hiscock,	McMahon,
Clark, John B.	Finley,	Hooker,	McMillin,
Mills,	Reagan,	Smith, William E.	Waddill,
Morrison,	Richardson, J. S.	Springer,	Weaver,
Muller,	Rothwell,	Stephens,	Wellborn,
Murch,	Ryon, John W.	Stevenson,	Whiteaker,
Myers,	Samford,	Talbott,	Whitthorne,
New,	Sawyer,	Taylor,	Williams, Thomas
O'Connor,	Scales,	Thompson,	Willis,
Persons,	Shelley,	Tillman,	Willits,
Phelps,	Simonton,	Townshend, R. W.	Wilson,
Phister,	Smith, A. Herr	Turner, Oscar	Wise,
Pound,	Smith, Hezekiah B.	Upson,	Yocum.

NAYS—53.

Aldrich, William	Deering.	Hubbell,	Sherwin,
Anderson,	De La Matyr,	Jones,	Siemons,
Baker,	Dunnell,	Lapham,	Thomas,
Barber,	Errett,	Mason,	Tyler,
Bayne,	Farr,	Mitchell,	Updegraff, J. T.
Blake,	Field,	Monroe,	Updegraff, Thomas
Briggs,	Fisher,	Nicholls,	Valentine,
Calkins,	Ford,	O'Neill,	Van Aernam,
Cannon,	Forsythe,	Orth,	Voorhis,
Carpenter,	Harmer,	Osmer,	Wait,
Conger,	Harris, Benj. W.	Russell, W. A.	Ward.
Culberson,	Hawk,	Ryan, Thomas
Daggett,	Henderson,	Sapp,
Davis, George R.	Horr,	Shallenberger,

NOT VOTING—121.

Aldrich N. W.	Dwight,	Lindsey,	Robeson,
Atherton,	Einstein,	Loring,	Robinson,
Bailey,	Ellis,	Marsh,	Ross,
Ballou,	Ewing,	Martin, Edward L.	Russell, Daniel L.
Barlow,	Ferdon,	Martin, Joseph J.	Singleton, J. W.
Belford,	Frye,	McCoid,	Singleton, O. R.
Beltzhoover,	Geddes,	McCook,	Sparks,
Bingham,	Hall,	McGowan,	Speer,
Bland,	Hammond, John	McKinley,	Starin,
Bliss,	Harris, John T.	McLane,	Steele,
Blount,	Hawley,	Miles,	Stone,
Bowman,	Hayes,	Miller,	Townsend, Amos
Boyd,	Hazelton,	Money,	Tucker,
Bragg,	Heilman,	Morse,	Turner, Thomas
Brigham,	Henkle,	Morton,	Urner,
Buckner,	Henry,	Muldrow,	Vance,
Butterworth,	Hostetler,	Neal,	Van Voorhis,
Cabell,	Houk,	Newberry,	Warner,
Camp,	Humphrey,	Norcross,	Washburn,
Carlisle,	Hurd,	O'Brien,	Wells,
Chalmers,	James,	O'Reilly,	White,
Chittenden,	Kelley,	Overton,	Wilber,
Claflin,	Kenna,	Pierce,	Williams, C. G.
Clark, Alvah A.	Ketcham,	Poehler,	Wood, Fernando
Colerick,	Killinger,	Prescott,	Wood, Walter A.
Cowgill,	Kimmel,	Price,	Wright,
Cox,	Kitchin,	Reed,	Young, Casey
Crapo,	Knott,	Rice,	Young, Thomas L.
Crowley,	Ladd,	Richardson, D. P.
Dick,	Lay,	Richmond,
Dunn,	Lewis,	Robertson,

So a call of the House was ordered.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I am paired with my colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. TALBOTT. My colleague from Maryland, Mr. HENKLE, is paired with Mr. NEAL, of Ohio.

Mr. COVERT. My colleague from New York, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey.

Mr. STEELE. I am paired with Mr. NORCROSS, of Massachusetts. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. BUCKNER, is paired with Mr. CHITTENDEN, of New York.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague from North Carolina, Mr. VANCE, is paired with my colleague, Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. MULDROW. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York.

Mr. MANNING. My colleague from Mississippi, Mr. MONEY, is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am paired with Mr. LORING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. ROSS. I am paired with Mr. CRAPO, of Massachusetts.

Mr. POEHLER. I am paired with my colleague from Minnesota, Mr. WASHBURN. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. My colleague, Mr. KITCHIN, is paired with Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. FORNEY. My colleague from Alabama, Mr. LEWIS, is paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin.

Mr. CALDWELL. My colleague from Kentucky, Mr. CARLISLE, is paired with Mr. MILLER, of New York.

Mr. DICKEY. My colleague from Ohio, Mr. GEDDES, is paired with Mr. BARLOW, of Vermont.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. My colleague from New York, Mr. BAILEY, is paired with Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, is paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut.

Mr. McLANE. I am paired with my colleague from Maryland, Mr. URNER, who is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. COBB. My colleague from Indiana, Mr. COLERICK, is absent on account of sickness in his family. He is paired with Mr. HUMPHREY, of Wisconsin; and my colleague, Mr. HOSTETLER, who is confined to his room by sickness, is paired with Mr. McCOOK, of New York.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My colleague from Virginia, Mr. HARRIS, is paired with Mr. BAILEY, of New York.

Mr. LAPHAM. My colleague from New York, Mr. RICHARDSON, is paired with Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio.

Mr. HILL. My colleague from Ohio, Mr. ATHERTON, is paired with Mr. NEWBERRY, of Michigan.

Mr. WARNER. I am paired with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island.

Mr. DUNN. I am paired with Mr. HAYES, of Illinois.

Mr. BRIGGS. My colleague from New Hampshire, Mr. HALL, is paired with Mr. SPEER, of Georgia.

Mr. WARD. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLEY, is paired with Mr. MORSE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. My colleague, Mr. MCKINLEY, is paired with Mr. SPARKS, of Illinois. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. EWING.

Mr. NEAL. I am paired with Mr. HENKLE, of Maryland.

Mr. SAPP. My colleague from Iowa, Mr. PRICE, is paired with Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. FISHER. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. DICK, is paired with Mr. LAY, of Missouri.

Mr. POUND. My colleague from Wisconsin, Mr. HUMPHREY, is paired with Mr. COLERICK, of Indiana.

Mr. TYLER. Mr. BRIGHAM, of New Jersey, is paired with Mr. FROST, of Missouri.

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleagues, Mr. WASHBURN and Mr. POEHLER, are paired.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I am paired with Mr. RICHMOND, of Virginia.

Mr. HAZELTON. My colleague from Wisconsin, Mr. WILLIAMS, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama. I am paired with Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. WAIT. My colleague from Connecticut, Mr. MILES, is paired with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, is paired with Mr. ROBERTSON, of Louisiana.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to reconsider the vote by which a call of the House was ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think this is a very proper time to settle the question as to whether the motion just submitted by the gentleman from Ohio is in order. The Constitution provides that when the House finds itself without a quorum it shall have power to compel the attendance of absent members. It has now been ordered that there be a call of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has risen to a question of order.

Mr. CONGER. We do not hear what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. SPRINGER. When the House finds itself without a quorum only two motions are in order; a motion for a call of the House and a motion that the House adjourn. We have ordered that there be a call of the House. Can that order be interfered with otherwise than by a motion to dispense with proceedings under the call?

The SPEAKER. The roll-call has disclosed the presence of a quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. That does not alter the case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has some relation to the subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit that the only motions in order are a motion to adjourn and a motion for a call of the House. Now a call of the House was ordered and can only be dispensed with by a motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. FINLEY. But the vote has disclosed the fact that there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum present, and the House has a right to reconsider the vote by which a call of the House was ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. The proper motion would be to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. COX. It is presumed that if there is a quorum present they will do their duty.

The question was put upon the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call; and on division there were—ayes 10, noes 20.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FINLEY. I understood my colleague from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to say that the yeas and nays would not be demanded. In making that statement did he speak by the authority of the other side of the House?

Mr. KEIFER. I have not demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Ohio did not understand the matter rightly.

Mr. STEPHENS. I move that the House take a recess for twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. There does not appear to be a quorum present, and therefore a motion to take a recess is not in order.

Mr STEPHENS. It is in order certainly to take a recess for half an hour while we are trying to get a quorum, but I will not press the motion.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. It was a good motion anyhow.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 33, nays 120, not voting, 133; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Aldrich, William	Cowgill,	Jones,	Tyler,
Anderson,	Davis, George R.	Keifer,	Updegraff, Thomas
Barber,	Deering,	Mitchell,	Valentine,
Bayne,	Dickey,	Osmer,	Van Aernam,
Blake,	Dunnell,	Pound,	Voorhis,
Bowman,	Farr,	Russell, W. A.	Wait.
Calkins,	Fisher,	Ryan, Thomas
Cannon,	Ford,	Sapp,
Conger,	Horr,	Thomas,

NAYS—120.

Acklen,	Dibrell,	Jorgensen,	Ryon, John W.
Armfield,	Elam,	Joyce,	Samford,
Atkins,	Errett,	King,	Sawyer,
Baker,	Evins,	Klotz,	Scales,
Beale,	Felton,	Lapham,	Shallenberger,
Bicknell,	Field,	Le Fevre,	Shelley,
Blackburn,	Finley,	Lounsbery,	Sherwin,
Bouck,	Forney,	Lowe,	Simonton,
Brewer,	Forsythe,	Manning,	Slemons,
Briggs,	Fort,	Martin, Benj. F.	Springer,
Bright,	Frost,	Mason,	Stevenson,
Browne,	Gibson,	McKenzie,	Talbott,
Burrows,	Gillette,	McMillin,	Taylor,
Caldwell,	Godshalk,	Mills,	Thompson,
Carpenter,	Goode,	Monroe,	Tillman,
Caswell,	Gunter,	Morrison,	Turner, Oscar
Clardy,	Hammond, N. J.	Muller,	Updegraff, J. T.
Clark, John B.	Harmer,	Murch,	Upson,
Clymer,	Harris, Benj. W.	Myers,	Waddill,
Coffroth,	Hatch,	New,	Ward,
Converse,	Hawley,	Nicholls,	Weaver,
Cook,	Henderson,	O'Connor,	Wellborn,
Covert,	Herbert,	O'Neil,	Whiteaker,
Cravens,	Herndon,	Orth,	Whitthorne,
Culberson,	Hill,	Persons,	Williams, Thomas
Davidson,	Hooker,	Phelps,	Willis,
Davis, Joseph J.	House,	Phister,	Willits,
Davis, Loundes H.	Hubbell,	Reagan,	Wilson,
De La Matyr,	Hull,	Richardson, J. S.	Wise,
Deuster,	Johnston,	Rothwell,	Yocum.

NOT VOTING—133.

Aiken,	Einstein,	Lindsey,	Ross,
Aldrich, N. W.	Ellis,	Loring,	Russell, Daniel L.
Atherton,	Ewing,	Marsh,	Singleton, J. W.
Bachman,	Ferdon,	Martin, Edward L.	Singleton, O. R.
Bailey,	Frye,	Martin, Joseph J.	Smith, A. Herr
Ballou,	Garfield,	McCoid,	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Barlow,	Geddes,	McCook,	Smith, William E.
Belford,	Hall,	McGowan,	Sparks,
Beltzhoover,	Hammond, John	McKinley,	Speer,
Bingham,	Harris, John T.	McLane,	Starin,
Bland,	Haskell,	McMahon,	Steele,
Bliss,	Hawk,	Miles,	Stephens,
Blount,	Hayes,	Miller,	Stone,
Boyd,	Hazelton,	Money,	Townsend, Amos
Bragg,	Heilman,	Morse,	Townshend, R. W.
Brigham,	Henkle,	Morton,	Tucker,
Buckner,	Henry,	Muldrow,	Turner, Thomas
Butterworth,	Hiscock,	Neal,	Urner,
Cabell,	Hostetler,	Newberry,	Vance,
Camp,	Houk,	Norcross,	Van Voorhis,
Carlisle,	Humphrey,	O'Brien,	Warner,
Chalmers,	Hunton,	O'Reilly,	Washburn,
Chittenden,	Hurd,	Overton,	Wells,
Claflin,	James,	Pierce,	White,
Clark, Alvah A.	Kelley,	Poehler,	Wilber,
Cobb,	Kenna,	Prescott,	Williams, C. G.
Colerick,	Ketcham,	Price,	Wood, Fernando
Cox,	Killinger,	Reed,	Wood, Walter A.
Crapo,	Kimmel,	Rice,	Wright,
Crowley,	Kitchin,	Richardson, D. P.	Young, Casey
Daggett,	Knott,	Richmond,	Young, Thomas L.
Dick,	Ladd,	Robertson,
Dunn,	Lay,	Robeson,
Dwight,	Lewis,	Robinson,

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. DICKEY. My colleague, Mr. GEDDES, is paired with Mr. BARLOW, of Vermont.

Mr. HILL. My colleague, Mr. ATHERTON, is paired with Mr. NEWBERRY, of Michigan.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BINGHAM. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. POEHLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WASHBURN.

Mr. WAIT. My colleague, Mr. MILES, is paired with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois; Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, is paired with Mr. ROBERTSON, of Louisiana; and Mr. MORSE, of Massachusetts, is paired with Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to announce that Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama.

Mr. LAPHAM. My colleague from New York, Mr. RICHARDSON, is paired with Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia.

Mr. PRESCOTT. On all political questions I am paired with Mr. RICHMOND, of Virginia, and I understand this to be one.

Mr. SAPP. My colleague, Mr. PRICE, is paired with Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware.

Mr. POUND. My colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY, is paired with Mr. COLERICK, of Indiana.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. VANCE, is paired with my colleague, Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. WILBER, of New York. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. WARNER. I am paired with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island.

Mr. WHITE. I am paired with Mr. THOMAS TURNER, of Kentucky.

Mr. HAZELTON. I am paired with Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia, and my colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2002) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. R. No. 113) to provide for the purchase of the stereotyped plates of the final reports of the centennial commission upon the centennial exhibition.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. FINLEY. Is it in order now to move to go to the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I make that motion.

Mr. CONGER. Before that is done, it is necessary to move to dispense with further proceedings under the call of the House which has been ordered; and I make that motion.

The motion of Mr. CONGER was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] moves to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. The regular order is the unfinished business of yesterday, as I understand.

LETTER-CARRIERS, ETC.

Mr. COX. I rise to make a privileged report, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 2002, making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, and 7.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 3, and 6, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following:

"Provided, That no judgment shall be paid until the right of appeal has expired."

And the Senate agree to the same.

S. S. COX,
HIESTER CLYMER,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. G. DAVIS,
S. B. MAXEY,
W. B. ALLISON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. COX. I move the previous question upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a few minutes. I want to make a statement about the report, as I did not concur in it.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Only a few minutes.

Mr. COX. I will yield to the gentleman for two minutes.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Perhaps more time than that; I do not want much time. It is due to myself, not having signed this conference report, that I should very briefly state the reasons for withholding my signature.

It will be recollected that this was originally a bill making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department. The Senate passed the bill without amendment in that respect, so that that portion of the subject was not in the conference. The Senate, however, put on the bill a number of amendments which were not germane to it, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars; among others an amendment making an appropriation of $60,000, in round numbers, for interest on the Osage trust fund. That provision I suppose properly belongs to the Indian appropriation bill or the sundry civil bill. The Senate put on another amendment appropriating $100,000 to pay judgments of the Court of Claims, a provision which belongs properly to the sundry civil bill. There were several other important amendments that belong upon the general bills.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not good policy to make appropriations in this way. These amendments have never been considered by the House in the Committee of the Whole, nor reported and recommended by any committee of this House. They were attached by the Senate to the House bill making appropriations for letter-carriers, and in that way avoided the point of order which should have sent them to the Committee of the Whole for consideration and amendment. Now they are agreed to by a conference committee, and the desire of members to pay the letter-carriers will probably help drag these amendments through, when they might not get through by their own strength if they stood alone.

It may be true that these amendments of which I have spoken are right, yet I cannot rise in my place here and say that I know from my own investigation that they are right. Perhaps other gentlemen upon the conference committee may be able to do so. I apprehend, however, from the reading of the debates in the Senate and from what various gentlemen have said, that some of the amendments are right. Yet no committee of this House, except this conference committee, has ever said that these amendments are right, as would be said if they came in upon the ordinary bills—the sundry civil appropriation bill and the Indian appropriation bill.

But there is one amendment to which I could not and did not agree. Perhaps I might have signed this conference report if that amendment had not been agreed to. I desire that the first amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12 insert the following:

To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to adjust and settle the claims of the several States under the act of Congress approved September 28, 1850, and the acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof, for swamp lands, including all claims for swamp land indemnity under the acts of March 2, 1855, and March 3 1857 and other acts, $15,000.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, ever since I have been in Congress, bills touching this subject have been introduced in great numbers and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, or in some cases to the Committee on Private Land Claims. The controversy is one growing out of the swamp-land legislation of 1850. The courts have held that the title to those lands passed by that act. But between the time of the passage of the act and the selection of those lands, in many of the States, in fact, in all of the States, a portion of the swamp lands were entered by the payment of cash and a portion by land warrants; so that in 1855 and 1857 the indemnity acts, as they are called, were passed authorizing payment of the money where the lands had been entered with money from the United States to the States, or where warrants had been located, by the issue of scrip, which authorized the States to locate the same upon public lands subject to entry. The Interior Department about the same time made a decision that this scrip could only be located upon lands within the State to which it was issued.

Many of the States, like my own State of Illinois, had no lands within their borders subject to entry so that the scrip remains worthless property in the possession of such States, and their lands are gone without any chance for indemnity unless there is further legislation. Now, some of the States, like Missouri and Arkansas, have United States lands within their borders subject to entry, so that the scrip issued to such States is valuable, as it can be located. The Secretary of the Interior has lately made a regulation that he will not pay the States the money indemnity or issue scrip to them in lieu of swamp lands sold or entered, or will not patent to the States lands under the swamp-land act, until he has sent an agent to examine the lands and see whether they are swamp lands in the meaning of the original act. So if this appropriation is not made, no indemnity of any kind will be made for the next fiscal year, for there is no appropriation for agents.

There is in round numbers thirteen million acres claimed by the States under the act which await examination and many millions of acres for which indemnity is claimed. This amendment only proposes to appropriate $15,000 for this purpose, which is not sufficient for use except to some favored State or part of a State, and in no event could be of any use to the older and more equitable claims of States situated as my own State of Illinois is. The truth is that this whole matter should be fully considered by the Committee on Public Lands and legislation reported to and discussed and passed by the House finally settling all the claims of all the States as to swamp lands, and I desire to state now that if we enter upon the policy of making these small appropriations from year to year as the Senators or Members from some State may be vigilant in pushing them, that we not only legislate with partiality, doing partial justice to some States and failing to do anything for other States, but that such a policy will keep these indemnity claims before Congress for the next half century, and we will have paid out in the end immense sums for agents and machinery that might be saved.

I cannot, in the limited time I have and with the great desire of the House for a final adjournment, go into the merits of this question, and will have to content myself, in conclusion, with again stating that all legislation touching this subject should be postponed until the whole matter can be fully considered by the House in the usual way. And I ask the House to not agree to this conference report, so that this bill will go back to another conference committee and this amendment be stricken out in another conference report.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the very amendment which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] opposes is an economical measure intended to cut off any sort of opportunity to get these lands improperly. The appropriation of $15,000 is to close up this business. It is an economical measure—so certified by the Land Office and so understood by all who care to understand it. The only objection made to this conference report is based upon that amendment. Now does the gentleman want to kill this bill?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Oh, no, sir.

Mr. COX. Why, sir, we have agreed on everything except this one item, and my friend from Illinois will not sign the report because of this swamp-land business; yet that is a perfectly fair measure for the purpose of getting at the facts in regard to these swamp lands.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I see in the bill as amended by the Senate a large number of amendments making payments to individuals and railroad corporations——

Mr. COX. They are all stricken out. The Senate receded from all of them. Every one is stricken out.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is the appropriation of the interest on $1,000,000 to the Osage Indians stricken out?

Mr. COX. No, sir; that is not stricken out for the reason I will state. I referred that matter to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. SCALES,] who reports that that amount ought to have been paid before. Next year it will be paid in order. This year it is not paid in order. It should have been paid last year. Everybody acknowledges that that is correct.

Mr. SPRINGER. The amount, I believe, is $60,300.

Mr. COX. That is the interest at 5 per cent. on the avails of sales of lands which should have been paid to these Indians before.

Mr. KEIFER. It is the interest on $1,200,000.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] will give the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] whatever information he wants in regard to this.

Mr. SCALES. This is interest on the proceeds of sales of lands which the Government has undertaken to sell for these Indians. By treaty of September 29, 1865, statutes 17, page 91, and by section 2 of act of May 9, 1872, the Government undertook to sell these lands and to pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent. A short calculation will show that this is the amount that is due them. The matter has been before the committee of the Senate and the committee of the House, and the reports show that the payment of this amount is in accordance both with law and treaty.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was it before the Committee on Indian Affairs or the Committee of Claims?

Mr. SCALES. Before the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was not included in the last appropriation bill because the estimate could not be made before the 1st of March. By law the estimate must be made to the 1st of March, while the last Indian appropriation bill was reported in February.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to move that the committee be instructed to amend the bill by including the State of Illinois.

The SPEAKER. This is a conference report. It must either be accepted or rejected.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I understand there is a special discrimination made in favor of Missouri.

Mr. COX. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. ATKINS. I observe there is an appropriation of $100,000 in this bill to pay for judgments of the Court of Claims. Is it provided that that shall only be available after the time shall elapse for appeals to be made?

Mr. COX. Not a dollar of that money can be paid until after the time expires for appeal. There is a proviso to that effect.

Mr. KEIFER. Could it have been paid even if there had been no such proviso.

Mr. COX. It could not have been; but we put that in out of abundant caution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to hear the bill read just as it will stand if passed as now recommended by the committee of conference. It is so mixed up with amendments that we do not understand what is in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill as it will stand if the report of the committee of conference be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in addition to the amounts heretofore appropriated the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

For payment to letter-carriers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and to extend the services of such carriers for said year under the provisions of the act approved February 21, 1879, entitled "An act to fix the pay of letter-carriers," in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated, $415,000.

For payment of increased salary to letter-carriers under the provisions of existing law for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, $71,000.

To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to adjust and settle the claims of the several States under the law of Congress approved September 28, 1850, and the acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof for swamp lands, including the claims for swamp-land indemnity under the acts of March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, and other acts, $15,000.

For payment of judgments of the Court of Claims, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no judgment shall be paid until the right of appeal has expired.

For interest due Osages on avails of diminished-reserve lands in Kansas for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; this amount to be expended for the Osage Indians in accordance with section 12 of the act of July 15, 1870, being interest at 5 per cent. per annum from March 1, 1879, to March 1, 1880, on $1,206,257.29, aggregate of net avails of Osage trust and diminished-reserve lands sold prior to March 1, 1879, as provided for by section 2 of the act approved May 9, 1872, $60,312.86.

For salary of the additional associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, appointed under the act of Congress approved February 25, 1879, from the date of his appointment to and including June 30, 1879, $1,122.22, or so much thereof as may be necessary. And the paragraph relating to reform school in section 3 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by inserting after the word "improvements" in said paragraph the words "and support of boys sent to said school."

Mr. COX. That last amendment is simply to correct a clerical mistake of the old bill. I move the previous question.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to ask a parliamentary question?

Mr. COX. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. It is the right of the gentleman to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. My inquiry is this: If the report of the committee of conference is not agreed to, would it be then in order to ask for another conference committee?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly it would.

The question being put on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference, there were—ayes 97, noes 25.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There is over a half million dollars involved in this bill.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 14.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I make the point that a quorum did not vote on the question of agreeing to the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. COX.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 102.

Before the "noes" were counted,

Mr. COX (one of the tellers) said: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] desires the yeas and nays upon agreeing to this report and I will consent that they be taken, as that will avoid any trouble about the want of a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 132, nays 38, not voting 116; as follows:

YEAS—132.

Acklen,	Deering,	Hurd,	Ryon, John W.
Aldrich, William	De La Matyr,	Johnston,	Sapp,
Anderson,	Deuster,	Jones,	Sawyer,
Armfield,	Dibrell,	Jorgensen,	Scales,
Atkins,	Dunnell,	Joyce,	Shallenberger,
Bachman,	Ellis,	Keifer,	Shelley,
Barber,	Errett,	Lapham,	Sherwin,
Bayne,	Evins,	Le Fevre,	Simonton,
Bicknell,	Farr,	Lounsbery,	Slemons,
Blackburn,	Field,	Manning,	Smith, William E.
Blake,	Finley,	Mason,	Stephens,
Bowman,	Fisher,	McCoid,	Stevenson,
Briggs,	Ford,	McLane,	Talbott,
Bright,	Frost,	McMahon,	Taylor,
Butterworth,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Thomas,
Carpenter,	Goode,	Monroe,	Townsend, Amos
Clardy,	Gunter,	Muller,	Tyler,
Clark, John B.	Hammond, John	Murch,	Updegraff, J. T.
Clymer,	Hammond, N. J.	Myers,	Updegraff, Thomas
Cobb,	Harmer,	New,	Upson.
Coffroth,	Harris, Benj. W.	Nicholls,	Valentine,
Converse,	Haskell,	O'Connor,	Van Aernam,
Cook,	Hatch,	O'Neill,	Voorhis,
Covert,	Hawley,	Orth,	Waddill,
Cowgill,	Hazelton,	Osmer,	Wait,
Cox,	Herndon,	Persons,	Ward,
Cravens,	Hill,	Phelps,	Wellborn,
Culberson,	Hiscock,	Poehler,	White,
Daggett,	Hooker,	Pound,	Whiteaker,
Davidson,	Horr,	Prescott,	Willis,
Davis, George R.	House,	Richardson, J. S.	Willits,
Davis, Joseph J.	Hull,	Russell, W. A.	Wilson,
Davis, Loundes H.	Hunton,	Ryan, Thomas	Young, Casey.

NAYS—38.

Aiken,	Elam,	Klotz,	Thompson,
Baker,	Felton,	Marsh,	Tillman,
Beale,	Forney,	Martin, Benj. F.	Townshend, R. W.
Bouck,	Forsythe,	McKenzie,	Turner, Oscar
Brewer,	Fort,	McMillin,	Weaver,
Browne,	Gillette,	Morrison,	Whitthorne,
Caldwell,	Hawk,	Phister,	Williams, Thomas
Cannon,	Henderson,	Reagan,	Yocum.
Conger,	Herbert,	Samford,
Dickey,	Hubbell,	Springer,

NOT VOTING—116.

Aldrich, N. W.	Claflin,	Humphrey,	Mills,
Atherton,	Clark, Alvah A.	James,	Money,
Bailey,	Colerick,	Kelley,	Morse,
Ballou,	Crapo,	Kenna,	Morton,
Barlow,	Crowley,	Ketcham,	Muldrow,
Belford,	Dick,	Killinger,	Neal,
Beltzhoover,	Dunn,	Kimmel,	Newberry,
Bingham,	Dwight,	King,	Norcross,
Bland,	Einstein,	Kitchin,	O'Brien,
Bliss,	Ewing,	Knott,	O'Reilly,
Blount,	Ferdon,	Ladd,	Overton,
Boyd,	Frye,	Lay,	Pierce,
Bragg,	Garfield,	Lewis,	Price,
Brigham,	Geddes,	Lindsey,	Reed,
Buckner,	Godshalk,	Loring,	Rice,
Burrows,	Hall,	Lowe,	Richardson, D. P.
Cabell,	Harris, John T.	Martin, Edward L.	Richmond,
Calkins,	Hayes,	Martin, Joseph J.	Robertson,
Camp,	Heilman,	McCook,	Robeson,
Carlisle,	Henkle,	McGowan,	Robinson,
Caswell,	Henry,	McKinley,	Ross,
Chalmers,	Hostetler,	Miles,	Rothwell,
Chittenden,	Houk,	Miller,	Russell, Daniel L.

Singleton, J. W.	Starin,	Vance,	Williams, C. G.
Singleton, O. R.	Steele,	Van Voorhis,	Wise,
Smith, A. Herr	Stone,	Warner,	Wood, Fernando
Smith, Hezekiah B.	Tucker,	Washburn,	Wood, Walter A.
Sparks,	Turner, Thomas	Wells,	Wright,
Speer,	Urner,	Wilber,	Young, Thomas L.

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BEALE. My colleague, Mr. RICHMOND, is detained from the House on account of sickness, and is paired with Mr. PRESCOTT.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. Mr. KENNA is paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. TALBOTT. My colleague, Mr. HENKLE, is paired with Mr. NEAL, of Ohio.

Mr. HILL. My colleague, Mr. ATHERTON, is paired with Mr. NEWBERRY, of Michigan.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am paired with Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts.

Mr. HUNTON. My colleagues, Mr. TUCKER and Mr. CABELL, are detained from the House on account of severe sickness, and are absent by leave of the House, and are, respectively, paired with Mr. FISHER and Mr. LAPHAM.

Mr. HURD. I am paired with Mr. CLAFLIN, of Massachusetts, on political questions; but I understand from his colleagues that if he were here, he would vote "ay," and I therefore vote.

Mr. DUNN. I am paired with Mr. HAYES, of Illinois.

Mr. McLANE. I am paired with Mr. URNER; but I have voted, considering this not a political question, and because it seems to me that my colleague would also vote "ay."

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey.

Mr. COBB. My colleague, Mr. COLERICK, is paired with Mr. HUMPHREY, of Wisconsin, and my colleague, Mr. HOSTETLER, is paired with Mr. McCOOK.

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague, Mr. HOUK, is absent on account of sickness, and I understand is paired with Mr. SPARKS, of Illinois.

Mr. WARD. My colleague, Mr. KELLEY, is paired with Mr. MORSE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. If he were here, I should vote "ay." My colleague, Mr. OVERTON, is paired with Mr. ROSS, of New Jersey.

Mr. SAPP. My colleague, Mr. PRICE, is paired with Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. EWING, on all political questions. As I do not regard this as a political question I vote "ay." My colleague, Mr. McKINLEY, is paired with Mr. SPARKS, of Illinois.

Mr. TYLER. I desire to announce that Mr. BRIGHAM, of New Jersey, is paired with Mr. FROST, of Missouri.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama.

Mr. BREWER. My colleague, Mr. NEWBERRY, is paired with Mr. ATHERTON, of Ohio; and my colleague, Mr. STONE, is paired with Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi.

Mr. NEAL. I am paired with Mr. HENKLE, of Maryland.

Mr. DICKEY. My colleague, Mr. GEDDES, is absent on account of sickness, and is paired with Mr. BARLOW, of Vermont.

Mr. FISHER. My colleague, Mr. DICK, is paired with Mr. LAY, of Missouri.

Mr. FIELD. My colleague, Mr. ROBINSON, is paired with Mr. ROBERTSON, of Louisiana.

Mr. LAPHAM. My colleague, Mr. RICHARDSON, is paired with Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia.

Mr. MANNING. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, is paired with Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York.

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleagues, Mr. WASHBURN and Mr. POEHLER, are paired.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I desire to state that Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, is paired with Mr. WARNER, of Ohio.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that unanimous consent was given yesterday that the National Board of Health bill should come up to-day.

Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw my motion to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

The House then resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2273) to provide office-room for the National Board of Health and for the publication of its reports and papers, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] desires to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am instructed by the committee to ask that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill. They are identically the same, with the exception of one word, which I will explain when we get to it.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Senate bill will be taken from the Speaker's table and considered instead of the House bill.

Mr. CONGER. I had an amendment which I desired to offer to the House bill. I wish to offer it to the Senate bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The gentleman can do that.

The Senate bill was then taken from the Speaker's table, being a bill (S. No. 675) to provide office-rooms for the National Board of Health and for the publication of its reports and papers, and for other purposes.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill, but before concluding,

Mr. WHITE said: Unanimous consent was not given for the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. It was given.

Mr. WHITE. It was not, I think.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WHITE. I want to object to this bill; I am opposed to it.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman is too late.

Mr. WHITE. Oh, no.

Mr. FINLEY. Consent was given, and the bill is being read.

Mr. WHITE. The bill is being read for information only.

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. WHITE. I am opposed to the passage of this bill, because I think it is paying too much. It looks to me as if there was a job in the bill, as if it were intended to build up a big bureau.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point of order upon substituting the Senate bill for the House bill at this time?

Mr. WHITE. I make the point of order that this bill is not before the House by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. That is a question of fact.

Mr. WHITE. The substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill is not by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair heard no objection.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Who objected to it?

Mr. WHITE. I objected to it.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. No, you did not.

Mr. MANNING. No one objected at the time that unanimous consent was asked.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is correct.

Mr. WHITE. I understood that this bill was being read for information only.

The SPEAKER. In order to settle this controversy the Chair will have written out the notes of the official reporters touching this point.

Mr. ACKLEN. I understood that amendments would be in order to this bill; and I supposed it was to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, section by section.

The SPEAKER. That was not a part of the agreement.

Mr. WHITE. This is too important a bill to be passed in this way. It commits the Government to a policy which I as a member of this House am not willing to sanction. If the Chair does not recognize my right to object, I will raise another point of order which will take the bill to the Committee of the Whole at all events.

The SPEAKER. The Journal and the report for the RECORD both show that the Chair is correct in his understanding—that unanimous consent was asked and that no objection was made to the substitution of the Senate bill.

Mr. WHITE. When the request for unanimous consent was submitted, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] rose and some colloquy ensued. That is the reason I did not press my objection at that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan rose and asked whether he could offer an amendment. The Chair stated that amendments could be offered to the Senate bill.

Mr. WHITE. I remember that very well; but——

The SPEAKER. The reporter of the RECORD will write out the whole proceeding touching this point; and the Chair will then have it read. In the mean time the reading of the bill will be completed.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill; and when he had read to the close of the sixth section,

Mr. CONGER said: I have an amendment which I desire to offer to this section.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the bill is not yet concluded.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to raise a point of order that the bill must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first dispose of the point of order previously made; but before doing so would prefer to have the report of the RECORD read.

Mr. WHITE. Very well; I will withhold my point.

The Clerk then resumed and concluded the reading of the Senate bill, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the National Board of Health is hereby authorized and empowered to procure suitable and sufficient offices in the city of Washington for the transaction of its business, at a rental not to exceed the sum of $1,800 per annum. And said board is also authorized to pay the sum of $225 for the rent of building No. 1405 G street, northwest, in the city of Washington, used by the National Board of Health for offices from the 3d day of April, 1879, to the 3d day of July, 1879.

SEC. 2. That the necessary printing of the National Board of Health be done at the Government Printing Office, upon the requisition of the secretary of the board, in the same manner and subject to the same provisions as other public printing for the several departments of the Government: Provided, That the cost of said printing shall not exceed the sum of $10,000 per annum.

SEC. 3. That the National Board of Health is hereby authorized and empowered to have printed and bound 10,000 copies of the report of the board of medical experts, created by former act of Congress, which report shall include the report of Doctors Berniss and Cochran and Engineer Hardee, upon the yellow-fever epidemic of 1878; 6,000 copies of the same to be furnished to the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies to the Senate, and the residue to the National Board of Health: Provided, That the cost of publication and binding said report shall not exceed the sum of $7,500. And the said board is hereby authorized to pay Doctors Berniss and Cochran and Engineer Hardee $10 per day, for the preparation of their said report, for the period of two months: Provided, That the same shall be completed and submitted to the board within that time.

SEC. 4. That the National Board of Health is hereby authorized and directed to pay Frank J. Taylor, for services as stenographer to the board of medical experts in reporting evidence of medical men and others touching the causes, introduction, and spread of epidemic diseases within the United States, and for preparing the same for publication, the sum of $540, said sum being the amount allowed him by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

SEC. 5. The chief clerk of the National Board of Health shall act as disbursing agent for the board, and shall give bond, conformably to section 176 of the Revised Statutes, for the faithful performance of that duty, and for such services shall receive $360 per annum in addition to his salary as chief clerk; and the Board of Health may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, pay to its secretary such sum, in addition to his pay as a member of the board, as it may deem proper, not exceeding $100 per month.

SEC. 6. That section 3 of the act approved June 2, 1879, entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases within the United States," be amended as follows: At the end thereof insert: "And the Board of Health shall have power, when they may deem it necessary, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, as a means of preventing the importation of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, or into one State from another, to erect temporary quarantine buildings and to acquire on behalf of the United States titles to real estate for that purpose, or to rent houses, if there be any suitable, at such points and places as are named in such section."

SEC. 7. That all the money hereinbefore authorized to be expended and all contracts made and liabilities incurred by the National Board of Health shall be paid out of the appropriation of $500,000 made in the act of Congress entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States," approved June 2, 1879.

The SPEAKER. The proceedings which took place at the time of the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill will now be read. Members will please give their attention.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Tennessee desires to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am instructed by the committee to ask that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill. They are identically the same with the exception of one word, which I will explain when we get to it.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Senate bill will be taken from the Speaker's table and considered instead of the House bill.

Mr. CONGER. I had an amendment which I desired to offer to the House bill. I wish to offer it to the Senate bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The gentleman can do that.

The Senate bill was then taken from the Speaker's table, being a bill (S. No. 675) to provide office-rooms for the National Board of Health and for the publication of its reports and papers, and for other purposes.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. WHITE. One moment, Mr. Speaker, in order to be correct upon the record——

The SPEAKER. The point of order was made that unanimous consent was not given for the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill. The RECORD report shows that such consent was given.

Mr. WHITE. I remember very well what occurred. I remember when the Chair asked for objection the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] rose in his place to make objection, and a colloquy occurred. The Clerk then commenced to read the bill. I did not want to be obtrusive. I understood that I would have the right to object after the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman object?

Mr. WHITE. I did. I did not say so. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Did not the gentleman say a few moments ago that he would have objected but that he saw the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] rise in his place?

Mr. WHITE. I would have objected.

The SPEAKER. Then there was really no objection.

Mr. WHITE. There is no difference between the Chair and myself as to the question of fact. I intended to object. Does the Chair decide against me?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman's objection comes too late.

Mr. WHITE. Now I make the point of order that the bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That point the Chair sustains.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The bill does not make any appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Not at all. I call the attention of the Chair to the last section.

The SPEAKER. The last section of the bill will be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That all money hereinbefore directed to be expended and all contracts made and liabilities incurred by the National Board of Health shall be paid out of the appropriation of $500,000 made in the act of Congress entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States," approved June 2, 1879.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read Rule 112.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE 112. All proceedings touching appropriations of money and all bills making appropriations of money or property or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payment out of appropriations already made, shall first be discussed in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. Under the last clause of the rule the bill must be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I move that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That involves a change of the rules of the House, and would require unanimous consent.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Then I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion in that form is not in order. If the House should go into Committee of the Whole, the bills in committee must be taken up in their order.

Mr. FINLEY. The bills prior to this can be laid aside.

The SPEAKER. That of course can be done.

Mr. WHITE. I give notice that it cannot be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. ACKLEN. I understand that the Committee of the Whole can decide what business it will take up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not said anything to the contrary of that. The Chair has said that the motion must be to go into the Committee of the Whole simply. When the House is in Committee of the Whole the rule provides the order in which the business shall be proceeded with.

Mr. FINLEY. That motion has been made.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. Would it not be in order for the House now, on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House go into Committee of the Whole, to direct what subject-matter shall be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It would not; because that alters the rule of the House which provides that when the House is in Committee of the Whole bills shall be taken up in their order; therefore, that would not be in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The question of consideration can be raised as to prior bills.

The SPEAKER. When the House gets into the Committee of the Whole it will be governed by the rules of the House.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" had it.

Mr. WHITE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, no 1.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of business on the public Calendar. The Clerk will report the title of the first business on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

1879, March 19.—Message from the President of the United States, communicating the estimates of appropriations needed which were sent to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury at the opening of the last session.

Mr. McKENZIE. Let that be read.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that that item be laid aside informally.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the title of the next business on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 1493) defining the duties of reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States, fixing his compensation, and providing for the publishing and distribution of said reports.

Mr. FINLEY. I move that that bill be passed over.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think it will take but a moment to dispose of that bill. It is one I have no doubt every member will be in favor of as soon as he becomes acquainted with its effect. It will not take five minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. FINLEY. There is opposition to that bill. If it is taken up, I desire to make some remarks upon it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Where is the opposition to it? I have never heard of any.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman will find when the bill is discussed that there is opposition to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order on the question of the order of business.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to this bill being laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can object by voting against the motion to lay it aside.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. This matter has been discussed a little on the one side, and I would like to be heard as long at least as the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND.] I simply want to say that the bill we desire to reach is an exceedingly important one.

We have been legislating for more than six months at an expense of many thousands of dollars to acquire the information upon which this legislation was based. We have created a National Board of Health; but without the enactment of this law they are completely powerless to execute the law upon which they are acting. I feel assured that if gentlemen will allow me twenty minutes to explain the bill there are not twenty members of the House who would vote against it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair directs Rule 114 to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the bills shall be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar; but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill, a majority of the committee shall decide, without debate, whether it shall be taken up and disposed of, or laid aside.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. One word, if the Chair pleases.

The CHAIRMAN. This motion is not debatable.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I merely wish to say a word. I do not desire to antagonize the other bill, that which is in charge of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] that the bill (H. R. No. 1493) be passed over.

The question being put, there were—ayes 84, noes 14.

Mr. WHITE. A quorum has not voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do not wish to antagonize the other bill, and withdraw the motion. I did not suppose that it would take two minutes to dispose of the bill No. 1493.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois did not make any motion. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] that this bill be passed over, upon which the ayes were 84 and the noes 14. The point of order being made that a quorum has not voted, the Chair will order tellers, and pending that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCKENZIE] moves that the committee rise. The question will be first upon that motion.

The question being put on the motion that the committee rise, it was not agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. If the House will listen for a moment, I will submit a statement with a view of facilitating the public business.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there consent to the gentleman from Tennessee making a statement?

Mr. WHITE. There is not.

Mr. BAKER. We want to get at the appropriation bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. So far as I am concerned I will let you get at the appropriation bill. What I desire to suggest will meet exactly what you want to do.

Mr. WHITE. What does the gentleman propose? I am opposed to considering this bill, and wish to prevent its consideration.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. If I can get unanimous consent to let the Senate bill go back to the Speaker's table whence it came, I will let you take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. WHITE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ACKLEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he will permit amendments to the bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOUSE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent cannot be given by the Committee of the Whole. The only way is for the committee to rise.

The question was taken on Mr. HOUSE's motion; and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the business on the public Calendar, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I desire to get the action of the Committee of the Whole ratified by the House in reference to the proposition I made there.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] asks consent that the proceeding be vacated which took place by unanimous consent authorizing the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill, so that the Senate bill may go back upon the Speaker's table, from which it was taken by unanimous consent a short time since.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2383) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of the said river from the head of the passes near its mouth to its headwaters," approved June —, 1879; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the object being the consideration of the bill reported this morning providing for the judicial expenses; and pending that motion I move that all general debate on the bill be closed in ten minutes. [Cries of "Say five minutes!"]

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I trust the gentleman will move to close debate in one minute.

Mr. ATKINS. I will move, then, that all general debate will be closed in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2381) making appropriations for the judicial expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

Mr. BAKER. I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. ATKINS. I will occupy the minute allowed for general debate to explain to the House that the first bill that was distributed this morning was a copy which was printed for the Committee on Appropriations, and there are two lines in that bill with regard to the fees of jurors in the Territories, making them $3 instead of $2. They are not in the bill now reported to the House. I wish gentlemen to understand that fact; it was a misprint in the bill. The bill now before the House is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed by the House for general debate has expired. The bill will now be read by clauses for amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read as follows:

For support of United States prisoners, $193,000.

Mr. BAKER. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the clause just read:

For fees of United States marshals and their deputies, $600,000, to be expended for the direct and legal expenses of conducting the business of the district, circuit, and supreme courts of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I do not offer this amendment for the purpose of antagonizing at all the political questions that the majority of the House has seen fit in this Congress to precipitate upon the country. The amendment that I have offered is offered for the sole purpose of enabling the majority, which is charged with the responsibility of making the needful appropriations for the administration of justice in the United States courts, to make such appropriations as shall be necessary to carry on those courts and dispatch the ordinary business of these courts, leaving untouched and outside of the amendment the whole of the political question that is in issue between the respective parties to-day.

The amendment that I have offered, Mr. Chairman, simply proposes to appropriate $600,000 to be expended for the single purpose of meeting the direct and legitimate expenses of conducting the business of the district, circuit, and supreme courts of the United States. I offer this amendment, I say very frankly, with the distinct purpose in view of bringing before the country squarely and directly the question as to whether or not the majority that is responsible for the maintenance of these courts are in good faith disposed to make the needful appropriation in order that justice may be administered, or whether or not they desire under the disguise of political motives to strike at the administration of justice in the courts of the United States.

If our friends on the other side are desirous in good faith (as I believe them to be, permit me to say) that justice shall be administered in the courts, they cannot hesitate to join with us in voting this sum of money to be expended for the direct and legitimate expenses of the ordinary business of the Federal courts of justice. If it should be voted down I think the country will agree with me that it shows a purpose on the part of the other side, under the guise of a political question, to stab one of the departments of the Government in a vital part; because it must be apparent to every man who has any knowledge of the administration of justice in the Federal courts that in order that the business of those courts may be properly conducted the marshals of necessity must have placed under their control the money essential to the execution of the duties of their offices.

It is possible that without this appropriation the courts of justice will not be absolutely blocked; but it must be apparent to every intelligent man that the administration of justice will be seriously crippled and hampered to such an extent that public justice and private rights alike will be, if not sacrificed, at least very seriously interfered with. It is for that reason that I have offered this amendment in good faith.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. ATKINS. I will detain the Committee of the Whole but a single moment. I know the patience of members is wearied and the whole subject has become threadbare.

I rise merely for the purpose of saying that the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] by way of amendment to this bill, is embodied in a bill reported this morning from the Committee on Appropriations by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBB,] a member of that committee, and will therefore be considered by the House when that bill is taken up. It is not necessary to have that question considered as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ATKINS. I trust the gentleman will not interrupt me now.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to ask a question in relation to the statement just made by the gentleman.

Mr. ATKINS. I am aware the gentleman desires to ask me a question; but I prefer to get through with my statements first.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask it before the gentleman passes from this point.

Mr. ATKINS. Very well.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to know of the gentleman whether the bill reported this morning by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] does not contain the political matter which has been vetoed by the President?

Mr. ATKINS. He vetoed it once, but whether he will veto it again or not I do not know. [Laughter.] I do not think he ought to.

Mr. KEIFER. I expect the gentleman can have assurances on that point, if he desires.

Mr. ATKINS. Very well; be that as it may, I trust it will have no effect upon the action of the House in regard to this amendment. There is no necessity for this amendment at all, because the matter is provided for in another bill.

As to the courts not getting along without this appropriation for the marshals, I can say that it has been very frequently the case that they have got along without ample provision being made for the marshals, because not unseldom they come in with deficiency bills for the payment of the marshals. Besides the salaries of the marshals have been provided for in the legislative bill, which is already the law of the land. I do not suppose that a single one of the marshals or their general deputies would be so unpatriotic as to resign because he did not have provision made in this bill for all the fees he might be authorized to collect by law.

Mr. CONGER. Then the gentleman admits that he does not propose to pay the marshals.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not admit any such thing. I have already stated that we propose to pay them, but to make the appropriation for the purpose in another bill.

Mr. BAKER. And a bill in such form that the President must veto it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a single remark touching the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER.] If I understand his amendment, it proposes to appropriate the same amount that has been heretofore recommended by the Committee on Appropriations to be appropriated for the marshals of the Federal courts.

I understand further that the amendment is so drawn that the money hereby appropriated, if the amendment should be adopted, cannot under existing law be used for any other purpose except for the payment of marshals in the performance of their duties in the district, circuit, and Supreme courts of the United States; that not a dollar, not a cent of the amount, can be used for enforcing the election laws of the United States.

I understand that the bill which is to follow this, the one reported by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBB,] proposes to appropriate this same amount of money for the payment of marshals, but it has tacked to it as conditions not only the political provisions which have met with the veto of the President, but provisions still more radical and objectionable. Therefore, if that bill is relied upon, no appropriation will be made for the expenses of the marshals.

This amendment is germane to the pending bill. The law entitles the marshals to their compensation, and the business of the courts cannot be properly conducted unless this appropriation is made.

I do hope that whatever may be the action of Congress in regard to making appropriations for the expenses of deputy marshals to carry out the election laws of the United States, this amendment will be adopted and the courts given a proper amount to enable them to conduct their business satisfactorily. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to move an amendment to the amendment.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. BAKER; and upon a division there were—ayes 63, noes 82.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. BAKER said: I think I will have tellers on my amendment, if I can get them.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BAKER and Mr. ATKINS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 68, noes 81.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the per diem pay of each juror, grand or petit, in any court of the United States, shall be $2; and that the last clause of section 800 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which refers to the State of Pennsylvania, and sections 801, 820, and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are hereby repealed; and that all such jurors, grand and petit, including those summoned during the session of the court, shall be publicly drawn from a box containing, at the time of each drawing, the names of not less than three hundred persons, possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing, residing in the district in which such court is held, and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately, without reference to party affiliations, until the whole number required shall be placed therein. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State; and no person shall serve as a petit juror more than one term in any one year, and all juries to serve in courts after the passage of this act shall be drawn in conformity herewith: Provided, That no citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by striking out the word "two," in the second line of this section, and inserting "three;" so as to make the clause read, "that the per diem pay of each juror, grand or petit, in any court of the United States shall be $3."

Mr. Chairman, when a former bill relating to this subject was before the Committee of the Whole, I offered an amendment similar to this, and at that time stated the reasons why in my view it should be adopted. I think it must be evident to every member of the House that the sum of $2 a day is wholly inadequate as compensation for the men who serve on the juries in the United States courts throughout the country, and in many cases will not cover their actual outlay. In many States where much travel is required of the jurors it will be impossible for men to serve at this rate. The circuit and district courts of the United States are generally held in the larger cities where it is not easy to obtain ordinary board at $2 a day. I insist there is no necessity that the class of men who ought to be, and I suppose will be, selected under this law to serve as jurors should be required by the Government to do so for the meager, the insignificant, the unworthy compensation of $2 a day.

I offer this amendment in good faith, hoping that the committee will see the propriety of its adoption. Three dollars a day is, I understand, the present compensation.

Mr. ATKINS. This matter has already been passed upon by the House, and I do not propose to detain the committee by discussion. Let the vote be taken.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DUNNELL, there were—ayes 69, noes 82.

Mr. DUNNELL called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DUNNELL and Mr. ATKINS were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 81.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to amend by inserting after the words "two dollars" in the second line of this section, the words "and fifty cents;" so as to make the per diem of jurors $2.50. This is the per diem which we pay our jurors in Pennsylvania, and I believe the same amount is paid in many other States. Jurors in the United States courts incur necessarily a great many expenses which jurors in the State courts do not incur. They have to travel a very considerable distance; they are obliged to board usually at hotels; and if only $2 a day be allowed them, the amount they will be required to expend in order to sustain themselves will exceed the amount they receive.

Two dollars and a half a day is a very small compensation for men who will efficiently and capably serve in this capacity. It seems to me the spirit of the times demands that men should receive adequate compensation for any services they may perform. It tends to keep them out of the way of temptation; it is an inducement (and all possible inducement should be employed for that purpose) for men to do what is right. If there be one place where men should be actuated by pure and high motives, where they should be free from all sorts of temptation, it is the jury-box.

I therefore submit this amendment to the Committee of the Whole in good faith, hoping that it will be accepted as a compromise of opposing views on this subject. The amendment if adopted will afford only such compensation as gentlemen serving in this capacity are fairly entitled to.

Mr. ATKINS. The House has twice acted on this proposition and fixed the pay of jurors at $2. [A Voice: "Both Houses."] I do not suppose there is any disposition on the part of the House to change its mind. I therefore call for a vote.

The amendment of Mr. BAYNE was not agreed to, there being—ayes 54, noes 73.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I move to amend by striking out the proviso at the end of the section.

The Clerk read the proviso, as follows:

Provided, That no citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask the gentleman offering this amendment whether it is his purpose to exclude persons of color from juries in the United States courts?

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I understand it is urged by some that this is a provision of law as it now stands. If so, there is no use in adding the proviso. If it was not the existing law, it would not be made so by my vote.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, a resolution authorizing the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate and the Committee on Public Lands of the House to appoint a sub-committee to act in aid of the commission authorized under act of March 3, 1879, charged with the duty of codifying the laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain; and a resolution to print an edition of the Narrative of the Polaris Expedition.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 102) authorizing a survey of the Mississippi River near Lake Concordia, Louisiana, and Cowpen Bend, Mississippi; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 114) donating granite blocks to Mower Post, Grand Army of the Republic of New Orleans, Louisiana.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 2275) extending the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands," approved March 3, 1879, until the 1st day of October, 1880.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. No. 44) appointing a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress to take into consideration what changes, if any, should be made in the mode of guarding and collecting the revenue and appropriating the moneys as collected.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 113) to provide for the purchase of the stereotype plates of the final reports of the centennial commission upon the centennial exhibition of 1876; and

An act (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR JUDICIAL EXPENSES.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OSCAR TURNER] desire to speak to his amendment?

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I offer the amendment upon my own motion, not as representing the views of any one else on this floor, and I desire a vote upon it.

Mr. ATKINS. I have only this to say: [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I hope I have not overstepped the proper bounds; I am as anxious to vote as anybody.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that amendment will not receive the sanction of the Committee of the Whole. I have no idea indeed that it will. I hardly believe there is any one who will support it except it be my honorable friend the mover of the amendment, for whom I have very great respect. And if the gentleman had considered for a moment I think he would not have offered the amendment. For it proposes to abrogate a part of the Constitution of the United States itself. The fifteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States guarantees what is here provided.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ATKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. If that is part of the Constitution of the United States, which is the paramount law of the land, why put it into this bill as a proviso?

Mr. ATKINS. Very good. We enact a great many laws that are in accordance with the Constitution. We put that proviso in there to show we do not design this law shall be construed so as to deny to colored citizens the right to serve upon juries. [Applause.]

The question being put on Mr. OSCAR TURNER'S amendment, the Chairman stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Several members called for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen who call for a division will please rise.

Mr. CONGER and Mr. MCKENZIE rose and called for a division.

The committee divided; and there was one vote in the affirmative. [Cries of "No further count!"]

So (further count not being insisted upon) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LOWE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "belong," in line 19, second section, insert:
Provided, That membership and good standing in said principal political party shall be verified by a certificate, in writing, from the executive committee of the precinct, or voting district, in which said commissioner may reside.

Mr. ATKINS. Who offered that?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. LOWE.]

Mr. ATKINS and Mr. GIBSON asked that the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. LOWE. Mr. Chairman, now for the first time in the history of the country partisan politics is introduced by law into the jury-box. Juries, no doubt, have been sometimes packed, but contrary to law—never before by statute. This section does it. I am opposed to the whole thing in principle and practice. But if it must be done, let it be well done. If this provision is proper to be in the law at all it is proper that it shall be perfected and made effective and complete. It is for the purpose of perfecting the section that I offer the proviso. Any member who has studied the philosophy of the section sought to be amended will see that this proviso tends to complete its sense.

The question being put on agreeing to Mr. LOWE'S amendment, the Chairman stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. LOWE. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 84.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2 by striking out all after the word "held," in line 17, down to and including the word "belong," in line 19, namely, these words:
A well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a single word on this amendment. I am aware that a few days ago this amendment, proposed by my colleague from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] was voted down. In a conversation with several gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber, I was impressed with the idea that they deprecated the introduction of party politics into our jury system as much as I certainly do; and I was led to believe by that conversation that they would vote to exclude this provision from this bill whenever the opportunity might be again offered.

I am aware that the clause introduced by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] provides that the clerk and commissioner shall select jurors or the names to be placed in the box "without reference to party affiliations." Of course such a provision made with the view of excluding politics from the jury-box is what would be designated by Governor Allen of my State as a barren ideality, qualified by an energetic adjective. It introduces party politics at the very source, and therefore it is nonsense to talk about purifying the waters further down the stream. I trust that that clause of this bill will be stricken out. It was fully discussed the other day. I simply desire to have an opportunity now to ascertain whether any progress has been made in the sentiment upon this question.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to say only a word. I commend the principle which the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio suggests; that is, that we should not have partisan politics mixed up with the administration of justice. But it so happens, Mr. Chairman, that in some of the States of this Union this very provision will secure less partisanship in the administration of justice than if you were to strike these words from the bill. I do not desire to go into the question. I will not go into the question; but I can state to the gentleman who offers the amendment to-day that there is now in session a district court of the United States in one of the Southern States in which not a single democrat has been summoned upon the jury. Every one of them is a republican.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to say just a single word further. I would suggest to my friend from Tennessee that the cure will not be to make the whole system vicious because some practice that is vicious has grown up under it. It is to avoid vitiating the system that I move to strike this out.

Mr. WARNER. The words now in the bill, "without reference to party affiliations," is affirmative legislation prohibiting politics from entering the jury-box.

The question being put on Mr. BUTTERWORTH'S amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. BRENTS. I offer the following amendment:

Insert after the word "dollar" "except in the Territories of the United States, where the per diem pay of each juror shall be $3."

Mr. Chairman, when the former bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole this amendment was adopted. It was lost, however, when it came back into the House. I hope it will be adopted now and will be retained when it comes into the House.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope it will not.

Mr. BRENTS. In the Territories, as we all know, everything is more expensive than in the old and settled States. Travel is more expensive, yet United States jurors only receive five cents a mile for travel in the discharge of their functions; and in a territorial court they receive ten cents per mile and a greater per diem than they do when they discharge their duties in United States courts.

Mr. ATKINS. We ought not to disturb the equality between the citizens of the Territories and those of the States in this respect.

The question was taken upon Mr. BRENTS'S amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out all of the section after line 7 down to the end of the section. The effect of the amendment will be to leave the section so that it will repeal the two sections of the Revised Statutes which contain the test oath and then repeal that part of the section into which political legislation enters, for the purpose of determining who shall be in the jury-box.

I do not desire to say more. Nothing need be said or can be said to strengthen the arguments made upon the amendment offered by my friend upon this side of the House, [Mr. LOWE.] I believe that that part of the section which provides for the manner in which jurors should be drawn should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that that committee should report a provision that shall be perfect in all its features.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have a bill of that kind coming from the Committee on the Judiciary, but the gentleman's friends will not let us consider it.

Mr. HISCOCK. At the proper time we shall be ready to consider it.

Mr. SPRINGER. But that will be too late for the purposes of justice.

Mr. ATKINS. Twenty octavo volumes would not more than contain the speeches which have been already made upon this question, and I think the House fully understands it and that its judgment is made up. I will not therefore detain the House by any remarks of my own.

The question was taken on Mr. HISCOCK's amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 61, noes 82.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move now to strike out the whole of the second section.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to insert after the word "party," in line 18, the words "in the district in which the court is held."

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is only intended to make certain that which was the object of the bill. These words ought to be inserted. If the commissioner is to be selected from the party opposing the clerk, then he ought to be selected from the principal party in the district. The amendment is in harmony with the purpose of the bill, and certainly will not be objected to, otherwise you have no limitation in the mind of the clerk, and he may say the principal party of the United States or in the State. It ought to be the principal party in the district in which the court is held. That is certainly the object and scope of the bill, and if this feature is to be retained in the bill at all, then this limitation ought to be added so as to perfect the section and make its meaning certain.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in line 16 the very idea is embodied that is contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER.]

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman read it?

Mr. HUNTON. I will read it:

To be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing, residing in the district in which such court is held.

A man could not reside in that district without being attached to one or the other of the political parties.

Mr. WEAVER. He may reside in the district, but he may be selected by the clerk from the principal party opposed to the clerk, not in the district, but in the State or in the United States. The amendment is certainly in harmony with the very object of the bill.

The question was taken on Mr. WEAVER's amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 62, noes 55.

No further count being insisted upon, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to strike out all after the word "thereof," in line 15, down to and including the word "held," in line 17; as follows:

Which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing, residing in the district in which such court is held.

That will leave the section providing that the clerk in the court and the commissioner shall place in the box the names of three hundred persons, leaving out all in the section in regard to the political proclivities of jurors, and stripping the section entirely of that feature.

The question was taken upon Mr. LAPHAM's amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 68, noes 86.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CASWELL. I move to strike out all of section 2 after line 2, so that it will read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the per diem pay of each juror, grand or petit, in any court of the United States, shall be $2.

If the substance of this section were placed in a separate bill I will not say that I would not support it, but I am totally and wholly opposed to attaching political or general legislation to appropriation bills; and if we settle nothing else at this session we ought to settle that question. We have made some progress in that direction, but when the House first convened, every appropriation bill was literally loaded with political and general legislation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] yield?

Mr. CASWELL. Not now. We have made such progress that we have reduced this political and general legislation here down to two supplemental bills, and the greater portion of it is embodied in this small bill. We have made such reform in legislation of that kind at this session that I want to see it completed. And I now ask my democratic friends to join hands with us and establish a precedent for our guidance in the future. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to ask my friend——

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Is the gentleman not aware that the House has refused to proceed to the consideration of this subject in a separate bill? Now, surely there is no sincerity in asking us, after the House has refused to proceed to the consideration of the subject in a separate bill, to strike this provision from this bill for the purpose of going back and considering it in a separate bill. Members of this committee can see at once that if this should be done we will fall between the two, and fail to secure any legislation in relation to jurors. We must of necessity consider it here and now, because you on this side [the republican side] will not allow us to vote for it in a separate bill.

Mr. CASWELL. I want to say, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] that this side of the House is not responsible for what this House has determined to do. But I ask him now at this time to join hands with us to strike out from appropriation bills all legislation of a general character.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker) None of those here are responsible for those who are absent, but your side of the House is responsible for taking advantage of absentees.

Mr. CASWELL. But you have fought us step by step from the beginning of this session, insisting that this political legislation should be put upon appropriation bills, and with the aid of the President we have succeeded in striking it all out except this.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL]——[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I desire to ask a question of the gentleman——[Renewed and continued cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!"] Very well; I insist upon a vote.

Mr. CONGER. I demand that order shall be preserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is doing his best to have the committee preserve order.

Mr. CONGER. I thought the Chair might exert himself a little more.

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist upon a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not allow any business to be transacted until order is restored.

After a pause,

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. CASWELL; and upon a division there were—ayes 56, noes 77.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In lines 32 and 33 of section 2, strike out the word "servitude."

[Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. It is not unexpected to me, nor will it be to the country, that gentlemen on the other side should object to striking out the word "servitude."

I rise, however, to remark upon a statement made by the Speaker of this House, for whom, as I am bound parliamentarily to say, I have great respect. [Laughter.] That gentleman took occasion to say that some of the provisions of this section had been embodied in a separate bill, and that this House had refused to consider that bill, had objected to its consideration.

Now, when common members of the House like myself and my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] who has charge of this bill, and other men make statements of that kind for political effect no one here pays any particular attention to them, neither does the country; but when the Speaker of this House leaves the chair and announces to the country that the House has refused and does refuse to consider a bill having in it the provisions of this section 2, I feel that that statement is of importance enough not to be allowed to go to the country unchallenged.

Sir, we have taken the very bill to which the gentleman alludes and placed it in Committee of the Whole, where this bill is, for the very purpose of having a full, free, and fair consideration of it.

Mr. LAPHAM. And put it into Committee of the Whole before this was put in.

Mr. CONGER. And put it into Committee of the Whole before this was put in. Now, I know that in Committee of the Whole the Speaker of this House does not have such control of that bill as he would have in the House. But we have placed that bill just where we place all these bills, that they may receive full, free, and fair consideration. But I desire the country to know that this House, of which the majority are democrats, has not tried to suppress such a bill, the remarks of the Speaker of this House to the contrary nevertheless notwithstanding. [Laughter] When we again reach that bill in Committee of the Whole—and I for one with an eagerness peculiar to my nature long to reach that bill in Committee of the Whole—we will consider it. But let not the country understand that even a democratic House, as the Speaker said, refuses to consider any bill presented here.

The bill is in the Committee of the Whole. It is where it can be considered—in the place where it ought to be considered—if I understand its position aright.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) In reply to the gentleman's criticism on my remarks in connection with the position I occupy, I must remind him that I am a member of this Committee of the Whole. I did not leave the chair for the purpose of speaking on this bill. I was on the floor, was entitled to speak as a member of the Committee of the Whole, and it was quite appropriate that I should do so. But the gentleman is inaccurate in his statement; and I reaffirm all that I uttered a moment ago. The bill to which the gentleman alludes as being in the Commiteee of the Whole is not there. It is unfinished business in the House; and its consideration has been obstructed many times by the minority. Moreover, gentlemen who advocated that bill on this floor repeatedly made propositions to the other side looking to a vote on the bill; but those propositions have never been acceded to. That is an unvarnished history of the facts, and with that I am content to leave the matter.

Mr. CONGER. I may be mistaken; but I understood——

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman not only "may be," but is, mistaken.

Mr. CONGER. I understood that by unanimous consent the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman is mistaken. I would not like to be personal; I never am so; but I do not recollect that the gentleman, although in his seat, voted upon the question when the bill was up.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know what the gentleman may have seen.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman and his friends did not vote; otherwise there would have been a quorum, and the majority on this side would in such event have been enabled to pass the bill.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman will not deny that whenever that bill has been before the House the previous question has been demanded without an opportunity for one word of debate or for a single amendment. That statement must stand unchallenged.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) On the contrary, I appeal to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] to say whether he did not make a proposition looking to debate on the bill to any extent that might be desired.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to state that as the bill referred to happened to be in my charge, I from my place here on two separate days made a proposition to gentlemen on the other side, as the RECORD will show, that they might have as much time as they wanted to debate the question and the fullest opportunity to offer amendments, if they would allow a vote to be taken upon the bill. I went further. I went privately to gentlemen on that side, especially to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] who was leading the fillibustering movement which prevented us from getting a vote upon the measure——

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman uses unparliamentary language.

Mr. HERBERT. My memory is accurate. I did go to the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman uses unparliamentary language, whatever the truth may be.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is not unparliamentary to tell the truth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I only wish to say that I took the floor in the first instance to protect the House against a dilemma into which it might fall by voting to strike out these clauses in this bill. If they should be struck out now with the expectation of their being passed in a separate bill, we might hereafter be met in the same way as we have been; and the separate bill might be prevented from passing.

Mr. HERBERT. I made every possible effort to come to some understanding with gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. CONGER. If I cannot have a vote upon the amendment, I withdraw it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend this section by striking out in line 6 the words "and 821." If these words be struck out of this repealing provision, section 821 of the Revised Statutes will still remain in force. That section is as follows:

At every term of any court of the United States the district attorney, or other person acting on behalf of the United States in said court, may move, and the court, in their discretion, may require the clerk to tender to every person summoned to serve as a grand or petit juror, or venireman or talesman, in said court, the following oath or affirmation, namely: "You do solemnly swear (or affirm) that you will support the Constitution of the United States of America; that you have not, without duress or constraint, taken up arms or joined any insurrection or rebellion against the United States; that you have not adhered to any insurrection or rebellion, giving it aid and comfort; that you have not, directly or indirectly, given any assistance in money, or any other thing, to any person or persons whom you knew, or had good grounds to believe, to have joined, or to be about to join, said insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted, or to be about to resist, with force of arms, the execution of the laws of the United States; and that you have not counseled or advised any person to join any insurrection or rebellion against, or to resist with force of arms, the laws of the United States." Any person declining to take said oath shall be discharged by the court from serving on the grand or petit jury, or venire, to which he may have been summoned.

The effect of this section is to allow, in the discretion of the court, challenges of jurors who have participated in the rebellion. While section 820, as I understand, was upon one occasion repealed (and to that for my part I have no objection) I am unwilling to favor the repeal of section 821 at this time, for I do not believe it wise to remove from the statute-book any provision that it may be necessary to resort to on any occasion for the protection of the Government.

The amendment of Mr. MITCHELL was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the last section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Attorney-General shall include in his annual report a statement of all payments or expenditures during any fiscal year out of any appropriation fund subject to requisitions by him.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2381) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses for the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same as amended with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. ATKINS. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The first question was upon the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole, to insert in line 18 of the second section, after the word "party," the words "in the district in which the court is held."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 76, noes 61.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question then recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 99, nays 67, not voting 120; as follows:

YEAS—99.

Acklen,	Dibrell,	King,	Shelley,
Aiken,	Dickey,	Klotz,	Simonton,
Armfield,	Elam,	Le Fevre,	Slemons.
Atkins,	Ellis,	Lounsbery,	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Beale,	Evins,	Lowe,	Springer,
Bicknell,	Felton,	Manning,	Stephens,
Blackburn,	Finley,	Martin, Benj. F.	Stevenson,
Bouck,	Ford,	McKenzie,	Talbett,
Bright,	Forney,	McMahon,	Taylor,
Caldwell,	Frost,	McMillin,	Thompson,
Clardy,	Gibson,	Morrison,	Tillman,
Clark, John B.	Gillette,	Murch,	Townshend, R. W.
Clymer,	Goode,	Myers,	Turner, Oscar
Cobb,	Gunter,	New,	Upson,
Coffroth,	Hammond, N. J.	Nicholls,	Waddill,
Converse,	Hatch,	O'Connor,	Weaver,
Cook,	Herbert,	Persons,	Wellborn,
Covert,	Herndon,	Phelps,	Whiteaker,
Cravens,	Hill,	Phister,	Whitthorne,
Culberson,	Hooker,	Reagan,	Williams, Thomas
Davidson,	House,	Richardson, J. S.	Willis,
Davis, Joseph J.	Hull,	Ryon, John W.	Wilson,
Davis, Loundes H.	Hunton,	Samford,	Wise,
De La Matyr,	Johnston,	Sawyer,	Yocum.
Deuster,	Jones,	Scales,

NAYS—67.

Aldrich, William	Daggett,	Hawley,	Pound,
Anderson,	Davis, George R.	Henderson,	Russell, W. A.
Baker,	Deering,	Hiscock,	Ryan, Thomas
Barber,	Dunnell,	Horr,	Sapp,
Bayne,	Errett,	Hubbell,	Shallenberger,
Blake,	Farr,	Jorgensen,	Sherwin,
Bowman,	Field,	Keifer,	Thomas,
Brewer,	Fisher,	Ketcham,	Tyler,
Briggs,	Forsythe,	Lapham,	Updegraff, J. T.
Browne,	Fort,	Marsh,	Updegraff, Thomas
Burrows,	Garfield,	Mason,	Valentine,
Butterworth,	Godshalk,	McCoid,	Van Aernam,
Cannon,	Hammond, John	Mitchell,	Voorhis,
Carpenter,	Harmer,	Monroe,	Wait,
Caswell,	Harris, Benj. W.	O'Neill,	Ward,
Conger,	Haskell,	Orth,	Willits.
Cowgill,	Hawk,	Osmer,

NOT VOTING—120.

Aldrich, N. W.	Dwight,	Martin, Edward L.	Robinson,
Atherton,	Einstein,	Martin, Joseph J.	Ross,
Bachman,	Ewing,	McCook,	Rothwell,
Bailey,	Ferdon,	McGowan,	Russell, Daniel L.
Ballou,	Frye,	McKinley,	Singleton, J. W.
Barlow,	Geddes,	McLane,	Singleton, O. R.
Belford,	Hall,	Miles,	Smith, A. Herr
Beltzhoover,	Harris, John T.	Miller,	Smith, William E.
Bingham,	Hayes,	Mills,	Sparks,
Bland,	Hazelton,	Money,	Speer,
Bliss,	Heilman,	Morse,	Starin,
Blount,	Henkle,	Morton,	Steele,
Boyd,	Henry,	Muldrow,	Stone,
Bragg,	Hostetler,	Muller,	Townsend, Amos
Brigham,	Houk,	Neal,	Tucker,
Buckner,	Humphrey,	Newberry,	Turner, Thomas
Cabell,	Hurd,	Norcross,	Urner,
Calkins,	James,	O'Brien,	Vance,
Camp,	Joyce,	O'Reilly,	Van Voorhis,
Carlisle,	Kelley,	Overton,	Warner,
Chalmers,	Kenna,	Pierce,	Washburn,
Chittenden,	Killinger,	Poehler,	Wells,
Claflin,	Kimmel,	Prescott,	White,
Clark, Alvah A.	Kitchin,	Price,	Wilber,
Colerick,	Knott,	Reed,	Williams, C. G.
Cox,	Ladd,	Rice,	Wood, Fernando
Crapo,	Lay,	Richardson, D. P.	Wood, Walter A.
Crowley,	Lewis,	Richmond,	Wright,
Dick,	Lindsey,	Robertson,	Young, Casey
Dunn,	Loring,	Robeson,	Young, Thomas L.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. WILBER, of New York. If he were present, I should vote "ay" and he would vote "no."

Mr. SLEMONS. My colleague, Mr. DUNN, is absent on account of sickness and is paired with Mr. HAYES, of Illinois.

Mr. HILL. My colleague, Mr. ATHERTON, is paired with Mr. NEWBERRY, of Michigan.

Mr. SCALES. My colleagues, Mr. VANCE and Mr. MARTIN, are paired. If present, Mr. VANCE would vote "ay" and I suppose Mr. MARTIN would vote "no."

Mr. MANNING. My colleague, Mr. MONEY, is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan; my colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, is paired with Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York, and my colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, who is absent by reason of sickness, is paired with Mr. CALKINS, of Indiana. If present, my colleagues would vote "ay."

Mr. WARNER. I am paired with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island.

Mr. TALBOTT. My colleague, Mr. HENKLE, is paired with Mr. NEAL, of Ohio, and my colleague, Mr. MCLANE, is paired with my colleague, Mr. URNER.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am paired with Mr. LORING, of Massachusetts. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. BEALE. My colleague, Mr. RICHMOND, is paired with Mr. PRESCOTT, of New York.

Mr. MULDROW. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey.

Mr. STEELE. I am paired with Mr. NORCROSS, of Massachusetts; otherwise I should vote "ay." Mr. KNOTT, of Kentucky, is absent and paired with Mr. FRYE, of Maine. My colleague, Mr. KITCHIN, is paired with Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. BACHMAN. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. OVERTON; otherwise I should vote "ay."

Mr. COX. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. MORTON. If he were present, he would vote one way and I would vote another. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROSS. I am paired with Mr. CRAPO, of Massachusetts.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BINGHAM. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am paired with Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. POEHLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WASHBURN. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. DICKEY. My colleague, Mr. GEDDES, is absent and paired with Mr. BARLOW, of Vermont.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to announce that Mr. LADD, of Maine, is absent and paired with his colleague, Mr. LINDSEY. If present, Mr. LADD would vote "ay."

Mr. HURD. I am paired with Mr. CLAFLIN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. HUNTON. My colleagues, Mr. TUCKER, Mr. CABELL, and Mr. RICHMOND are detained from the House by sickness, and paired respectively with Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, with Mr. BOYD, of Illinois, and with Mr. PRESCOTT, of New York.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, is paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut.

Mr. COBB. My colleague, Mr. HOSTETLER, is paired with Mr. MCCOOK, of New York, and my colleague, Mr. COLERICK, is paired with Mr. HUMPHREY, of Wisconsin.

Mr. BOUCK. My colleague, Mr. BRAGG, is paired with Mr. JAMES, of New York. If present, Mr. BRAGG would vote "ay."

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. JOHNSTON. My colleague, Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, is paired with Mr. BAILEY, of New York.

Mr. MULLER. I am paired with Mr. HEILMAN, of Indiana. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to announce that Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama. If present, Mr. LEWIS would vote "ay" and Mr. WILLIAMS "no."

Mr. WAIT. My colleague, Mr. MILES, is paired with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois; Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, is paired with Mr. ROBERTSON, of Louisiana; and Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, is paired with Mr. MORSE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. HAZELTON. I am paired with Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia. If he were here, I should vote "no." My colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama.

Mr. LAPHAM. My colleague, Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, is paired with Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I am paired with Mr. RICHMOND, of Virginia.

Mr. BREWER. My colleague, Mr. STONE, is paired with Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi. If he were here, Mr. STONE would vote "no." My colleague, Mr. NEWBERRY, is paired with Mr. ATHERTON, of Ohio. If present, Mr. NEWBERRY would vote "no." Mr. STARIN, of New York, is paired with Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. If they were here, Mr. STARIN would vote "no" and Mr. CLARK would vote "ay." My colleague, Mr. MCGOWAN, is detained from the House by reason of a death in the family of a friend.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to announce that Mr. REED, of Maine, is paired with Mr. WELLS, of Missouri.

Mr. SAPP. My colleague, Mr. PRICE, is paired with Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. If present, Mr. PRICE would undoubtedly vote "no."

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. EWING. If he were here, I should vote "no." My colleague, Mr. MCKINLEY, is paired with Mr. SPARKS, of Illinois.

Mr. NEAL. I am paired with Mr. HENKLE, of Maryland. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. WHITE. I am paired with Mr. THOMAS TURNER, of Kentucky. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. BLAKE. My colleagues, Mr. BRIGHAM and Mr. ROBESON, are absent by leave of the House. Mr. ROBESON is paired with Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, of New York, and, if present, would vote "no."

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. FISHER. My colleague, Mr. DICK, is paired with Mr. LAY, of Missouri. If present, Mr. DICK would vote "no."

Mr. FIELD. My colleague, Mr. ROBINSON, is paired with Mr. ROBERTSON, of Louisiana.

Mr. POUND. My colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY, is paired with Mr. COLERICK, of Indiana.

Mr. MORRISON. My colleague, Mr. SPARKS, is absent by leave of the House, because of sickness in his family. During his absence he is paired with Mr. MCKINLEY, of Ohio.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. BUCKNER, is paired with Mr. CHITTENDEN, of New York.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS, ETC.

Mr. COBB. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriations to pay the fees of United States marshals and their general deputies. Pending that motion, I move that all general debate in Committee of the Whole on this bill be limited to one minute.

Mr. BAKER. I move to amend the motion of my colleague [Mr. COBB] by striking out "one minute" and inserting "one hour and a half." I think it will facilitate business if three-quarters of an hour be allowed for debate on each side. On our side we desire it.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BAKER, there were—ayes 55, noes 69.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to see who votes against allowing any discussion on this bill. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. REAGAN. Pending that, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BAKER. If gentlemen on the other side will give us on this side half an hour, it will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are demanded, pending which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that gentlemen on the other side will be entirely satisfied with half an hour for debate. I hope no objection will be made.

Mr. ATKINS. I trust that my colleague on the committee [Mr. COBB] will yield to the request of his colleague [Mr. BAKER] for half an hour.

Mr. COBB. I cannot yield now.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to say that if half an hour be given to this side for debate, we will sit out the passage of the bill to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] if the demand for the yeas and nays be withdrawn, can move an amendment to that effect.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOOKER. I move that the House adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HOOKER, there were—ayes 26, noes 95; no quorum voting.

Mr. ATKINS and Mr. HOOKER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BAKER and Mr. COBB were appointed.

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw the demand for tellers.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not withdraw my demand.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to know whether the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ATKINS] wishes the House to adjourn. My vote will be governed by his answer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] withdrew the demand for tellers; but it was insisted on by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.]

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 79.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 19, less than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] to amend the motion of his colleague [Mr. COBB] so as to allow thirty minutes for general debate.

Mr. TALBOTT. Thirty minutes on each side.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the proposition to allow thirty minutes for general debate on each side.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 107, noes 24.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BAKER, and Mr. CLARK of Missouri, were appointed.

Pending the count by tellers,

Mr. SIMONTON said: I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman in a moment. The House is now dividing.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 127, noes 32.

So the motion of Mr. BAKER was agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMONTON] has already indicated that motion.

Mr. SIMONTON. I make the motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KLOTZ. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KLOTZ. I want to know how long it requires for a new member to be here before he gets the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has been recognized by the Chair whenever asked. The Chair thinks the gentleman has had recognition as often as required that the Chair should recognize him by parliamentary practice. The gentleman's question is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

The question being taken on Mr. SIMONTON'S motion, there were—ayes 101, noes 30.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ACKLEN: Memorial of the Louisiana constitutional convention, relative to the establishment of a marine school at New Orleans, Louisiana—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BRENTS: The petition of Alfred N. Marion, for compensation for services rendered while in charge of the Tulalip Indian agency, Washington Territory—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. FIELD: Papers relating to the war claim of Samuel M. Blair—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LOWE: Papers relating to the application of William A. Hammond to be placed on the retired list of the Army as Surgeon-General—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OSMER: The petition of 67 citizens of Pennsylvania, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. RYAN: The petition of citizens of Hampton, Kansas, for a post-route from La Crosse to Wakeeny, via West Point, Hampton, Elm Valley, and Bright Spring Creek, Kansas—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. TALBOTT: The petition of Frank L. Donnelly, for compensation for services rendered as a page for the House of Representatives, Forty-fifth Congress—to the Committee of Claims.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 27, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, which had previously received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A bill (S. No. 674) for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields, and to increase the pension of Caroline S. Webster;

A bill (S. No. 697) to establish post-roads in certain States therein named;

A bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 1847) to provide for the appointment of a "Mississippi River commission" for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes near its mouth to its headwaters;

A bill (H. R. No. 1856) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to extend the area for the taking up and impounding of domestic animals in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 2264) to amend section 1, page 234, volume 20, of the United States Statutes at Large, Forty-fifth Congress;

A bill (H. R. No. 2267) providing for the binding of the internal-revenue laws and manual;

A bill (H. R. No. 2274) concerning the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 2329) authorizing the Conway National Bank of Conway, Massachusetts, to change its location and name;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 5) relative to certain accepted drafts and other papers in the Department of State;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 32) authorizing the completion of the foundation of the Washington Monument;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 71) authorizing the appointment of a commission to lease a building for a city post-office in the city of Washington, District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 113) to provide for the purchase of the stereotype plates of the final reports of the centennial commission upon the centennial exhibition of 1876.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution I offered in regard to the free coinage of silver.

Mr. KERNAN. I inquire whether the Senator from Missouri or any other Senator desires to discuss that concurrent resolution at this time? We hardly want to vote on it now. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance, rather than to vote upon it now. It comes from no committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will come up under the rule at the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. ANTHONY. I rise to morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island.

REPORT OF FISH COMMISSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a concurrent resolution for printing two thousand copies of the report of the United States Commission on Fish and Fisheries, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 2,000 copies of the report of the United States Commission on Fish and Fisheries be printed and bound for distribution under direction of the Commissioner.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if there is any provision for copies to be distributed by Senators and Representatives?

Mr. ANTHONY. There has been a resolution passed ordering copies to be distributed by Senators and Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLISON. Of this same report?

Mr. ANTHONY. Of this same report. The Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries has frequent applications for them and the edition is entirely exhausted. These copies are exclusively for his use. Senators can undoubtedly obtain copies by application to the Commissioner.

The resolution was agreed to.

MORTON'S REPORT ON CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. ANTHONY. By the same committee, to which was referred a resolution to provide for printing the report of the late Oliver P. Morton on Chinese immigration, I am directed to report the resolution without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the late Oliver P. Morton on Chinese immigration be printed, and that 500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER.

Mr. HEREFORD. During my absence yesterday the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MCDONALD] was kind enough to introduce a resolution from the Committee on Mines and Mining, which I see was laid on the table. If this is the proper time, I will move now to take that resolution up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That resolution is on the Calendar of morning business, and after the disposition of the previous resolution introduced by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST,] that resolution will be in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it not in order for the Senator from West Virginia to move to take it up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, it would require unanimous consent to take it up until the resolution of the Senator from Missouri is disposed of. The Chair lays before the Senate the concurrent resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on the 25th instant, which will now be reported for information.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the complete remonetization of silver, its full restoration as a money metal, and its free coinage by the mints of the United States are demanded alike by the dictates of justice and wise statesmanship.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays. I shall accept that as a test vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. My vote upon the motion will be governed by the convenience of the Senator who offered the resolution, if his convenience is in question. I should therefore like to inquire whether the Senator wishes to speak to the resolution?

Mr. VEST. No, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. So that the Senator's convenience will be as well served by this course as any other?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; I shall take the vote on the motion to refer as a test of the sense of the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. I was called out of the Chamber and did not hear the resolution read this morning, but from my recollection of its reading yesterday it is simply a declaratory one covering the question of the free coinage of silver. I merely wish to state that this subject is now before the Committee on Finance, and on account of the special session and lack of time to give proper consideration to the matter, it has been postponed until the next December session, at which time, and at the first meeting then of the committee, as I understand, the subject is to be taken up, considered, and a report upon the measure made at the earliest practicable moment. I believe I state substantially and I may say correctly the conclusion of the committee, which I have a parliamentary right to state.

That being the case, Mr. President, aside from the question of opinion upon the measure, and deeming it eminently proper that the Senate and its committee charged with so important a subject should give ample time to its consideration and discussion, both in committee and in the Senate, and as this special session will doubtless close early next week, leaving certainly not time enough to consider a subject of such grave interest and importance to the country, I shall vote to postpone the subject until then, so that the whole question of free silver coinage may at that time be fully considered and reported upon to the Senate and the Senate then take deliberate action thereon.

Mr. VEST. I call attention to the fact that this is simply an abstract declaration of opinion in regard to the principle involved in the free coinage of silver. I do not propose now to enter into any details or to ask the indorsement of any specific particular legislation, the Warner bill or any other; but I ask the adoption of the resolution because the Committee on Finance of the Senate have refused to report the Warner bill, which has come here indorsed by the representatives of the people in the House, and which I believe is demanded by the public opinion of the country, and I know it is demanded by the public opinion of the West. It is for that very reason that I ask for this declaration of opinion. It is because I protest against the action of that committee; it is because I say they have no right to refuse to us full expression upon the record of our sentiments in regard to this great question; and it is because I propose to allay the anxiety in the public mind and to say to the people of the United States that the Senate as well as the House of Representatives are in favor of the free coinage of silver and that we propose to denounce the fraud—and I proclaim it such here to-day—by which silver was demonetized and surreptitiously struck out of the money of the land. That is my reason for bringing forward the resolution, and I have no hesitation in declaring it. As to the details, we can arrange them hereafter; as to who shall receive the price of coinage at the mints, we can arrange that hereafter; but I propose to put in letters of living light, if I can do it, before the people of the United States the assertion affirmatively that the representatives of the people in both branches of Congress are in favor in some shape of the free coinage of silver.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not rise to debate this question, but I rise to say a word which I believe is just to the Committee on Finance. There has been no action in that committee intending to smother any bill as to silver coinage or to prevent proper consideration and action upon any of them. The bill alluded to came to the committee late in this extra session; it came after that committee as well as others had time and again notified parties who wanted to come before them to press matters which they believed of importance that they would act in accordance with what they believed to be the sense of the Senate and best for the country, that is, not to enter at this extra session upon the consideration of questions of general legislation and of great importance, and which required time and deliberation to determine what the majority of the committee and the Senate should decide to be for the interest of the country. They therefore postponed the consideration of that bill and another bill involving the coinage of silver to the session of Congress in December next. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] states correctly that the decision of the committee was to postpone these measures until the next session and then take them up and act upon them promptly, and report upon them promptly to the Senate, that there might be action upon them by the Senate according to the will of the majority after an opportunity for full discussion.

As allusion has been made to the so-called Warner bill, let me say that nobody pretended that that bill should be passed in the shape it was in. Nay, sir, members of the House who favored the bill came to me saying there would have to be some important amendments made to it. Now, sir, the committee has intended and does intend to act upon it, intends to report upon it and afford the Senate an opportunity to do whatever is thought wise by the majority; but a majority of the committee thought it was not wise, especially as the bills came to us toward the close as we hoped of this extra session, to attempt in committee to agree upon the bills to be reported and then bring them here for discussion at this extra session.

I wish to say this much in vindication of the Committee on Finance of which I am an humble member. The majority of its members believed that this great question could best be discussed and best matured and best acted upon at the next session of Congress when there would be time, particularly as there came to us from every side indications that a little time might aid us in maturing a bill and adopting legislation as to silver that would enable it to be coined and kept at par with gold. There was no intention on the part of the committee of smothering these silver bills, no intention of doing anything wrong, but simply an intention of doing what was believed to be best for the subject itself and for the country.

Mr. FERRY. With the Senator from Missouri I also protest, but I protest against the Senate's proposed action upon a declaratory resolution on a subject which is now pending before a committee of the body, the more so when that committee has had insufficient time for its consideration; in the face also of two facts: one, that what is known as the Warner silver bill having been referred to that committee, for want of time to properly consider it the committee has postponed its consideration until the next December session; and what is known as the trade-dollar bill, covering in measure the same subject of the free coinage of silver, has also been partially considered by the committee and postponed until next December for fuller deliberation. I say that the proposition of the Senator from Missouri is simply a declaration of opinion in advance of the consideration of the committee of this body specially charged with the consideration of financial subjects, and in advance of the deliberate action of the Senate. I cannot reasonably see the object sought to be obtained by this declaration of opinion; certainly no legislative action; and in the face of the fact that the committee holds the subject, as was well stated by the Senator from New York, not for the purpose of postponing and finally suppressing action, but to give ample time for its consideration. I state here, as I have stated before, that I have been and am an advocate of free coinage under wise restrictions, so far at least as to exclude the surplus cheap silver coin and bullion of foreign nations and confined to the bullion product of our own country. I was an advocate of remonetization of silver. I was as earnest as the Senator from Missouri proposes to be active on his resolution of opinion on free coinage. Therefore I am not an enemy of free coinage; I am not here to antagonize it; but I have risen simply to vindicate the conclusion for the time of the Committee on Finance, and to speak in behalf of a reasonable opportunity for the expression of the deliberate judgment of this body upon a subject so grave as a question that affects the whole financial interests of the country and indirectly involves the great industries of this nation.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I hope the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance, for the reasons stated by the Senator from Michigan, in order that that committee may consider fully and carefully the whole question; but whether it is referred or not I hope the Senate will not commit itself to the resolution proposed by the Senator from Missouri. The Warner bill itself is a mild-mannered affair compared to the resolution of the Senator from Missouri, which proposes now to open the mints of the United States to the unlimited free coinage of silver, thus placing in the hands of the bullion-owners, foreign and domestic, the profits that are to arise from the coinage. No House of Representatives to my knowledge has ever committed itself to that proposition, and yet the Senator from Missouri seeks now within a day or two of the end of the session to instruct our Committee on Finance—because that is substantially what the resolution is—to bring in a bill here at the next session of Congress providing for the free coinage of silver, which means that this Government shall coin all the silver that is brought to the mints of the United States at its own expense, giving the profit and advantage, amounting now to ten or twelve cents upon the dollar, to the owners of the silver bullion.

I hope that we will be able to refer the resolution in order that it may be perfected and its language carefully guarded so that when the Committee on Finance is instructed upon that question it may be instructed in such a way as that the profits of coinage, for the present at least, shall go to the Government of the United States and not to the bullion-owners.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY,] who deems it necessary to state that he is in favor of free coinage and yet is afraid to express an opinion by a vote for the resolution. Furthermore, he seems to argue that it is necessary that the Committee on Finance shall have time to consider such a measure. At the last Congress that committee reported a like measure to the Senate, and that Senator I presume voted for the bill which was passed during the last Congress. If he understood it then, and if he knew enough about it then to vote for it, how has it happened that he has forgotten the matter now and that he does not now know whether he is ready to vote on the question or not?

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator puts that as a question and desires a reply, I am ready to reply to him.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am willing to hear it; but I did not ask for any reply at all; I am simply making an argument.

Mr. FERRY. Right there I will state to the Senator from Alabama that I did vote for what was known as the silver bill during the last Congress, and that bill restricted the coinage to a maximum of $4,000,000 a month. This proposition is for free coinage, including foreign bullion as well as our domestic product. One was limited and the other is unlimited.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the Senator is mistaken when he attempts to set up a distinction of that sort between the two measures. My friend from New York [Mr. KERNAN] and others have referred to what is called the Warner bill. I do not think that bill is before the Senate and open to discussion; but if it were I should say that when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] asserts that it will put it in the hands of bullion-owners to make a great traffic upon the Government, 10, 12, or 15 per cent., he is totally mistaken. The Warner bill does no such thing.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Alabama misapprehended what I said. I said that this resolution proposes that, and that the Warner bill proposes no such thing. The Warner bill of course, I know, gives the profit of coinage to the Government.

Mr. HOUSTON. Neither does this resolution propose any such thing. It does not go into details, nor propose to go into details, and the Senator ought to have known it. It is a resolution merely expressing the opinion of Senators and Representatives that free coinage is necessary to the country.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the Senator explain what he understands by "free coinage."

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know that it is proper or necessary to answer that question. I will do it in brief, however, for I do not intend to be led off into a discussion of the merits of the proposition. What I understand by free coinage of silver is to put it upon the basis of gold, and nothing more. This resolution does not pretend to say what the Senator from Iowa charges upon it; there is nothing of the sort in the resolution. Gentlemen who at the last Congress advocated and voted for the coinage bill of that Congress now come forward and ask for time to consider the merits of the proposition when the only difference they seem to draw is, as my friend from Michigan states, that one measure limited the coinage to $4,000,000 a month and the other is for the coinage of all the bullion that may come to the mints. That is a question that does not require twelve or eighteen months to consider. If it is a mere question of difference between the amounts, it does seem to me that the committee could have made up its mind long ago. But I have nothing to say about the committee. I am not now attempting to discuss that committee at all, and I regret that Senators have been drawn into an allusion to it.

I propose to say that my mind is made up on the subject of the coinage of silver. I propose to put the coinage of silver upon an equality with the coinage of gold. Do the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Michigan agree with me or do they disagree with me? Are they disposed to discriminate against the coinage of silver, and thereby indorse the misconduct of those who demonetized silver? Are they willing to indorse that even to the extent that a vote against this proposition now would seem to do it? Why shall we ask the Committee on Finance for an opinion? Will the Senator from Iowa tell me why I should go and consult the Committee on Finance as to what opinion I am to have in relation to the free coinage of silver? I have got an opinion and I propose to express it.

I had nothing to do with bringing the resolution here, but it is now before the Senate. I have an opinion upon it, and I presume the Senator from Iowa and the Senater from Michigan have an opinion upon it. If they have, why not express it? Why shall we smother up an expression of an opinion upon a great subject like this, when our minds are made up? I presume the gentlemen who have discussed this question at the previous Congress, who voted for the measure then enacted, and who understood the question then, can hardly say that they do not understand it now, and claim that as an excuse why they want this resolution to go to the committee.

I do not know that the mere expression of an opinion of the Senate or of the House amounts to much. It is simply an expression of the opinion the Houses entertain at the time. It may have little or nothing to do with the legislation of the country. If it had been left to me, I should have introduced no such resolution; but it is here before the body, and being before the body it is in my judgment the duty of the members of the body to say what they think of the resolution. I do not want to ask the Finance Committee what opinion I must have, nor do I want to ask that committee to instruct me as to what opinion I shall have, or what opinion I do have upon the subject. It is true they have before them the bill which has been named, and as far as the details of the bill are concerned they can arrange them to suit themselves, subject of course to the action of the Senate; but as far as this resolution is concerned that committee has nothing to do with it, and it ought not to have anything to do with it. It is exceedingly strange in my view of the case that gentlemen should argue that Senators here cannot express an opinion without referring it to the Committee on Finance to know whether they have got an opinion and if they have got one to know whether they can express it.

Mr. President, I entertain no such views, and I shall vote for the resolution.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, to my mind the Committee on Finance have nothing whatever to do with this resolution. It is a concurrent resolution; does not propose inquiry by the finance with the view to a bill; is not in the nature of a bill; is not a joint resolution, and is not in the nature of legislation; it is calling for the deliberate judgment, expression of opinion if you prefer, of the Senate of the United States upon this proposition: "that the complete remonetization of silver, its full restoration as a money metal, and its free coinage by the mints of the United States, are demanded alike by the dictates of justice and wise statesmanship." The Finance Committee could not throw any light upon that. That is a question which addresses itself to the deliberate judgment of every Senator, and there is no question in the entire range of politics which is so thoroughly well understood in the United States, or which has been so fully and freely discussed here and elsewhere, as that embodied in the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri; and I therefore believe that it is right and proper to act upon this resolution and act upon it now; and I submit that this in no wise interferes with the Finance Committee or with the courtesy due to it. They have made no report on the measures now before them. They say that the bill from the House which was submitted to them has not been maturely considered and digested by them, and that therefore they have not reported upon it. I have nothing to say about that. They have not reported it; I know they have not. But this resolution demands no report from the Finance Committee. That committee cannot throw any additional light upon this subject; it would be difficult for any one to present a new thought upon it—next to impossible—and in my judgment it is calling for that which the American people to-day have a right to know, what is the sentiment of this Senate upon this great question.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Texas answer a question which I desire to put to him?

Mr. MAXEY. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. He says this is a mere expression of opinion. If the Senate should express the opinion——

Mr. MAXEY. I would call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that I am looking at the minute-hand of the clock, and I do not want to be detained beyond one o'clock, when, or before that, a vote, if had to-day, must be taken.

Mr. ALLISON. I was looking at it myself, Mr. President. The Senator says the views of the Committee on Finance will not be affected by the passage of this resolution.

Mr. MAXEY. I did not say the views of the Committee on Finance would not be affected. I say the views of the Senate will not be affected by any report made by the Finance Committee on this resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I presume that is true, but this resolution is a declaration that the free coinage of silver is a desirable thing at this moment.

Mr. MAXEY. I so believe, and so expressed myself here when the silver bill was up.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly, I know the Senator believes that; but if that be true, then the Committee on Finance is substantially instructed to bring in a bill providing for the free coinage of silver. Is it not?

Mr. MAXEY. I do not think the Committee on Finance would obey that instruction against what they believe to be their conscientious duty in the premises. I presume they will make their report some time or other—when I do not know. But, however, I think in the mean time the American people have a right to know what the Senate of the United States believe on this great question; and I for one, with all deference to the Finance Committee, do not care to hear what they have got to say about it, for the reason that the same means of information, the same light which that committee has to guide them in their judgment guides me, and so I say of every other Senator here. It is an abstract question, upon which the Finance Committee can throw no light.

Mr. ALLISON. But the point with me is this: here is a declaratory resolution, which says that the free coinage of silver is a desirable and proper thing, dictated alike by sound policy and wise statesmanship. If that be true, the Committee on Finance ought to bring in a bill at this moment for the free coinage of silver.

Mr. MAXEY. I think that is true.

Mr. ALLISON. And that involves the whole silver question, whether it shall be done now, or next year, or the year after, whether or not we shall so legislate here with reference to silver at this moment as to drive all the gold in the United States out of the United States and place us at once upon a silver currency—not a silver currency alone because that is not the proposition.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, we were told when the silver bill was up that it was going to drive all the gold away from the country. Has it had that effect? We know it has not. We were told that it was going to depress the credit of this Government. On the contrary, the credit of the Government has gone constantly up. Every single one of these gloomy predictions which were made by the opponents of silver before have been proven by history to be false in judgment, as I believe the predictions now will be.

I have no earthly fear of too much gold coin or silver coin in this country. I would like to see the flood of coin come, and prosperity with it.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly, I quite agree with the Senator as to what was the effect of the silver bill as it passed at the last Congress; but it was because the coinage of silver was restricted that our gold did not go out of the country. Is it not perfectly apparent to any one who will study the question that if we open our mints to the free coinage of silver, the silver that is now in foreign countries will come here where it will find the best market and that our gold will go abroad to supply its place? Every one who studies this question know that it is impossible for the mints of the United States to coin more than from three to four or five million a month of silver coinage.

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. HEREFORD. Why does not the gold leave France. If gold would leave the United States, why does it not leave France?

Mr. ALLISON. It does not leave France because they have a double standard in France, and their mints are not open to the free coinage of silver.

Mr. HEREFORD. But they have twenty times as much silver there as we have here.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; and I agree with the Senator from West Virginia that I believe we can float upon a limited coinage from one hundred to one hundred and fifty millions of silver in this country if you give the Government the control of the coinage. But when we open our mints to the free coinage of silver, and also to the proposition embodied in all these measures, that certificates shall be issued upon silver bullion, that moment the Treasury will become the great reservoir of all the silver of Europe and of all the silver of our own country in the shape of silver bullion, and instead of having a coinage of silver we shall simply have a paper money based upon silver bullion, and only exchangeable for bullion having a constantly changing value. Every man knows that we cannot coin the amount of silver necessary to take the place of our gold coinage in this country within four or five years without enlarging our mints beyond the possibility of enlargement within a year or two.

Now, the proposition of the Senator from Alabama, when he declares himself in favor of the free coinage of silver, is a proposition to banish gold from the United States, and to place in the hands of every bullion-owner, whether in this country or abroad, from ten to fifteen cents upon the dollar of every dollar of the circulating medium of the country. That is his proposition.

Mr. HOUSTON. I take it for granted the Senator knows that that is not my proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. Did I not so understand the Senator?

Mr. HOUSTON. I expressly denied that that was indicated or contained in the resolution. I stated without any hesitation, broadly, that it was neither in the Warner bill nor involved in this resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; but the Senator from Alabama proclaimed himself in favor of the free coinage of silver; and whoever is in favor of the free coinage of silver is in favor of giving to the bullion-owners at the expense of the people of the United States the difference between the silver bullion and the metal when coined and made a legal tender.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the Senator mean to say that I said that?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not mean to say that the Senator from Alabama said that. I am endeavoring to draw an inference from what he said and from what appears in this resolution, which proclaims the doctrine that there shall be a free coinage of silver, which means that it shall be done without cost to the owner who may bring the bullion to the mints of the United States and have it coined into dollars.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Senator says he is endeavoring to do that, and he is laboring very hard to do it; but I want to say that the Warner bill expressly gives to the Government for the coinage of silver the difference between the value of the standard money and the value of the bullion, and that is the bill that is before the country; that is the bill which is in the minds of the Senate; and the resolution does not touch that matter at all.

Mr. VEST. In order to obviate any discussion as to the verbiage of the resolution by the use of the word "free," my colleague has prepared an amendment which I am willing to accept as a substitute. I send it to the desk to be read, and I think all the friends of free coinage of silver can certainly agree upon that.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be glad to hear the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The substitute will be read for information.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That the complete remonetization of silver and its restoration to a perfect equality with gold, both as coin and bullion, are demanded alike by the dictates of justice and wise statesmanship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri accept that as a substitute? The yeas and nays have been ordered, and if there is objection it cannot be accepted.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear that read again.

The substitute was read.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to that.

Mr. McMILLAN. Now let the original resolution be read, so that we may see the difference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The original resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the complete remonetization of silver, its full restoration as a money metal, and its free coinage by the mints of the United States are demanded alike by the dictates of justice and wise statesmanship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment being accepted?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object.

Mr. MORRILL. I withhold my assent to the proposition, at least for the present. At the commencement of this session it was the general understanding, Mr. President, of the Senate, so far as I could ascertain, that there should be no general legislation at this session; that we should discharge the duties for which we came here, and then adjourn and go home. All of the committees of which I have been a member have therefore refused or declined to report any measures of any consequence—without reference to their merits—unless there was some pressing emergency that required immediate action; they have, as have other committees, refused to consider all matters in relation to general legislation, and yet here at the very heel of the session it is proposed by a resolution to take up a measure which is perhaps more vexing the administration of governments throughout the world than any other, and we are asked to decide it instanter.

Why, Mr. President, this is a proposition that calls for the coolest, the most diligent, intelligent investigation of any subject that can come before an American Congress. If I know myself, I am very desirous that a solution of this question shall be had which shall introduce silver as a permanent currency on a par with gold. But I am not disposed at this moment to decide instanter upon a resolution popped in here within a day or two of the end of the session, nor am I disposed to accept the amendment proposed.

The amendment proposes the free coinage of silver because we happen to have the free coinage of gold. Therefore it is nothing less than a proposition to allow anybody who has silver bullion to go to the mints of the United States and have it coined and make whatever profit there may be in the difference between the price of bullion and legal-tender coin. This amendment proposed does not change the original resolution, as it seems to me. It leaves it precisely in such a condition that the owners of silver bullion, whether domestic or foreign, will have an opportunity to get it coined and save all the profit, whether 12 or 15 per cent., to themselves.

I had hoped this question would come up at a time when we could give the subject some considerable attention—such attention as its great importance demands—but I do not think at this moment that we ought to be called upon to take any action at all upon this question or any other outside of those for which we were called here, certainly not upon this, for the session is too near its end for us to reach, as I think, an intelligent conclusion upon the subject.

The proposition embraced in this resolution, it seems to me, covers the legislation that we have already had. Does anybody pretend to say that silver has not been already remonetized; that it is not made a legal tender, 412½ grains to the dollar, as much as the gold dollar? So far as I understand it, the silver remonetization has already taken place; it is being coined at the rate of from two to four millions a month, and all there is in the resolution in relation to that matter, therefore, is superfluous.

Then the original resolution provides for silver, "its free coinage." Of course nobody can understand anything else than that it is to be done, so that the owners of bullion are to have a profit, 12 or 15 per cent., and that at the expense of the Government.

Mr. President, I should hope for another reason that this resolution would be referred to the Committee on Finance. I am certain that there has been no disposition on the part of that committee to assume any undue advantages by a postponement of any bills that have been referred to them. It has only been from a sincere purpose of having a correct and intelligent conclusion arrived at.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour has expired.

Several SENATORS. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate joint resolution No. 39.

Mr. VEST. I move to lay aside the regular order and take a vote on this resolution. It is altogether too important to be postponed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to my friend from Missouri that as this and another appropriation bill are now ready for action and his resolution can come up to-morrow morning in morning hour, he had better let us go on with the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri insist on his motion?

Mr. VEST. No, sir, with the understanding that the resolution comes up in the morning.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR VARIOUS PURPOSES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives. The pending question is on the amendments offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

Mr. EATON. This resolution is covered up with amendments, which it seems to me are somewhat improper. I feel authorized myself in the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] to ask leave of the Senate to withdraw the amendment which he moved to the amendment of my honorable friend from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] and I trust my friend from Kansas will withdraw his amendment, and let us take a vote upon this little resolution without further delay.

Mr. INGALLS. I understand that, under the rules of the Senate, after an amendment has been amended it cannot be withdrawn even by unanimous consent. I believe that would be a fair interpretation of the forty-fourth rule of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Can it not be done by unanimous consent?

Mr. INGALLS. Let the forty-fourth rule be read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator from Kansas has objection to withdrawing his amendment, I suggest that we proceed to vote it down.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the rule be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Rule 44 will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

44. Any motion or resolution may be withdrawn or modified by the mover at any time before a decision, amendment, or ordering of the yeas and nays, except a motion to reconsider, which shall not be withdrawn without leave of the Senate.

Mr. EATON. I do not think that rule prevents the withdrawal of an amendment by unanimous consent.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Of course not.

Mr. EATON. It seems to me that it does not. I have much confidence in the opinion of my friend from Kansas, who has paid great attention to the rules; but it seems to me that an amendment may be withdrawn. It is different from a resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. I suppose it is in the power of the Senator and his friends, if they do not desire the adoption of this amendment to reject it; but unless there is some special reason given why the amendment should be withdrawn, I should feel some reluctance to taking that course. But if there is any reason, if justice will be subserved or the public business will be facilitated, of course I should not wish to place any obstacle in the way of the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now, if my friend will ask unanimous consent, as it is his amendment, no doubt he will get it. I would suggest, though, to the Senator, that this joint resolution proposes to pay some of the employés of the two Houses fifteen days' extra pay which has been usual at all extra sessions, and it is an act of justice to the per diem employés of both Houses. There are also one or two other items upon it in the same direction. For instance, an amendment was added by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to make an allowance to a few Treasury clerks who are to be dismissed. It looks to me to be an act of justice to the employés of the Senate and others, and I would ask my friend to withdraw his amendment by unanimous consent, so as to let the resolution pass, as it has yet to go to the House and be acted on. If he prefers it, of course it can be voted down.

Mr. INGALLS. It is very difficult, indeed, to refuse to yield to an application that is urged with so much force by the Senator from West Virginia, and I will, therefore, withdraw the amendment, if there is no objection.

Mr. EATON. I am authorized to withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas and the amendment of the Senator from Kansas are withdrawn, the Chair hearing no objection to that course. The joint resolution is still open to amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In line 10, the resolution now reads:

Fifteen days from the date of the adjournment of this Congress.

It should be:

This session of Congress.

I suggest that this verbal amendment be made, inserting "session of" before "Congress."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that amendment will be considered adopted. The Chair hears no objection. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I now move an amendment to come in after line 7 of section 2, which is sent over from the Committee on Appropriations of the House, they having omitted one employé there whom they wish inserted:

To pay one additional laborer in the engineer's department, House of Representatives, for the fiscal year 1880, $820.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I have an amendment that I desire to offer, and it is so necessary for the Senate that I hope the Committee on Appropriations will accept it, to come in at the end of the bill:

For suitable and necessary rooms for the use and accommodation of the Court of Claims, which the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to procure, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

For arranging and furnishing as committee-rooms for the use of the Senate the rooms in the Capitol now occupied by the Court of Claims, the sum of $2,000.

I desire to say that this matter has been before the Senate several times, and I believe the measure has always met with the approval of the Senate. I do not know of any other bill upon which it can be incorporated. The Court of Claims occupies rooms that would furnish several committee-rooms for the use of the Senate. We have now at least three or four committees that are destitute of committee-rooms, and one committee that is compelled to sit outside of the Capitol building. This is for the accommodation of the Senate mainly, as the House have already encroached upon the Court of Claims so as to take the rooms mainly on the House side of the building.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I would ask the Senator whether this has been considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. MORRILL. It has been, and is unanimously reported.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That being the case, the only objection I would have (and I do not know that that is a serious one) is that it may delay the resolution and prevent its passage in the House. If that should be the case, the employés who, I think, are entitled to their fifteen days' pay, might lose it. But if the Senator insists upon putting it on this resolution, as it comes from his committee after thorough consideration, I will not object.

Mr. MORRILL. I did not see the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] in his place or I should have had him offer it himself. I think there can be no objection to it in the House or Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDONALD. I offer an amendment to the third section, to come in at the end of that section:

To pay to H. T. Burrows for his services as a special messenger of the Senate during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, the sum of $511.30, the same being the salary of a messenger less the amount already received by him on account of said services.

I wish to state that this same allowance was passed at the close of the last session, but too late to receive the signature of the President.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I agree with the Senator that a provision for Burrows did pass at the last session. The only question with me is as to the amount that ought to be paid. Now, I ask my friend whether he has examined it?

Mr. McDONALD. I have cut it down to the pay the lowest-class messenger of the Senate is receiving.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask my friend whether the sum in the resolution which passed at the last Congress was larger.

Mr. McDONALD. It was larger than this.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That was my recollection.

Mr. McDONALD. This is $511.30. That amounted to about $1,200.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think it is a just claim. My only objection is that I am afraid it is loading down the resolution, but I will not press an objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I move the adoption of the following amendment, to be inserted after line 7 of section 2:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay a sum equal to one month's pay from the date of their discharge from the disabled soldiers' roll of the House of Representatives, respectively, to William H. Prescott, Eugene McSweeney, and Robert E. Hedian.

These are three disabled discharged soldiers whose names were borne on the soldiers' roll of messengers of the House of Representatives. Two of them were discharged in the month of April, the remaining one in the month of May of the present session. It has always been customary to pay to these discharged employés one month's extra pay after their discharge. This proposition has been considered by the Committee of Accounts of the House, reported unanimously to the House, and adopted unanimously by the House; but it is necessary that it should be adopted in the Senate at the present time in order to avoid the bill being returned to the Senate by the House with this amendment, or these men must lose their extra pay. It is simply in accordance with custom, and has the unanimous sanction of the House in the way I have stated.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My understanding is that we have already voted thirty days' pay to all discharged employés, both of the House and of the Senate. The Senator does not want these men to have double pay.

Mr. BLAIR. It could hardly be so, even if a general act of the kind mentioned had been passed, but of that I have no knowledge. This only proposes to give them one month's extra pay, and I suppose it to be essential to their rights that the amendment be adopted, because it has been sent to me from the House of Representatives with a strong and urgent request that it be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I certainly should not wish to prevent the payment of these three men, but I submit to the Senator and to the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations knew nothing of it whatever, and my impression is that it will be found that thirty days' pay has been allowed to all the discharged employés. That was a general provision, and I do not see how these men could be missed, and if we vote this it may give double pay.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not think that can possibly be so. This matter has been very recently considered in the House, and in the RECORD of June 21 the Senator will find a full account of what transpired there in regard to it. I do not know that it is strictly proper to allude to the proceedings of the House, but precisely this same phraseology which I use here as an amendment was passed in the form of a resolution by the House after having been examined and reported unanimously by the Committee on Accounts of that body. It merely provides for the payment of thirty days' pay from the time of discharge. There is no possibility of their getting pay for more than thirty days in any event.

Mr. EATON. I should like to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that I should be very glad to have him add then "unless they had been paid." If he would add that proviso, there would be no objection to his amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. Then add phraseology saying, "provided that they have not been previously paid," or words to that effect.

Mr. EATON. "Provided the thirty days' extra pay shall not have been allowed and paid."

Mr. BLAIR. Add, "provided that such payment is not previously provided by law."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am reminded by my friend from Maryland that on the 9th of the present month the House passed a resolution giving all discharged employés thirty days' extra pay.

Mr. BLAIR. That may be so, but there is no law providing for the payment of this thirty days' extra pay. There is no general law providing for it. It cannot be paid upon the resolution of the House alone. It is necessary that there should be a law enacted by both branches and approved by the President to accomplish that. Precisely this same thing has been attempted to which the Senator aludes. The resolution alluded to passed the House, but the accounting officers of the Treasury declined payment upon that resolution, giving as their reason this specific one, that it was necessary the appropriation should be made by authority of law, and therefore the amendment is offered here to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment as now proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay a sum equal to one month's pay from the date of their discharge from the disabled soldiers' roll of the House of Representatives, respectively, to William H. Prescott, Eugene McSweeney, and Robert E. Hedian: Provided, Such pay has not been already provided for by law.

Mr. BLAIR. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will be thus modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read:

A joint resolution in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. EATON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 2381) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses for the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes. I move that that bill be taken up.

The title of the bill was read by the Secretary.

Mr. EATON. I ask for the immediate consideration of that bill. I want to say now to my friends on the other side who very kindly did not object to its reference yesterday, that so far as I know, and I believe I know the feeling of this side of the Chamber, there will be no attempt whatever to shorten or cripple debate in any way; and if there is not time enough between this hour and the ordinary hour of adjournment for all Senators to express their views on this subject freely, I will myself make a motion to adjourn, so that there shall be no night session. I trust that under these circumstances the Senate will proceed at once to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON and others. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no objection, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Connecticut. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EATON. Perhaps I should say that the bill is reported back as it came from the House, without amendment. I ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length.

The bill was read.

Mr. EATON. After a careful examination of this bill I think I am authorized in saying to the Senate that the only difference between this and the bill which has already passed the Senate is first in line 33 of the first section the words "six hundred" are stricken out, so that it reads "$2,090,000" instead of "$2,690,000," that $600,000 being applicable to another purpose which is not in this bill but was in the bill that formerly passed the Senate, to wit, payment of marshals, deputy marshals, &c.; that clause being stricken from the old bill that was previously before the Senate.

Then again this addition is made, in the sixteenth line of the second section:

Residing in the district in which such court is held.

The commissioner to be appointed by the judge for the purpose of selecting jurors, by this bill, must be a resident of the district in which the court is held. In the old bill those words were not contained. I think that is an improvement in the bill. The commissioner under the old bill might have been taken from any part of the State where there was more than one district, but here it must be from the district in which the court is held.

Mr. CONKLING. Is there not another change also?

Mr. EATON. If there is, I should be obliged to my friend if he would suggest it.

Mr. CONKLING. I will look it up in a moment. My impression is that the other bill did not speak of a political party in the district.

Mr. HARRIS. Line 18.

Mr. EATON. Line 18:

And a well-known member of the principal political party in the district in which the court is held opposing that to which the clerk may belong.

I have not the old bill by me, but the same principle was there, that the clerk should be of one of the opposing political parties and the commissioner of the other.

Mr. HARRIS. I would suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that the words "in the district" are added, which were not in the former bill.

Mr. CONKLING. That is my understanding; and although I do not feel very competent to give information about such a thing, I will say that I am told that this was a tribute of recognition of that denomination of democrats in the House and elsewhere known as greenbackers; that their organization being a little localized, being sometimes in that nature which physicians call circumscribed and not prevailing all over States, it was thought to be a little better for them to have it by judicial districts which divide States, so that if in a judicial district the greenbackers were numerous, though not in the State, that would be the principal political party opposed to the clerk.

Mr. EATON. It not being my good or ill fortune to belong to that distinguished wing of what my friend calls the democratic party, I was not aware before that there was any greenback-democratic party anywhere. I had understood there was a greenback party. I would not have been as likely to have arrived at the information as my friend from New York; but I really do not think that that need make any particular difference. The commissioner is to be of the principal opposing party in the district to that to which the clerk belongs; and if it happens to be that the republican party in some district may be divided, as doubtless it is divided in a great many districts, so that they form when divided the two principal parties in that district, then I suppose we shall be compelled to take two republicans at that time.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut what the court would do in case the clerk, for instance, should happen to be a republican and the greenback party and the democratic party should be very evenly balanced? Would he have to call an election in order to ascertain which of these was the principal party before appointing the commissioner, or how would he arrive at it?

Mr. EATON. I really do not think my friend intends an answer to that.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like an answer, indeed, because in case parties are evenly divided I do not know how the court will comply with this law.

Mr. EATON. I will say this to my friend: The clerks of nearly all the courts of the United States are republicans. I know one or two States where the clerks are democrats; but I apprehend there will be no difficulty under this provision. I apprehend it will be found that the principal opposing political party in any district in any State in this Union will be, if the clerk is a republican, the democratic party; if the clerk is a democrat, the republican party. That is my belief, and therefore I do not desire to change this bill in the slightest particular in that regard.

Mr. WINDOM. The difficulty I apprehended was in the practical application of this law.

Mr. EATON. I shall leave it to the judge to apply the law, and I do not think he will have any difficulty in arriving at a proper solution of the matter.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator from Connecticut was kind enough in answer to an inquiry of mine to tell me something. Now by way of reciprocating, I want to tell him something. The honorable Senator said that the bill originally omitted the words "residing in the district in which such court is held," as applicable to the commissioner; for he says the former bill was that the commissioner should be a citizen of good standing, and now he says have been added the words "residing in the district in which such court is held."

Here is the bill for which my honorable friend voted, the bill which has been considered so much heretofore, and from that bill I read to the Senator the very words which he thinks are added to this bill:

Which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing residing in the district in which such court is held.

But in one version of the bill they added the words again "of good standing" by way perhaps of the ornaments of discourse. "Of good standing" was in twice. These words were in all the time, "residing in the district in which such court is held," and "and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong." This is the former bill. Now the words which have been interpolated into this bill, as indicated by the Senator from Tennessee a few moments ago, are "a well-known member of the principal political party in the district in which the court is held;" and it will be seen that the introduction of these words does not refer at all to the residence of the commissioner, because that is provided for before in line 16 "which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing residing in the district in which such court is held." That is in one sentence, and separately are the words "and a well-known member of the principal political party in the district in which the court is held opposing that to which the clerk may belong." So that the change is this: It is proposed now not only as it was before that a jury shall be drawn as matter of politics, one from one side and one from the other, but that this political division shall take place not in respect of the great divisions of political parties in the country, but in respect as well of those local divisions found in judicial districts. So that if in Maine, for example,—I refer to Maine because I believe the Senator from Connecticut the other day jocosely referred to that—it turns out that in a particular judicial district——

Mr. EATON. There is but one in Maine.

Mr. CONKLING. I am aware of that. There is but one in Maine, but in many States there are two, in some three, and there are likely to be more than three hereafter if a certain bill already introduced shall be adopted. If, I say, in a judicial district it turns out that that denomination of democrats more modern and supposed by some members of that body to be more improved than any species of democrats pre-existing, that species of democrats known as the greenbacker happens to be in a majority over the former and if I may so say obsolete democratic party there, then this commissioner (provided the clerk of the court be a republican) must be a greenbacker, and then juries are to be made up upon that grand idea and issue!

Think of it a moment, Mr. President—I say, "Mr. President," [Mr. GARLAND in the chair,] because you are a lawyer practiced and instructed—think now in a judicial district where the greenback vote chances to be strong, where there is a strong feeling in favor of paper inflation, and think of selecting a jury to pass upon all issues of life, liberty, property, all the questions drawn into litigation, by ascertaining their views touching the greenback question, whether they think that fiat money is the true theory of currency, or whether they think that paper money should be the mere symbol of actual value behind it! Think of drawing a jury with reference to that!

I do not mean, Mr. President, at this moment to trespass upon the indulgence of the Senate. I did not know until I heard the reading of the bill by the Secretary that these words were here, and in entire innocence I asked for a second reading, for I supposed it was because of some haste of utterance in the Clerk and that these words "in the district" referred to the residence of the commissioner; but when I came to see from the printed bill and from its second reading that the design really is not only to make up juries composed of two political parties, but to ascertain which is the prominent party in the particular judicial district in the half, or third, or quarter of a State, and then have the juries selected in reference to that,—when I found that was so, I confess I felt renewed astonishment.

Even if you were to assume that the jury laws were defective, that they were greatly in need of amendment, the whole idea of setting up a contrivance by which politicians, selected political and partisan representatives are to be culled out and put in the jury-box, seems to me, and I must believe any time before this excitement arose it would have seemed to you, Mr. President, about the last mode of selecting a jury in the name of fairness and of reason. But when you come now to go further, and provide that not only the general political divisions of the country shall determine who shall and who shall not sit on juries, but that the particular political divisions, ephemeral as they may be, in a particular fragment or section of a State constituting a judicial district shall be observed in constituting a jury, if I were not employing terms which might seem too strong I should say that amazement is the sensation awakened by such a proposition.

Why, Mr. President, it is only a short time, a very short time in the life of a nation, since a great body of men in some of the States of the Union became not only excited but frenzied over matters of religious belief, and a party was organized called the know-nothing party—I do not know but that it had other names—and there were secret lodges; and in the nature and intent of the thing they were secret. There were many judicial districts in which not for one year only but for a longer time than that the organization to which I refer was, counted by numbers, the principal political organization opposing the one next stronger to it; and here we are to put upon the statute-book as a permanent statute a provision under which such a party as that rising again in the State of Maryland, in the State of New York, in a particular judicial district in the State of New York, is to select half the men to sit on all the juries; and that in the name of a fair and impartial jury trial; that excused, apologized for, or justified—if that is the better word—by the complaint that the present jury system is defective! And with the light of six or eight centuries of experience in selecting juries before us, a mode never resorted to before, a mode always condemned by courts, by statesmen, by jurists whether seeking for political or religious distinctions—that mode is commended to us!

Mr. President, one other illustration I venture to present to the honorable Senator from Connecticut. Look at the State of California; look at the principal political parties there. There was a party known as the anti-corporation or the anti-railway party; there is a party very numerous, very strong, very determined, known as the anti-Chinese party. Now does the Senator from Connecticut, lawyer as he is, and thinker as he is, and patriot as he is, mean to say (unless he is constrained by party fealty silently to say) that it is wise or justifiable or tolerable in the State of California to allow juries to be made up by taking the men who are actively against Chinese immigration or by taking men who are violently for or violently against the corporations whose interests have come to make up political issues in that State, and putting them on all juries indiscriminately to pass upon all questions arising?

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, it is not the intention of any member of the Committee on Appropriations on this side of the House to discuss at any length the principles involved in this bill, and I hope it is not the intention of any member of the Senate on this side, for we have discussed and discussed day after day and week after week the principles involved in this bill. I do not propose, therefore, to enter into any discussion of this bill; but a word or two with regard to a point that has been made by the Senator from New York, playfully to begin with—not so playfully I agree at the end—playfully when he spoke of the know-nothing party, because nobody knows better than my honorable friend from New York that the great body of the know-nothing party in every State in the Union was composed of one political party then called the whig party. The great body of the know-nothing party I say was composed of that party known as the whig party, and it did run all over this country until it struck the grand old democratic State of Virginia, and there that organization was burst in pieces. But it was the whig party in fact. I know very well how it was in my State, and I think I know how it was in other States. If this law had been in existence at that time, in the State of New York—not that this law will ever be exercised in the State of New York or the State of Connecticut, for they have other ways of drawing fair and impartial juries in both those States—but if this law or one similar had been in operation during the time of which my friend speaks, the know-nothing time, and the clerk of the court had been a democrat, then from the whig party in that State would have been the commissioner appointed because doubtless——

Mr. CONKLING. Will my friend pardon me a moment?

Mr. EATON. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. At one election the know-nothing party of which he has been speaking actually carried the State of New York; it was in a majority over either of the other parties. How can my honorable friend say that had the clerk been a democrat, the other commissioner would have been a whig and not a know-nothing?

Mr. EATON. My impression is that I am entirely right. There may be a single instance; but I think I cannot be mistaken about it, I hardly think it will be denied that the great body of the so-called know-nothing organization was composed of whigs.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Connecticut will allow me to say that I do not believe that was the state of affairs in the section of country in which I live, at that time.

Mr. EATON. The section of the country from which my distinguished friend comes, and the State which he represents upon this floor did not have perhaps at that time as many voters, either whigs or democrats, as it has now.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Still parties were organized.

Mr. EATON. I do not know that it was a State at that time. My impression is it was a Territory.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It was a Territory; but parties were organized there.

Mr. EATON. I am not talking about the organization of parties in a Territory, but I speak of what I know; I speak of Massachusetts, of Vermont, of Maine, of Connecticut, of Rhode Island, and measurably of New York, and I say under this bill there would have been no difficulty in finding a commissioner that was opposed to the clerk of the court in politics. That is the point about which we are talking. There can be, in my judgment, no difficulty on that one point. I am not now defending the principle. I am not now defending the principle of the bill, which was put through such a severe course by my friend from New York. I propose to vote for this bill. I propose to vote for this bill with the principle in it that those who draw the juries shall represent the two great political parties. I have in my poor way defended that once before, and I do not propose on a hot day to do it again. Once will answer. I should prefer to have jurors selected in some other way, I am frank to say. They will never be selected in this way in the State of my friend or mine, but there are sections of the Union where it is necessary to do something, and therefore this bill I shall vote for, though it embodies the principle which the Senator considers so objectionable.

Mr. WINDOM. Does not this bill apply to Connecticut and New York as well as every other State? Have my friends got up an exception for their benefit?

Mr. EATON. It will not apply to my State, because on lines 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27 of section 2, it is provided:

> But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State.

Mr. CONKLING. How does the Senator know that that exemption is to be made of Connecticut or New York?

Mr. EATON. I do not know it, but thank God I believe it. I have no idea that the judge of the district court of the State of Connecticut, whom I know right well, a gentleman, a lawyer, an honest man, and a republican—perhaps it is rare that we find all these things combined, [laughter]——

Mr. CONKLING. If you had put "republican" before the other words, we should have known they were all combined. [Laughter.]

Mr. EATON. I have no idea he will go into this machinery in order to draw jurors in the State of Connecticut; nor will judges in New York, nor does my friend apprehend that any district judge in the State of New York will adopt this system of drawing jurors.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask my friend from Connecticut in what way does the bill provide for payment to this commissioner for his services?

Mr. EATON. I suppose he will be paid.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to know where it is provided for.

Mr. EATON. You asked my opinion and therefore I was about to give it.

Mr. LOGAN. The reason I made the suggestion was not by way of any improper criticism.

Mr. EATON. I think that is provided for or will be by the other bill.

Mr. LOGAN. What other bill?

Mr. EATON. There is another bill coming here.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The first section, after providing specifically for various purposes, says:

And for all other necessary miscellaneous expenditures, $280,000.

Mr. EATON. I have no doubt the judge of the court would order the marshal to pay out of the fund which the marshal draws from the United States the expense to the commissioner as he would any officer for the serving of process.

Mr. LOGAN. I would suggest to the Senator that although there may be a fund there is no per diem fixed, no amount fixed by law, and certainly there must be some means by which the court shall ascertain what Congress intended should be paid. A per diem is fixed for jurors, but no per diem is fixed for these commissioners, and I do not see how the court is going to determine outside of the law as to the per diem that an officer of the court is to have if the law does not provide for it.

Mr. EATON. I have no doubt the same per diem will be allowed as is allowed for other United States commissioners, and it will be paid out of the miscellaneous fund which is here granted, $280,000.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely suggest this, not to find fault with the bill, but in order that it may be made certain. I understand, so far as fees are allowed to commissioners and marshals and other officers of the courts, that they are provided for in the law, and the court approves or disallows according to whether the accounts are made out in accordance with the statute. Hence my view of it was that unless there was some provision giving a fee or a salary or per diem in some way the court would not be justified in making an allowance out of the contingent fund where the law has not provided for it.

Mr. EATON. I have no doubt it is fully provided for.

Mr. LOGAN. I do have doubt.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It seems to me that there is a total misapprehension of the spirit and purpose, and of what I think will be the result, of the provision that has been under consideration. The idea seems to prevail that there is a provision here for the selection of jurors which will result in the selection of persons because of their political views and opinions. I think a fair construction of this provision makes it entirely free from any such objection. I think a fair construction of this provision will show that it is inserted for the purpose of preventing the selection of jurors because of their political views and opinions. What is the provision? That jurors shall be selected by two men, one the clerk of the court, and the other a commissioner of different political views. It seems to me that with an arrangement of that kind a jury would not be selected because of their political views, but the two united would select proper men from all political parties without reference especially to their political views. It would be a concurring of two men differing in politics in the selection of jurors; and therefore, instead of having a jury of one political party, or selected because of their political views, the effect would be that the jury selected by these two men different in politics would be a jury selected without reference to politics.

I do not intend to enter into discussion. The question has been amply discussed. I simply rose to express my view of the fair construction of this provision, that instead of being designed to promote or insure a political complexion to the juries the effect must necessarily be to have a fair jury selected, and selected without reference to their political views.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, if the Senator from Delaware will allow me, the whole purpose of this provision has been changed, because when it was first reported it provided that these men should put names in the box, alternating between these two political parties. The original report from the committee with reference to this jury provision—I have not got it before me, but I remember it perfectly well—was that jurors should be selected from the two different political parties. I speak of the bill as originally reported and originally agreed upon in caucus in the early part of the session. Afterward I know it was changed; and now the interpretation given by the Senator from Delaware shows that the whole purpose has been changed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir, the whole purpose of this bill is to accomplish what the original purpose of the other bill was. The purpose of this bill is to repeal a practice which has given a partisan character to the jury. We all know what has been the effect on the character of juries in certain sections of the country under existing legislation, that a certain class of men, the most intelligent class of men, have virtually been excluded from the jury-box. The object of this bill is to remedy that great wrong which has been perpetrated. That is the purpose of the bill, and we have not sought in doing that to give any political advantage to one party over another.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I say. Therefore the whole purpose has been changed, because the original purpose was to see to it that every jury selected should be alternately selected from the democrats and the republicans.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir, that was never the intention.

Mr. ALLISON. That was the exact language of the original bill reported from the caucus.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That was never advocated by any man on this floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I will get the other bill and see.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Even if that was the case, I do not know that the Senator from Iowa ought specially to object to it. Why should he object to it because a jury is to be composed of an equal number of men from the two political parties? It certainly would be as fair a jury as where a jury is selected all of one political party.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not objecting to it at all; I am merely stating that, as I understand the Senator from Delaware now, the whole purpose of this jury clause has been changed from what it was a few weeks ago.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator misapprehends the purpose of the original bill. The purpose of the original bill was the same as of this bill. It may have differed a little in phraseology, but the purpose was to secure fair juries; the purpose was to repeal laws which operated to the exclusion of fair juries. That was the object and purpose of the original measure. I do not know that any valid objection against this provision of the bill can be or has been made.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, there has been a good deal of criticism as to the features of this bill, and the Senator from Iowa has just made charges against the original bill. That Senator knows as well as every other intelligent gentleman knows, that it is exceedingly difficult to regulate the minutiæ of the drawing of juries, or any other matter where there is much detail, so as to have it all suitable to everybody. The purpose of the original bill, as I understood it, and as I have no doubt it was, and as is also the purpose of this measure, is to prevent political juries. This measure does not introduce politics into the court-room or into the jury-box further than the mere fact of appointing a commissioner of a political party opposite to the party to which the clerk of the court belongs, and the clerk and the commissioner are to put alternately a name into the box.

The Senator from Iowa seems to take it for granted that the bill requires each commissioner and clerk to select a member of his own party. That is not a just construction; it is in express violation of the language of the bill itself. The introduction of the principle of politics, as far as the commissioners may be concerned, is simply to prevent political juries and to keep politics out of the courts. If it may be regarded that it is an evil to appoint a commissioner under the phraseology of this bill, it is a wrong that good may come of it; because it is a universal complaint (and I have no doubt of the truth of it in large portions of the country) that the juries in the United States courts are all now of a political character, and they are almost all of them of one political party. That is the complaint that comes up from all sources in various States of the Union. I do not know the fact, but I believe it.

With a view to remedy that and to prevent the introduction of politics into the jury-box, it is provided that a commissioner shall act with the clerk and that they shall not select the jurors all of one party. Instead of giving the bill a fair construction and making its language prominent, Senators undertake to say that it is introducing politics, when the bill as proposed now expressly provides that the jurors shall be selected "without reference to political affiliations" or bias. If that is true, what else could be said? We find an evil in the country; at least we believe it exists; complaint assures us it exists; and with a view to remedy that, and as probably the only fair and just remedy, the only efficient remedy that can be applied, we put a commissioner in association with the clerk to provide that they shall make a selection of good men qualified to serve upon the juries of the country, and that they shall make those selections without reference to political party or bias in any way whatever. It will be as much the duty of the clerk or of the commissioner to select a jury of the party to which he does not belong as of the party to which he does belong, and such is almost the express language of the bill which is now before the Senate.

Therefore, I think Senators ought not to complain or follow the lead of the distinguished Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] who proposes to make it appear that it is introducing politics into the jury-box, when in truth the whole purpose and language of the proposed law is that you shall exclude politics from the jury-box. Let the language of the bill that is proposed to be matured into a law have its place; give it the construction to which it is entitled; and there can be no doubt about the object of the measure; and such was the object of the original bill passed through this body some time since. The object was that we should not have politics in the jury-box, and with a view to prevent that you are compelled to consider the political affinities of the clerk and the commissioner, and compel them by power of law to select jurors without regard to party bias or party organization.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator from Alabama a question?
Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir.
Mr. CONKLING. Was I right or wrong in understanding the Senator a few moments ago to say that in Alabama juries have been composed almost wholly of one political party?
Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know what the Senator understood me to say; I never said a word about Alabama at all.
Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator's pardon; I was diverted for a moment in conversation with a Senator, and another Senator understood the Senator from Alabama to refer to his own State.
Mr. HOUSTON. I did not say a word about Alabama.
Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Senator, then, has it been true in Alabama that juries have been composed chiefly of one political party?
Mr. HOUSTON. That is the complaint that reaches us from almost all the United States courts in the State.
Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire to which party, according to these complaints, the jurors belong?
Mr. HOUSTON. To the republican party.
Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator one other question for information?
Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir.
Mr. CONKLING. Are the jury laws of Alabama general laws and uniform throughout the State?
Mr. HOUSTON. I think so.
Mr. CONKLING. There are no special jury laws applicable to particular sections more than to others?
Mr. HOUSTON. I think not.
Mr. CONKLING. I have no doubt the Senator knows; and I apply to him supposing that he does know.
Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss at length the provisions of this bill, but merely to express my disapprobation of the principle recognized and incorporated as one of the provisions of this bill, that which makes partisans of officers connected with the administration of justice. It seems to me that this is the first step to corrupting the administration of justice in this country. This bill makes a requisite qualification of these officers that they shall belong to different political organizations. It gives them notice that they are appointed to these positions, at least so far as the commissioners are concerned, because they are opponents in politics to the clerk of the court in the district for which a commissioner is appointed. It advertises to these men that they are to select according to their partisan opinions the persons who are to constitute the jurors of the courts of which they are officers. The Senator from Alabama is mistaken in saying that this measure, by any of its provisions, secures impartiality in the selection of juries. The only provision affecting that question is the proviso at the conclusion of the second section:

Provided, That no citizen, possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law, shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Notwithstanding that, the commissioner is to be appointed because he is of opposite politics to the clerk, and he is to be appointed for the specific purpose of selecting jurors. What will these men understand from their appointment under this proposed law? What will the clerks and commissioners regard as their duty when placed in their position to select jurors to serve in the court of which they are officers? That they are put there for a political purpose, that they are put there for the purpose of securing upon the jury persons of opposite politics, and each one of them will select according to his preferences and political opinions. Therefore the jurors to serve in the United States courts are to be politicians; they are to come into the jury-box with notice that they are selected as partisans. These officers placed there for the selection of juries will understand that they are to select persons belonging to their own party, and where any political question is involved as to the parties to a suit or any question involving considerations of a political character in the remotest degree, the jurors will partake in their sympathies with the shades of opinion represented by the respective sides engaged in the litigation. You cannot exclude from the court political partisan questions so that the jurors will be unaffected by them if this principle is acted upon.

I have never seen any step in any court in this direction before, and I regard it as unsafe to every citizen. I regard it as a violation of the very first principles of the administration of justice, because introducing these partisan feelings tends to destroy all impartiality.

This bill provides that the commissioner "shall be a citizen of good standing residing in the district in which such court is held, and a well-known member of the principal political party in the district in which the court is held opposing that to which the clerk may belong." I submit to the Senator from Connecticut having charge of this bill that there is an ambiguity arising out of this language which it seems to me it would be necessary to correct; that is, with reference to whether it is a judicial district or a congressional district. The court will of course sit within a State divided into congressional districts. The bill does not specify whether the commissioner shall reside within the congressional district or the judicial district. There is no designation of the character of the district; and there should be such a designation. The districts recognized by the statutes of the United States as affecting the jurisdiction of the courts are judicial districts; but the districts electing members of Congress are recognized of course by the courts of the United States; and the judge required to perform this duty would not be able to determine whether it is the congressional district or the judicial district which is to determine the residence of the commissioner.

Mr. EATON. I hardly think the criticism of my friend will stand. The bill does not mean congressional districts; it does not mean school districts; it means just exactly what it says. We are making a law with regard to drawing jurors for the courts of the United States; and, therefore, without amplification at all, it refers most undoubtedly to the district over which the judge presides.
Mr. CONKLING. How with a circuit judge? He presides over several districts.
Mr. EATON. He does not at one time preside over more than one district.
Mr. CONKLING. Oh, yes he does.
Mr. EATON. Not at one time. When he is holding court he is presiding over but one district. When he is holding a court in the southern district of New York, or the eastern or the northern district, he will be governed by this statute with regard to the district in which he is holding court.
Mr. ALLISON. I should like just here to ask the Senator from Connecticut how he understands this bill with reference to these districts? We have a judicial district in my State and a district court in that State. We have also in the same district a circuit court. Do I understand from this bill that there must be three hundred names put in a box for the district court and three hundred other names put in a box for the circuit court, and a commissioner of a different political party selected for each of these courts? Is that the idea?
Mr. EATON. How many districts have you in your State?
Mr. ALLISON. One.
Mr. EATON. Very well, then there is but one district.
Mr. ALLISON. There is but one district; but we have two courts; we have a circuit court and a district court. The bill provides that the judge of the court shall appoint the commissioners. Is it the circuit judge who is to appoint the commissioner, or is it the district judge who is to appoint him?
Mr. EATON. Really, if my friend addresses his inquiry to me——
Mr. ALLISON. I do.
Mr. EATON. It seems to me with all kindness that this is carping. Let me suggest that the bill provides that the "names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court." The clerk of the court is the clerk of both courts, I apprehend.
Mr. ALLISON. Not at all. That is very different. In my State we have a clerk of the district court and a clerk of the circuit court.
Mr. EATON. It is not so in my State; there is but one clerk there.
Mr. McMILLAN. There are two clerks in my State.
Mr. CONKLING. The clerks are different in each district in the State of New York.
Mr. EATON. Undoubtedly it is so if my friend says so; but I apprehend there will be no trouble or difficulty.
Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to his colleague?
Mr. EATON. Not until I answer the question of my friend from Iowa, and then I will yield with a great deal of pleasure. A circuit judge holds a court in any district of the United States, I do not care where it may be, whether in Iowa, Connecticut, or New York, where this law is to be in force. When jurors are drawn and placed in the box for the trial of causes in the United States courts, I apprehend that they will answer either in the district court or the circuit court.
Mr. PLATT. I simply desire to remind my colleague that until recently the clerk of the circuit court and the clerk of the district court had been different persons in Connecticut.
Mr. EATON. I know it was so, but it is not the case now.
Mr. ALLISON. This provision reads, "the clerk of such court, and a commissioner to be appointed by the judge thereof." Of course in the case of a district court the district judge must appoint a commissioner; in the case of a circuit court, it seems to me, the circuit judge must appoint a commissioner. Otherwise you would get into interminable confusion, because it happens in my State that the clerk of the circuit court is a republican, and the clerk of the district court is a democrat. So, also, with the judges; the circuit judge is a republican and the district judge is a democrat. It seems to me that in States like Iowa where we have these two courts running at different places and at different times, with two different judges, unless the bill is made more specific there will be very great confusion in the selection of the jurors.
Mr. CONKLING. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill. I move to strike out the third section.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.
Mr. CONKLING. On that I should like the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. WHYTE. Is that the section which requires a report of disbursements by the Attorney-General?
Mr. ALLISON, (to Mr. CONKLING.) You mean the second section.
Mr. CONKLING. My motion is right according to the print of the bill which I have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills are printed differently.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to strike out all the provisions about the jury clause which in the bill in my hand is section 3.

Mr. EATON. It is section 2 of this bill, section 3 of the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is section 2 of the bill under consideration.

Mr. CONKLING. I acted on the bill before me. It is section 2, and I should like if the Chair will indulge me a moment to see the correct print of the bill.

Mr. WHYTE. "June 26, 1879," is the last one.

Mr. ALLISON. House bill No. 2381.

Mr. CONKLING. Now I have the print on which we are acting; I see it is section 2. I move to strike out that section, and before the vote is taken I wish, in a few words, to assign my reasons for the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved to strike out section 2 of the bill, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The section will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 2 of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the per diem pay of each juror, grand or petit, in any court of the United States, shall be $2; and that the last clause of section 800 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which refers to the State of Pennsylvania, and sections 801, 820, and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are hereby repealed; and that all such jurors, grand and petit, including those summoned during the session of the court, shall be publicly drawn from a box containing, at the time of each drawing, the names of not less than three hundred persons, possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing, residing in the district in which such court is held, and a well-known member of the principal political party in the district in which the court is held opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately, without reference to party affiliations, until the whole number required shall be placed therein. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State; and no person shall serve as a petit juror more than one term in any one year, and all juries to serve in courts after the passage of this act shall be drawn in conformity herewith: Provided, That no citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I am in favor of every part of this bill which makes appropriations to carry on the Government. Although several subjects of needed appropriation are omitted, still as far as the appropriations go, I am for the bill; and, "with all its imperfections on its head," I do not wish to delay for one moment needlessly the final action of the Senate on the bill. I am opposed to the section I have moved to strike out, the section which relates in various ways to the matter of juries. My reasons of opposition to that section are more numerous than I shall state to-day. I infer from a remark made by the honorable Senator from Connecticut that I have on some previous occasion stated objections to this bill. Knowing the tenacity of recollection of the Senator, how closely he observes the business of the Senate, I must conclude that he is right in that respect. I have therefore no disposition to bring in my own recollection either to confirm or to dispute his. By as much as I have heretofore attempted to state reasons against this legislation, I shall be brief in stating reasons now.

I am opposed, in the first place, to making regular annual appropriation bills the vehicles for general legislation. I am opposed to the whole business of attempting to do by riders on an appropriation bill that which, if done at all, should be done otherwise. Much more, however, am I opposed to making conditions, terms, on which a majority in either House will allow appropriations to take place. I am most emphatically opposed, so much opposed that I will never yield assent tacitly or otherwise, for one, to the idea that any majority or combination in this Government shall be tolerated in saying that they will stop the wheels of Government, refuse and withhold appropriations, unless they are permitted as the condition of allowing, to prostrate, change, or negative existing laws. I believe the principle, if it be a principle,—and it is not—the dogma, (for such it is) pernicious and utterly indefensible. It constitutes a reason for opposition to what is proposed now.

Again, I am opposed to overthrowing at one swoop several of the most ancient laws of the Republic, laws enacted by men as wise as we are, some of them enacted by the very men who framed the Constitution, and which have received the support, the approval, and the respect of more than three generations. Further, I am opposed to striking down the modes, the only modes, in which a grand or petit jury can in instances of political prosecutions and occasions be purged of the men violently, vehemently biased on one side of the issue which enters into consideration.

That constitutes a reason for opposing this section, because in the respect of which I now speak its effect is twofold: First, it repeals a section of the statutes which stands there by an oversight, which should be repealed, which the Senate voted to repeal, passed a bill to repeal, which bill went to the House, then as now democratic, and lay not only neglected but refused for seventy-four legislative days. It repeals that section which for some reason has been saved up in order that it might add a grain, act as a make-weight, in that budget of grievances which we have heard so often ought to be redressed.

If that were the only section at which it strikes, no objection would come from me; but in the second place it repeals another and different section, the only one in virtue of which the court in its discretion, for cause shown in open court, may require that a jury shall be made up of men unbiased, unheated, uncommitted, touching the questions called political,—miscalled; they would be better known by names which might be deemed offensive here, but questions inwrought in the history, and the most stormy passages as well as the most bloody passages in the history of recent years. I am opposed to this section because it does that.

Again, I am opposed to it because it seeks to turn the jury-box into a political caucus. Disguise it as you may, cover it up with phrases as you may, the purpose, as the Senator from Connecticut having charge of this bill admitted, (because candor compelled him to admit and no obligation to party compelled him to express his approval of it either,) is to introduce into the jury-box a counterpoise and offset of partisan consideration.

That, Mr. President, has heretofore been proposed only to be denounced. It has been suggested only to receive the abhorrent opposition of all the writers, of all the historians, of all the judges, of all the statesmen whose words have come to us and been received as weighty touching such things. To keep religious and sectarian passion and bigotry, to keep political and partisan bias and bigotry out of the jury-box, has ever till now been considered in the forefront of needs and just requirements. I am opposed to this section because of the offense it does in this regard against reason and experience.

Mr. President, there are one or two questions which I wish to submit to the Senator from Connecticut, either for an answer if he will favor me with an answer, or for such consideration without answer from him as he may think they deserve. Certain lines of this bill provide:

That all such jurors, grand and petit, including those summoned during the session of the court, shall be publicly drawn from a box containing, at the time of each drawing, the names of not less than three hundred persons.

I stop there. Although that is not the whole of the ground of objection at that point, I stop there. Suppose it turns out during a trial, especially a criminal trial, and still more especially a trial for a capital offense, because the honorable Senator will remember that the courts have decided in favor of certain rigorous exactions touching a jury in capital cases which have never been applied in other cases—suppose in a capital case it turns out that when the jury in that case was drawn there were not three hundred names in the box, I inquire of the Senator whether that fact would not be fatal to a verdict?

Mr. EATON. I do not care to be drawn into a discussion——

Mr. CONKLING. It will not be long.

Mr. EATON. I do not care to be drawn into a short discussion, I shall not go into a discussion, as to questions of criminal law that may be supposed to be involved. My friend asks, suppose there should be less than three hundred names in the box? The supposition is not admissible. Were my friend the judge of a court and were I the clerk of the court and were my friend sitting near me [Mr. JONES, of Florida] the commissioner, we should know that there were three hundred names in the box before we proceeded to draw therefrom. Therefore, in my judgment, the question is hardly admissible. If it were admissible, at once my friend would perceive it would require a somewhat thoughtful argument in order to meet the question, for it is a wide question which is put to me.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I was not aware, even after listening to the honorable Senator from Connecticut, that a wide inquiry is needed to answer the question I put to him. The honorable Senator will see, if he scans this bill at all, that instead of this being an impossible case, it is a case so probable that for aught I see it is certain to occur. My friend smiles. Let me suggest the case to him and see whether he will smile. It always occurs in practice at a nisi prius court that more than one jury is impaneled at the same time. Why does that occur? Because when one cause has been tried the jury retires to consult and agree if it can agree upon its verdict. The court does not wait until that jury has come in with a verdict, before proceeding to draw another jury, but another jury is drawn immediately. Now here is a provision that the box shall contain three hundred names, "which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed," &c., "and that all such jurors, grand and petit, including those summoned during the session of the court, shall be publicly drawn from a box, containing, at the time of each drawing, the name of not less than three hundred persons."

Are the commissioner and the clerk to put three hundred names in the box? So we have all understood until now. If they are, how are there to be three hundred names in the box when each drawing takes place? Are they to put more than three hundred names in the box? If so, they are to fill the box ad libitum. In one district there may be three hundred, in another three thousand, if that is what the Senator means. Therefore, unless he is driven to that extreme of construction, I think it would hardly do for him to say to me that such a case as I supposed could not happen. I respectfully say to the Senator that such a case as I supposed can happen unless there is something in this bill which I have not been able to understand.

But, Mr. President, look again. Is it true, and does the Senator mean, that every time a jury is to be drawn, three or four times a day, the court is to have three hundred bits of paper counted over in this box to ascertain that there are three hundred there? The Senator said if he were clerk of the court, and his friend from Florida were commissioner, and somebody else,—I do not know but he assigned me a place in the cast——

Mr. EATON. At the head of the court.

Mr. CONKLING. I bow in humility and thankfulness to the honorable Senator for assigning me to a place in such a distinguished selection of dramatis personæ; but even with the honorable Senator from Connecticut there, is he to stop every time a jury is drawn and have a public ceremony of counting to find out if there are the names of three hundred men in the box? Therefore I think the honorable Senator will see I am not roving in the field of imagination; I am not, as he said of another Senator a moment ago, carping; I am not wandering far and wide to find objections, when I ask him to state to me how it is that three hundred names are certainly, or even probably, to be found in the box at each drawing, and to state to me whether, if they are not there, that would vitiate a verdict, because I am prepared, without receiving information from that Senator, to say that if it would vitiate a verdict at any stage of the proceedings, however early, it would vitiate a verdict to the end. That is an objection which would never be waived, and the court of last resort in the State of New York has held that an objection of the same nature cannot be waived, but certainly it would not be waived by not taking advantage of it by a preliminary motion.

Mr. President, when the honorable Senator is not diverted I want his attention to another inquiry; and before leaving this point perhaps I ought to leave with it my acknowledgment for the very full, satisfactory, and frank disclosure of his views which the honorable Senator has made. I bring to his attention another thing in the hope that he may be equally willing and equally copious in his explanations. The bill provides that every jury shall be drawn from a box, as I have said, in which there are to be three hundred names; and it provides that those names shall be put there by the clerk of the court and a commissioner appointed in a certain way, which commissioner shall be of the principal political party opposed to the clerk, of the district. The honorable Senator said in answer to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] that that means the judicial district. I inquire of the Senator, suppose it turned out in a given case that that did not happen; suppose the commissioner and the clerk were of the same politics, if the clerk had any, or the commissioner were selected from a party which was not of the principal opposing political party, will the Senator tell me whether under this bill a jury so drawn would or would not be a valid jury, whether a challenge to the array would lie, and whether the proceedings which took place before a jury drawn without the observance of all these requirements would be defective or not? Perhaps the honorable Senator will say that that would cover a wide field of discussion. I want no long discussion about this measure. I assure the honorable Senator from Connecticut that I am not going to consume one moment unnecessarily in the discussion of this bill, nor many moments, necessarily or otherwise; but as we go along, as the bill is in the hands of a competent lawyer, I should like to know what his understanding is upon questions of this sort, which it seems to me are grave questions. If they are questions at all, they stand in the front of the bill, they lie at the threshold of the proceeding; we are bound to take notice of them; and I think it will hardly do for the honorable Senator to say, "Well, in the first place, such things are not likely to happen, and in the next place, if they do I do not wish to express any opinion about the case. I will let it go, as I let it go in the case of a bill which I have already said myself on the floor of the Senate is a rough bill." I think the Senator used that very word or its equivalent. Now, I submit to him that a bill which deserves to be characterized in that way by him is one that should be looked at far enough to see whether in addition to the vicious and as I think unseemly principle which it introduces, it is likely to breed litigation, to introduce confusion, to lead to all sorts of harm and injury to private litigants; and we are bound to make inquiries such as these even in these high party times, in which the trial by jury has become a shuttlecock to be knocked about in a game of political battledoor.

My honorable friend makes no answer. I suppose he thinks it is not worth while to make one. If he were in a more communicative mood, I could ask him several other such questions, touching which with my poor apprehension I entertain the gravest doubt. Without reference to party politics, supposing myself as far as that is possible a democrat for the moment, if the questions which I addressed to the honorable Senator were addressed to me, I do not believe that my party faith, however enthusiastic it might be, would enable me to answer clearly in favor of this bill. I think that in its details, in its omissions and in its provisions, apart from the fallacy on which it is based, it is very defective, a very unfit bill to go into the statutes, even if by some bill you were going to do the thing which it is intended to do.

Keeping my promise to the honorable Senator not to consume much time, I want before taking my seat to draw attention for a moment to another topic. The other day one of the Senators from Alabama, I think the Senator now on my left [Mr. MORGAN] discoursed somewhat upon the condition of juries in the State of Alabama, and to-day the other Senator from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] stated, if I understood him aright, that the laws under which juries are drawn in Alabama are general laws, applicable alike to all parts of the State, and that there are no special laws in Alabama under which juries are drawn. The Senator to whom I first adverted made mention with some particularity of statement, and some production of papers, of affidavits possibly, and the like, of the doings of the marshal of Alabama. Since that time I have received from the marshal a communication, the more material parts of which I propose to read to the Senate, not only because it seems to be the wish of the writer that they should be read, but because of the contribution which this letter makes to the Senate's stock of information. We have heard a great deal of railing accusation about juries; we have not heard much particularity of specification. I notice that most of the Senators who deal in this are more eloquent and apparently more largely instructed touching the grievance of other States than their own, and I have noticed that it usually happens that when we are able to locate these accusations, to find the venue somewhere, there comes some statement or contradiction which is very damaging to the effect which they were intended to produce. This marshal who writes to me from Alabama on the 23d of June, 1879, writes thus:

> DEAR SIR: During the recent debate in the Senate on the bill making appropriations for certain judicial expenses, Senator MORGAN, of Alabama, in a speech advocating the passage of said bill, read certain affidavits and made certain statements of pretended facts with reference to the administration of justice in the Federal courts of this State. The statements and affidavits were submitted by the Senator for the purpose of showing that the individual now holding the office of United States marshal for the southern and middle districts of Alabama is a bad and unscrupulous person, and that it is unwise to continue in his hands the selection in part of Federal jurors in the courts of which he is marshal as is now provided by the laws of the United States and the rules of said courts.

He then follows with some statement indicative of his sense of injustice in not receiving what is done to him in this respect, and comes to what pertains more immediately to the subject before the Senate, and I pass on to that:

> I will simply say that the affidavits read by the Senator were presented by him to the Department of Justice, some of them more than two years ago, in support of an application for my removal, and that the charges in them contained were investigated by an agent of that Department, at that time an entire stranger to me and then and now enjoying the entire confidence of the Department, and said agent pronounced them to be false in every particular.
>
> They were afterward submitted by Senator MORGAN to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, as a reason for the confirmation of a gentleman who had been nominated by the President to succeed me in the office of marshal, and they were at that time fully and completely refuted by evidence submitted to the committee in my behalf. They are now revamped and made to do duty in open Senate notwithstanding the conclusive refutation which they have twice received. One of the affidavits is from a person named Robinson living in the city of Mobile. Robinson is the man who made an affidavit pretending to know of certain corrupt transactions connected with the election of Senator Spencer to the Senate in 1872, and thereby induced Senator MORGAN to have him summoned to Washington at the expense of the Government to testify against Senator Spencer, and who upon being examined by Mr. MORGAN denied absolutely every fact stated in his preliminary affidavit. I cannot believe the Senator credited the statements made against me by Robinson at the time.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> It was one of the charges by Senator MORGAN from which I received a complete vindication as the result of the investigation by the Department of Justice and by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

Now I come to what I want more especially to bring to the notice of Senators, and especially the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] and the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] both of whom I observe at this moment are deeply interested in this question.

> That jurors were improperly selected in the courts of the United States of which I was the marshal. The charge is unfounded now as it was then proved to be. By the rules of court and in compliance with the Statutes of the United States the methods for the selection of jurors in the Federal courts for Alabama are made to conform substantially to those prescribed by the laws of the State for the State courts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Will the Senator give way to receive a message from the House of Representatives?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriations to pay the fees of United States marshals and their general deputies; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions:

A bill (H. R. No. 2002) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 102) authorizing a survey of the Mississippi River near Lake Concordia, Louisiana, and Cowpen Bend, Mississippi; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 114) donating granite blocks to Mower Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Orleans, Louisiana.

JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2381) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses for the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask my friend from New York to give way a moment for the purpose of having the bill which has just come from the House read twice and referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator frem West Virginia?

Mr. CONKLING. Suppose the Senator allows the bill to lie for a few minutes so that we may know what it is. I am going to conclude presently, and I would be glad for one to look at it. I have no purpose to interpose any delay, but I would like to know what the bill is; in the mean time I will finish this letter. The writer has stated that in Alabama by the rules of the court the mode of drawing juries is made, as near as possible the mode of drawing State juries. He says:

I refer to the general laws of the State providing for the selection of jurors; but there are special laws—

To this I beg the attention of the Senator from Alabama farthest from me, [Mr. HOUSTON;] it was the point of my inquiry this morning—but there are special laws upon this subject applicable to particular locations which are worthy of attention, laws which received the official sanction of one of the Senators from Alabama, who was then governor of the State—

I infer that was the distinguished Senator more immediately in front of me, [Mr. HOUSTON]— and which have not been condemned by the other Senator so far as we are informed by any of his public utterances.

The general laws of the State impose the duty of selecting jurors upon the probate judges, sheriffs, and clerks of the several counties, who are to meet biennially for the purpose. Intending to conform as nearly as possible to the State laws, the United States circuit court has provided by rules that the marshal, the clerk, and the probate judge of the county where court is held shall meet biennially and select five hundred persons whose names are to be put in a box and drawn from for the succeeding two years. It is impossible to compare the juries in the State and Federal courts in this State and not see that the balance of fairness is largely on the side of the Federal courts. In many counties in the State—

I am reading this especially for the honorable Senator from Kentucky, the Senator so near me [Mr. BECK,] and I beg the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] not to distract his attention.

Mr. PENDLETON. I was directing it.

Mr. CONKLING. I am obliged to my friend for conspiring with me to compel the Senator from Kentucky to listen to me, because the Senator from Kentucky recently in one of those outbursts of democratic eloquence wherewithal he does not only startle but electrify the Senate now and again, was just full of emotion, of righteous and virtuous indignation, when he thought how these juries are drawn, especially in the South, how republicans sit on them, and how democrats do not. Therefore, hoping to temper this great grievance more to his tender endurance than it has been tempered before, I commend to him this statement:

In many counties in the State the republicans outnumber the democrats more than five to one, and yet it is a rare thing to see a republican on the grand or petit juries in those counties.

The special laws to which I have referred apply only to those counties in the State in which republicans fill the offices of probate judge, sheriff, and clerk of the court, or a majority of them. They provide for the appointment by the governor of five persons for each of said counties to be known as jury commissioners, who are charged with the duty of selecting jurors for the courts of their several counties. This law does not apply to a single county in which the democrats had possession of the local offices at the time of its passage, and no concealment of the fact that it was intended to deprive the republican county officers of the power of selecting republican citizens of the several counties as jurors was attempted by the supporters of the bill inside or outside of the legislative halls of the State.

The character of this partisan act has only been surpassed once in the history of misrule in Alabama, and that was when the last Legislature passed an act providing that ballots cast at elections in Alabama should no longer be numbered, in order, as it was stated by Senators and Representatives, that the Federal courts should be unable to procure evidence for the indictment of officers of election and persons who should violate the election laws of the United States at Federal elections.

The reason for the passage of the special jury laws and the effect of their operation in excluding republicans and colored men from the jury-box in the State courts will be found stated (under the appropriate head of "Operation of the Election Laws") on page——

And so on, of the report to which he refers.

A reference to these pages will show the evidence upon which the conclusion of the committee was in part based.

I can say truthfully for the special jury laws referred to, that, while apparently divergent from the general system prevailing in the State, and while providing one system for democratic counties and another for republican counties, that in reality they secure uniformity—uniformity in both republican and democratic counties—as to the color and political predilections of those summoned as jurors.

An appreciation of the value of your time warns me to bring this letter to a conclusion. My apology for addressing you must be that the one hundred thousand republicans of Alabama are without a representative in either branch of Congress.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE TURNER.

Mr. President, I know how that shocks the Senator from Kentucky——

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. An inquiry was propounded to me by the Senator from New York which I understood to apply to the mode of selecting jurors for the United States courts. I did not know that he was asking as to the uniformity or the want of it in the obtaining of jurors in the State courts. Hence I answered as I did. I thought he applied his question to the United States courts.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I never feel any certainty that I am not unfortunate and confused in expressing myself, and therefore I have no right to be surprised at my failure to make known to the honorable Senator from Alabama the point of my inquiry. I asked him, as I supposed, as I intended, pointedly whether the jury law or the laws under which juries were drawn in Alabama were uniform throughout the State, or whether there were special laws applicable to some parts of the State and not to others. I supposed that that language was such as to exclude the inference that I was inquiring about the statutes of the United States, which are of course the same for all parts of Alabama and for other States as well.

Mr. HOUSTON. The discussion between the Senator from New York and myself had been exclusively in relation to the jurors in the United States courts; nothing at all had been said between us in regard to the jurors in the State courts; and therefore I had no others in mind. Of course the natural conclusion to which any mind would arrive, I think, was that the question propounded by the Senator related to the matter about which he and I had been talking. I never supposed he was asking about the mode of obtaining jurors in the courts of the State.

Mr. CONKLING. If the honorable Senator will allow me, I have already assumed all the blame, if blame there is, or carelessness, if carelessness there was, in not making myself sufficiently understood; and now, if the honorable Senator from Alabama will indulge me, I should like to repeat in another form the question which he misunderstood. I should like to inquire of him whether it is true that laws do exist in the State of Alabama for the drawing of juries under which laws in certain counties they are drawn in one way and in the residue of the State in another way?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, there is a law in the State of Alabama under which the mode of drawing jurors in a few counties, probably not amounting to half a dozen, is changed from the general mode, and the drawing is done by a body of commissioners appointed by the governor, from names put in the box.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator refer now to an act which was passed during the administration as governor of the Senator himself?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do.

Mr. CONKLING. It is to that that I referred. Now may I ask the Senator in how many counties the sheriff, the probate judge, and the clerk are allowed to draw the juries in Alabama?

Mr. HOUSTON. They are allowed to draw the juries in all the counties in the State except the few included in that bill, I do not think amounting to half a dozen, probably three or four, very few. The others, as I now remember, are uniform, drawn under the same method.

Mr. CONKLING. Drawn under laws which have existed a long time, I suppose?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir, and the jurors in the county to which reference is now made are drawn by a commission appointed by the governor. I appointed the commission in each of those counties, and in the appointment of nearly all of them—I am not sure as to all—I sought to divide the commissioners between the parties. I appointed a majority of democrats, and I appointed republicans; I do not remember exactly as to the various counties how many of each.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the honorable Senator state to me how many commissioners there are in a county?

Mr. HOUSTON. My recollection is five.

Mr. CONKLING. Five in a county. Will the honorable Senator name to me any one of those counties in which the commissioners are not democratic in majority?

Mr. HOUSTON. In all the democrats have a majority. I appointed a majority of democrats in all of them, and in several of them—I do not remember now whether in all or not—I appointed some republicans on each commission; but I appointed a majority of democrats.

Mr. CONKLING. Well, Mr. President, I am very glad to have Mr. Turner corroborated by the Senator so as to show that he had not fallen into any error. The case, then, as I understand it, is this: Alabama had jury laws like other States, applicable there as elsewhere to all counties regardless of political persuasion or locality. During the administration of the honorable Senator as governor an act was passed or acts were passed applicable to some and not to other counties, changing as to them the mode of drawing jurors. In all the counties except those specified, the probate judge, the sheriff, and the clerk did the drawing of the juries, or more correctly speaking selected, those from whom juries were to be drawn. In these counties thus picked out and segregated, the act declared that the governor should appoint in each five commissioners, and that they, and not these ancient and customary officers, should select those from whom the juries were to be drawn; and as this marshal states, and as I have other evidence in my hand to show, the counties thus selected and carved out were republican counties. They were counties in which the regular jury officers were republican in politics; and therefore they were selected and therefore the always-prevailing mode was overthrown, and therefore in those counties the selection of juries was committed to commissioners; and now the honorable Senator from Alabama says he has no doubt that in all those counties he made a majority of the commissioners democratic although he thinks that in some of them he gave the republicans a representation on the minority of the commission; but if I understand him aright, his recollection is not so distinct to that point that he can trust it to be positive.

Mr. HOUSTON. As to the number.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator thinks that he did not exclude in all the counties republicans altogether, that he did not make the commissioners unanimously democratic, but he knows that in every one of the counties he did make a democratic commission so that the work was just as effectually done if there was one republican permitted to participate as if there was no republican at all. Take it so. Now I want to read to the Senate from the report of one of its committees something to show the workings of this system, this system prevailing and set up in a State the product of a sentiment which finds its expression here in the attempt to overthrow jury laws a century old and put in their place a contrivance for the selection of political strikers and political hacks on the one side and the other to constitute juries. I read now first from the testimony of a sheriff in Alabama:

Question. As sheriff of the county you, with the clerk of the circuit court, select juries?

Answer. Yes, I do.

Q. And it has been your duty to select the juries since you became sheriff in 1874?

A. It has been that way ever since I knew anything about it. It has been the duty of the sheriff, the clerk, and the judge of probate.

Q. How did you select juries; that is to say, as the result of your selection, what proportion of colored men and what proportion of white men were put upon the juries, and also what proportion of those were democrats and what republicans?

A. Very few of them are colored men, and there are but few white republicans in that county. The juries have almost, in the main, been made up of democrats—both the grand and petit juries.

Q. But you have always had a few republicans?

A. We have always had from one to three, and sometimes as high as four, colored men on a jury.

Q. Do you think you ever had more than that?

A. I do not remember that we ever had, since I have been sheriff, more than four colored men on a jury.

* * * * * * *

Q. Did you ever in any way hear complaints on the part of lawyers and litigants of the court, or of any of the officers of the court, of the character of the juries whom you selected?

A. I have heard that one or two men complained somewhat, but the mass of the people there, since I have been sheriff, are satisfied. My predecessor was a democrat, but the mass of the people and lawyers generally have said, and told me, and I have heard it from various sources, that I, though a republican sheriff, have given them better and more competent juries than my predecessors have done. I have been complimented upon that by men who have been very bitterly opposed to me, and who charged even that if I were made sheriff of the county I would put inefficient juries upon them.

Q. In selecting colored men for jurors, what class of colored men do you select?

A. We place into this box the names of those who are thought competent to discharge the duties fairly and impartially—only such colored men as we believed to be of that class, and there are but very few, I must say—so that the proportion was about 4 to 1.

Now I pass on to read about one of these counties.

Mr. HOUSTON. What was the name of that sheriff and the county that the Senator has been reading from?

Mr. CONKLING. Unless the Senator wishes it now, I will not give it at this moment, because I shall have to turn back several pages to find it, but I will do it anon or hand the Senator the book to do it for himself if that will be equally agreeable to him.

Mr. HOUSTON. Go ahead.

Mr. CONKLING. I come now to a county which is named on the page from which I read, Bullock County, I infer that it was one of these particular counties selected by this special bill, in which the sheriff, the judge of probate, and the clerk were no longer to be allowed to draw jurors:

Question. This jury bill takes the selection of jurors entirely out of your hands and gives it to five persons, to be appointed by the governor?

Answer. It gives it to five persons, and those persons have been appointed by the governor in my county, and have made their list. They make their list in the same way that the clerk, the judge of probate, and the sheriff did, selecting those that in their judgment are competent to discharge the duties. I have not seen the list, but I am informed by those who have seen that there are very few colored men on it, and there is not a white republican name on it, as I understood. The colored men whose names are on it almost all vote the democratic ticket. In one beat in which there are six or seven hundred colored voters, I am informed by Mr. Mabson, who saw the list, that there was but one colored man in the precinct who, in their opinion, is competent to discharge the duties of grand or petit juror, and he is a man that always voted the democratic ticket.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What are the politics of the commissioners of jurors in your county?

A. Four of them are democrats and the other is a republican. There was one republican appointed. This republican gentleman did not intend to serve, but I urged and begged him to serve and gave him my reasons why I wanted him to serve, and he finally came up and did serve.

Q. The majority of the commission, of course, governs?

A. Yes. I have complained of other legislation.

I stop here to say—and it may serve as a memorandum to refresh the memory of the honorable Senator from Alabama—that this is one of the instances in which, with that kind and magnanimous consideration so customary with democrats, when he came to deal with a republican county, a county having a large republican majority, where the county officers were republican, determined not to be mean about a little matter of that sort, in place of making all five of the commissioners democratic, generously, in a large-hearted way said "Now let one of them be a republican;" and one of them is a republican!

There is other information here about the working of the jury laws of Alabama, but I am not going to detain the Senate by reading it. It is all cogent commentary upon what we have heard of the wrongs which that State suffers.

I have one other thing to say about this bill; indeed I have several others, but I will say but one other, and that in answer to an observation which fell from my distinguished friend from Connecticut. He read with commendation, indeed with eulogy, a provision in the bill declaring that nothing shall be construed to prevent any judge from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the box used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the States; and thereupon, with a firmness of faith sure-footed as he always is, he said that in the State of Connecticut and in the State of New York no such proceedings as those provided for in this bill would ever take place, and I believe he returned thanks to the Throne of Grace that he did so believe. That shows a grateful disposition in the Senator, an inclination to be thankful for very small favors. I should like to know what the honorable Senator from Connecticut knows legally from this bill on that point. Nothing in the world that we have heard except that he is acquainted with the judge (as of course he is) in his own district, and he esteems him, and with a singular tautology for the Senator he went on to say that he was a fit man, an upright man, an honorable man, a gentleman, and then concluded by saying "and a republican," when if he had simply reversed his sentence and employed that last word at first he might have dismissed the others and conveyed the whole idea. [Laughter.]

Well, now, Mr. President, I should like to know whether it commends this bill that a dispensing power is granted respectively to all the judges in the country? Does it commend the bill that it is subject to what the law calls the jus disponendi of every judge? The Senator says in Connecticut it will be dispensed with. He consoles me by saying that in the State of New York it will be dispensed with, although neither he nor I know anything about it. Is it to be dispensed with in the Southern States? In the State of Alabama is it to be dispensed with, and are the juries to be drawn by these commissioners making such juries as are here sworn? Had I not heard the honorable Senator from Connecticut commend the bill for that reason I should say that there is danger and objection to allowing a judge, depending upon his political proclivities, depending upon his political affiliations, depending upon his surroundings and persuasions, to determine of his own ipse dixit, beyond the reach of motion to correct him or of an appeal, that in any district, in any circuit he may please, the jury shall be drawn not only in accordance with the State laws but taken out of the box, from among the names put there by such a proceeding as is chronicled and characterized in the congressional document and in this marshal's letter from which I have read.

No, Mr. President, that is not an impartial jury. Such an act as the honorable Senator from Alabama has referred to, and as the writer of this letter describes, is not calculated to produce an impartial jury; it is inconceivable that it was designed for such a purpose; and to say that in that case of which we happen thus accidentally to have knowledge, and in all the other cases of which we have no knowledge, in which the local law has laid a partial, an invidious, and a discriminating hand upon the machinery for the selection of juries, each judge, in the language of the German philosopher evolving it out of his own consciousness, without any proceeding before him or cause assigned, is to determine that the jury at a particular term or all the terms of the court shall be made up in accordance with the contrivances and arrangements studiously devised, as in the instance before us, to introduce into the jury-box men of a particular complexion, political or personal—to so declare is not, in my judgment, a wise course of legislation.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] brings to my notice a kindred instance, one between which and this from Alabama there is striking resemblance, the case of the State of Louisiana, in which, I understand from his hasty statement, a statute clothes the governor with the power at his option, when he chooses, and where he chooses, to appoint for a parish—which means a county—agents of his, I care not what they are called, to make up the body of men and the selection from which the jurors are to be drawn.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The Senator will allow me a moment to state that.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish you would state it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. By the law of Louisiana jurors are selected by a body of men, five in each parish, called police jurors. It so happened, of course, that in republican parishes a portion at least of those police jurors were republicans. At the first session of the Legislature after the advent of Governor Nicholls to office a law was passed authorizing him to add to the number of police jurors in any parish in which he chose to do so five additional police jurors of his own selection; the result of which was that in parishes where there was a majority of republican police jurors the additional five were added, giving to our democratic friends the control of the body.

Mr. CONKLING. This dispensing clause gives permission to any judge, whoever he may be, to resort to the State boxes for juries when those boxes have been filled by the most licentious exercise of the power described by the honorable Senator from Iowa; and thus, upon the option of any judge, questions of the last moment, questions involving the national right, questions involving the national right with foreign nations, as questions submitted to a jury very often do, all questions involving rights of citizenship, the rights of citizens of all races and all colors, are to be submitted to a jury picked and culled under State authority and under the inspiration of sectional, of partisan, and of other local prejudice; and that is one of the ornaments of this bill!

Mr. President, under the exigency of party occasion for political and party purposes, the danger is and the design is that the jury system of eighty years shall be overthrown, that it shall be supplanted by laws based upon a theory abhorrent to every principle of enlightened jurisprudence, that the ancient laws of the Republic shall give way to the unenacted dogmas which have been held dangerous and have been condemned by all men of all parties who were patriotic, in England for centuries, and in this country always. The danger and the design is to sweep the trial by jury, the jury-box, the courts, the machinery of justice into the maelstrom of partisan politics, and to bear away upon the headlong tide of partisan pursuit the ancient landmarks of the Republic. For one I am against it. I am against it for all the reasons which the honorable Senator from Connecticut says I have assigned heretofore. I am against it for all the reasons to which I have adverted to-day. I am against it for still other reasons with which at this hour I will not detain the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] to strike out the second section of the bill, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] If he were here, I should vote "nay" on this motion.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, (when his name was called.) I agreed to pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] on all political questions, provided it was not necessary for me to vote to make a quorum. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] on all political questions. If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire to state that I was paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] on political questions. Since he left the city, however, the pair has been transferred to the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] The Senator from New Jersey, if he were present, would vote "nay" and the Senator from Maine would vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] is paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.]

Mr. MCDONALD. On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from California, [Mr. BOOTH.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ANTHONY. I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. WALLACE,] who is necessarily absent from the city. If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would probably vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to announce that the Senators from Virginia [Messrs. JOHNSTON and WITHERS] are both absent unavoidably. Mr. JOHNSTON is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and Mr. WITHERS is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 30; as follows.

YEAS—16.

Allison,	Chandler,	Kirkwood,	Platt,
Blair,	Conkling,	Logan,	Rollins,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Morrill,	Saunders,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,	Windom.

NAYS—30.

Bailey,	Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Vance,
Bayard,	Garland,	Kernan,	Vest,
Beck,	Groome,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Whyte,
Coke,	Hereford,	Ransom,	Williams.
Davis of Illinois,	Houston,	Saulsbury,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Slater,

ABSENT—30.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Johnston,	Randolph,
Blaine,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,
Booth,	Gordon,	Kellogg,	Teller,
Bruce,	Grover,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Butler,	Hamlin,	McDonald,	Wallace,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Georgia,	McMillan,	Withers.
Carpenter,	Hoar,	McPherson,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the word "held," in line 17, to and including the word "belong," in line 20 of section 2.

The words proposed to be stricken out were read, as follows:

And a well-known member of the principal political party in the district in which the court is held opposing that to which the clerk may belong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to strike out the words just read.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER, (when his name was called.) On all political questions I am paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] If he were present, I should vote "nay" on this motion.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I repeat the announcement of my pair with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

Mr. MCMILLAN, (when his name was called.) I repeat the announcement of my pair with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] who is absent. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. On all political questions I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. WALLACE,] who is necessarily absent from the city.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to repeat the statement of the pair which I announced a moment ago of the Senators from Virginia, Mr. JOHNSTON with Mr. TELLER, and Mr. WITHERS with Mr. INGALLS. Neither of the Senators from Virginia will be here for some time. I should also announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] is paired with his colleague, [Mr. BRUCE.]

Mr. WHYTE. I think it due to the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. RANDOLPH] to renew the statement that they are paired on political questions.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Allison,	Chandler,	Kirkwood,	Platt,
Blair,	Conkling,	Logan,	Rollins,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Morrill,	Saunders,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,	Windom.

NAYS—30.

Bailey,	Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Vance,
Bayard,	Garland,	Kernan,	Vest,
Beck,	Groome,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Whyte,
Coke,	Hereford,	Ransom,	Williams.
Davis of Illinois,	Houston,	Saulsbury,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Slater,

ABSENT—30.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Johnston,	Randolph,
Blaine,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,
Booth,	Gordon,	Kellogg,	Teller,
Bruce,	Grover,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Butler,	Hamlin,	McDonald,	Wallace,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Georgia,	McMillan,	Withers.
Carpenter,	Hoar,	McPherson,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know whether an amendment such as I am about to offer has been proposed, but I want to suggest to the Senator from Connecticut who has charge of the bill that there is evidently an oversight, for I discover that the clause which we formerly acted upon appropriating $600,000 for marshals and their deputies is wholly omitted from this bill. I should like to offer that as an amendment to this bill if it has not been already proposed. I was out during a part of the day.

Mr. EATON. It is not an oversight, because it is in another bill, and that bill is now on the table.

Mr. WINDOM. We can save the trouble of acting on the other bill by inserting these words in this, and get through to-day.

Mr. EATON and others. Oh, no.

Mr. WINDOM. We shall then be ready to adjourn by to-morrow.

Mr. EATON. My friend is very kind; but we will keep that for another day.

Mr. WINDOM. Then I will suggest to add to the first section:

For fees of United States marshals and their deputies, $600,000.

I do this because it completes the bill and will enable us to adjourn to-morrow if we make this amendment.

Mr. EATON. We can take up the bill which is now on the table after the passage of this, which contains that very amount, $600,000, that my friend from Minnesota wishes to add here.

Mr. WINDOM. It will be impossible to act on that to-day; and in order to save time, as I know the Senate is very anxious to adjourn, I suggest the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves an amendment.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed at the end of line 20 of the first section to insert:

For fees of United States marshals and their deputies, $600,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to inquire of my colleague if that will complete the appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM. That completes the appropriations, and I believe will enable Congress to adjourn to-day or to-morrow; to-morrow without difficulty, if this bill should be signed.

Mr. WHYTE. We can attend to that in the other bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

Mr. WINDOM called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] I should vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. BUTLER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] on all political questions. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague [Mr. WALLACE] on all political questions. If he were here, I should vote "yea," and he would vote "nay," probably.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, (when his name was called.) As already stated, I shall vote whenever it is necessary to make a quorum; but I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McDONALD, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from California, [Mr. BOOTH.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN, (when his name was called.) I am paired on political questions with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. McPHERSON.] If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire to say that the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. RANDOLPH] on all political questions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will announce again, and will not take occasion to announce it any more, that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] is paired with his colleague, [Mr. BRUCE,] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER,] and the other Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] is paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.] The Senator from California, if here, would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Allison,	Chandler,	Kirkwood,	Platt,
Blair,	Conkling,	Logan,	Rollins,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Morrill,	Saunders.
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,	Windom,

NAYS—30.

Bailey,	Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Vance,
Bayard,	Garland,	Kernan,	Vest,
Beck,	Groome,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Whyte,
Coke,	Hereford,	Ransom,	Williams.
Davis of Illinois,	Houston,	Saulsbury,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Slater,

ABSENT—30.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Johnston,	Randolph,
Blaine,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,
Booth,	Gordon,	Kellogg,	Teller,
Bruce,	Grover,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Butler,	Hamlin,	McDonald,	Wallace,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Georgia,	McMillan,	Withers.
Carpenter,	Hoar,	McPherson,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WINDOM. Only one word. The Senator from Connecticut in charge of this bill has expressed his gratitude that it does not apply and will not apply to the States of Connecticut and New York. If the bill is so bad that it fills him with gratitude that it does not apply to two States, is it not bad enough to vote down? I hope it will not apply to any.

Mr. EATON. Only a word. I ought to say that I did not state that it was because it was a very bad bill that I was glad it did not apply to Connecticut and New York. It was simply because of the perfectness of our jury system in those States. This bill will absolutely better the condition in many of the States of this Union, and therefore I think we had better vote it up and not vote it down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McDONALD, (when his name was called.) If I were not paired with the Senator from California, [Mr. BOOTH,] I should vote "yea."

Mr. McMILLAN, (when his name was called.) I desire to repeat that I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] on political subjects. If he were here, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL, (when Mr. THURMAN'S name was called.) The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is paired with my colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] on all political questions.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON,] and I presume by the perversity with which the Senators on the other side have voted for this monstrous bill that it is regarded as a political question. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. My colleague [Mr. TELLER] is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If he were here, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. JONAS. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] is paired with his colleague [Mr. BRUCE] on all political questions. If he were here, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] would vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. On this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. WALLACE,] who is necessarily absent.

Mr. PENDLETON. On this question my colleague [Mr. THURMAN] is paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Bailey,	Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Vance,
Bayard,	Garland,	Kernan,	Vest,
Beck,	Groome,	Maxey,	Walker,
Call,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Whyte,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Williams.
Coke,	Hereford,	Ransom,
Davis of Illinois,	Houston,	Saulsbury,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Slater,

NAYS—16.

Allison,	Chandler,	Kirkwood,	Platt,
Blair,	Conkling,	Logan,	Rollins,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Morrill,	Saunders,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,	Windom.

ABSENT—31.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Johnston,	Randolph,
Blaine,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,
Booth,	Gordon,	Kellogg,	Teller,
Bruce,	Grover,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Butler,	Hamlin,	McDonald,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Georgia,	McMillan.	Wallace,
Carpenter,	Hoar,	McPherson,	Withers.
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 696) for the relief of William Nephew King, jr.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at four o'clock p. m. on Monday, the 30th of June instant; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. McDONALD. I ask to be excused from serving upon the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By unanimous consent, Mr. McDONALD was excused, and the President pro tempore was authorized to fill the vacancy, and Mr. VEST was appointed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask the Senate to excuse me from further service upon the Select Committee to inquire into alleged frauds in the late elections, commonly called the Wallace committee.

By unanimous consent, Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, was excused, and the President pro tempore was authorized to fill the vacancy, and Mr. BLAIR was appointed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask that House bill No. 2382 be taken from the table.

The bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriations to pay the fees of United States marshals and their general deputies was read the first time by its title.

Mr. WHYTE. May I suggest, if the Senator from West Virginia will allow me, to our friend from Minnesota that we take this bill up now and pass it without the necessity of a reference. It covers the appropriation which he just suggested ought to be added to the other bill.

Mr. WINDOM. The trouble is that this is very much mixed up with political matters. Were it not, we could have passed it on the other bill very readily and be through as soon as that bill is signed; but there is a good deal of politics in this one and I think it should be considered. I am willing that it should be read a second time and referred to the committee.

The bill was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is a resolution on the table received from the House to-day fixing Monday next for adjournment. I desire to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I will state in this connection that we are not without hope that we may agree with the House; but at this time it is best not to do so. Therefore I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS.) The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at four o'clock p. m. on Monday, the 30th of June instant.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CLASSIFICATION, ETC., OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HEREFORD. Yesterday the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MCDONALD] introduced a resolution, which is on the Secretary's table, allowing the Committees on Mines and Mining of the Senate and of the House to appoint a sub-committee, to act in conjunction with the commission appointed under the law of March 3, 1879, charged with the duty of codifying the laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain, &c. The resolution was laid on the table. I ask now that that resolution be taken up. I understand that there is no objection to the passage of the resolution on either side of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution mentioned by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, yesterday submitted by Mr. MCDONALD:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the Committee on Mines and Mining of the Senate and the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House be each authorized to appoint a sub-committee, to consist of not exceeding three members of said committees, to act in aid of the commission authorized under the act of March 3, 1879, charged with the duty of codifying the laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain, and provide for the classification and sale of the public lands, and other duties therewith connected. And any expenses incurred in the discharge of said duties shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House respectively upon the certificate of the chairmen of said committees.

The resolution was agreed to.

TREASURY ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. EATON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion a moment. I desire to offer a resolution.

Mr. EATON. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That all the testimony taken by the select committee investigating Treasury accounts be reported to the Senate and printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That resolution will probably need some explanation.

Mr. EATON. Let it lie on the table until to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, I will consent that it lie over.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish now to state that I desire to be present when that resolution is called up. There is a question whether the Senate ought to act upon it or not; therefore, I hope I shall be present whenever it is called up.

Mr. ALLISON. I give notice to the Senator from West Virginia that I will endeavor to call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my friend that I shall be obliged to be out of the Senate to-morrow morning.

Mr. WINDOM. Then I hope the resolution may be taken up to-day. If the Senator is compelled to be absent to-morrow, he certainly ought not to object to having the resolution acted on now, so that he can make his explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection to its consideration myself.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to take any advantage of the Senator from West Virginia; but he announces in advance that he will not be here to-morrow, and the resolution ought to pass before adjournment, and if the Senator from West Virginia will not be here to-morrow we may not have an opportunity of passing it before adjournment unless we act now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I object to its consideration now. I was appointed by the Senate as a member of that committee. There has been a good deal said by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Minnesota, who were also members of that committee, relative to what took place in the committee and relative to the testimony taken——

Mr. WINDOM. I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. BECK. That is so; the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] I should have said, who is a member of that committee.

I have up to this time declined to say one word on the subject, because I believed it was indecorous to speak about the action of the committee when its labors had not been completed. The committee has been at work; what it has done I am not at liberty to say. Some explanations of very extraordinary things have been made by the officials of the Treasury Department; and now, with only their explanations in, an effort is made to publish to the country the fact that the investigation has been a failure. If there is a motion made to discharge the committee, well; if there is a motion to require it to report on a given day, well; but to require a few explanations made by a few Treasury officials to be published to the world when the whole facts are not in, I object to. I do not pretend to say now whether anything has been proved against the Treasury Department or not, but I do say, in the hearing of the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Iowa, that the attempt now to publish an ex parte statement in partial explanation of things that look on those books very bad, is indecorous, and I object to it.

Mr. INGALLS. I have been a member of that committee since it was created, and the Senate will bear me witness that never upon any occasion have I volunteered any statement whatever in regard to the testimony that had been taken before that committee; but in instances quite numerous, not only at this but at preceding sessions, whenever there has been a discussion in regard to the iniquities and transgressions of the republican party, the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] as if he were the Christopher Columbus of some new continent of radical rascality, has volunteered to bring in repeatedly reiterations of what has been disclosed in regard to the alleged discrepancies in the accounts of the Treasury Department, not always by statement, but with a shrug and an innuendo and an intimation and an insinuation, as if "if I would I could," as if there had been misappropriation, malapplication of public funds to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars.

Now, sir, if there was indecorum, was not the indecorum on the part of the chairman of the committee, who upon his own allegations of wrong had required the establishment of a committee for the purpose of investigating these matters, and then upon repeated instances comes in here and states that these matters are of grave import and that various things have been proven of great detriment to the republican administration of the Treasury. Sir, I repel the insinuation that there has been any indecorum. The chairman of that committee has been the one who has repeatedly brought this matter in here. It never has been alluded to by any person on this floor with the single exception of the Senator from West Virginia, the chairman of the committee. Every allegation made by any member of that committee has been in response to insinuations, damaging insinuations, in regard to what had been done by republican officials while they have had control of the affairs of the Treasury.

Mr. President, I insist that the motion of the Senator from Iowa is a proper motion. It is one that ought to be adopted; it is one that is called for by the exigencies of the case, because no longer ago than yesterday the Senator from West Virginia stated that changes had been made and that there were discrepancies of hundreds of millions of dollars between the statements of the Treasurer and of the Register, and that he was not at liberty to state what had been proven before the committee, but the country might be ready for some damaging disclosures.

It is time, sir, that these things should stop and that the country should know what has been proven; and the country should know that with the single exception of one duplicate warrant that was paid by mistake, amounting to less than $250, there is not a single cent of discrepancy between the statements made by the Register and the Secretary of the Treasury—not one cent; and all these allegations about thousands of millions having been misappropriated, about the incorrect statement of accounts, about the maladministration of republican officials, are utterly baseless. They rest upon nothing further than the fact that there have been, by different officials of the Treasury, different methods of stating the accounts of this Government. That is all there is of it; and it is due to the country, it is due to the Treasury, it is due to the republican party that is assailed in this manner, that the testimony which has been taken should be published, and published without delay, in order that if the statements of the Senator from West Virginia can be sustained proceedings should be had against guilty officials, and if they cannot be sustained these invidious and unjust aspersions upon the public credit, these assaults upon the national honor, should be placed where they ought to be by the testimony that has already been taken before the committee.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to repeat again that I as a member of that committee from the beginning to now have attended ten times where the Senator from Kansas has attended once, and I have gone through these matters as carefully as I know how to examine anything. And when he states that there has not been anything wrong except one item of less than $250 he is making a statement wholly unwarranted by the examinations that I have made. I make no charges and will make none until the report of the committee is had; but if any gentleman of the Senate will go to the books of that Department and hold up any leaf of a public ledger to the sun, if he does not find from one to ten scratches and alterations made his eyes will not be as good as they ought to be.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will the Senator inform the Senate and the country how long that committee has been in existence?

Mr. BECK. That committee was in existence during the greater part of the last Congress, not the whole of it; but if any gentleman will consider the amount of labor necessary to ascertain the total amount of the public debt, to understand the changes of system made in 1870, the condition of things before that time, and the condition of things since, all the questions between the Treasurer, the Register, and the Secretary of the Treasury, the three sets of books that have been kept in the three different offices since the changes were made, and to ascertain how and by what authority those changes were made, and seek to do justice to the officials of the Treasury and at the same time do justice to the country, he will see what an immense labor is involved. I am obliged to say for one that the more I have examined the subject and the more statements I have had made to me, the more difficult it has appeared.

I want to do injustice to no officer, if I know it, and the erasures I speak of may be all right; I hope for the honor of the country they may be proved to be so. It is better for us all, republicans and democrats alike, that it should be shown to the world, shown to the democratic party, shown to the republican party, that whatever changes were made were made because they were necessary in order to correct simple errors, and not because of frauds which were sought to be covered up. If I can make a report of that sort, I will do it most cheerfully and most gladly. I shall be glad to be able to say that whatever of changes were made were made because of erroneous entries, and not because of fraudulent transactions. To begin to publish the testimony now and tell what we are doing, might in the face of the present condition of things tend either to shake the confidence of the world or to give the world undue confidence, I will not say which.

If this testimony is to be published before the work is done, then I hope the Senate will put somebody else on that committee in my place, because until the full investigation is made I do not want one word said, and the Senator from Kansas will bear me out in saying that I have never in any form, directly or indirectly, before this moment, said one word in regard to it, because it is one of those great questions that reach to the very root of the good faith of the American Government.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky, in connection with the question asked by the Senator from Iowa, has there been any unreasonable neglect or delay in the prosecution of the investigation by the committee?

Mr. BECK. I have gone while Congress was in session and when Congress was not in session, taking time that belonged to myself, in order to endeavor to expedite this matter, and I have found the Senator from West Virginia there, in season and out of season, endeavoring to do all that one man could do—for he has been there many, many times when I was not—in what appeared to me to be an honest effort to ascertain the truth. He may in the present condition of his mind arrive at conclusions that, when the facts are all known, he may not be justified in; I do not know; I may perhaps have arrived at conclusions that will not be sustained when all the facts are known; but I desire to say that there has been as honest, as earnest, as competent an endeavor to get to the bottom of this thing as I knew how to make, and I am only sorry I was placed in that position. I do not know how long it will take to complete the work; but if I find that I cannot understand it, I shall be obliged to retire and ask somebody else to take my place, as I fear I shall have to do. I shall, if I find it necessary, come before the Senate and make that confession fairly and frankly. But until the work is done, it is better for the Treasury Department, better for the country, better for everybody that the whole matter should remain as it is in the hands of the committee, unless the Senate ask us to make a report, or discharge us, or do something else; but do not take it by scraps, do not take this statement, that statement, and the other, all of which may be governed by party bias, because the Treasury Department is too important to the whole country to have it handled in the way it would be if we were to report the testimony now.

Mr. ALLISON. In offering this resolution I certainly meant no discourtesy to the committee. I was a member of the committee during the last Congress, and endeavored as well as I could to be present on all occasions of the meetings of the committee, as the chairman will bear me witness, and I would not now offer the resolution except for the fact that on yesterday and the day before the Senator from West Virginia who is chairman of the committee very clearly indicated to the Senate and to the country that there were wrongs in the Treasury which in due time would be exposed to public view, that there had been increases of the public debt appearing upon the books of the Treasury, and improperly appearing there.

Now what I want to know is what is disclosed by the testimony, and I can see no harm to come from publishing it. I can see no harm to come to the people of this country by turning on the light in reference to this matter. It is an unusual thing for a committee to sit in secret, session after session, without disclosing the testimony taken by it. I remember here on an occasion at the last session of Congress when the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] introduced a resolution providing for an investigation in the Southern States, a vote was taken upon that question, and as I remember every democrat in this Chamber not only insisted that the testimony should be published day by day, but that that committee should sit in the light of day, that the doors should be open everywhere and at all times to public gaze. Now we have a committee sitting since December, 1877, examining into the question of the public debt, whether or not the public debt had been improperly increased, whether or not there had been maladministration by former occupants of the Treasury.

It does seem to me that no harm can result to anybody by publishing the testimony already taken; and that is all my resolution proposes. I simply propose that the testimony taken shall be reported to the Senate and that it shall be published for the use of the Senate and for the consideration of the Senate. Is there any objection to permitting every Senator on this floor to see what testimony this committee has taken? Is it discourteous to the committee to ask that this testimony shall be printed for the use of the Senate? It seems to me not. It seems to me that a proper vindication of the committee, and of the Senate itself, as well as of the Treasury, requires that this testimony shall be read by whoever chooses to read it in this Chamber.

Several SENATORS. The resolution is not before the Senate; let us adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I withdrew the objection to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BECK. I made objection.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I understand there was objection to considering the resolution. Then why waste time on it this hot day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question was put and the Chair announced that the Chair heard no objection and the resolution was before the Senate. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator who has just taken his seat [Mr. ALLISON] stated that he was a member of the committee and condemned closed doors or secret sessions. Now I want to ask that Senator if he did not vote for that course and if he did not request it himself?

Mr. ALLISON. My friend from West Virginia will allow me to say that I did not condemn secret sessions of the committee. I made no such statement.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Did you or did you not in this particular instance originally say that the sessions ought not to be public?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt that I concurred with the committee in the fact that we should not sit, if we did sit in the Treasury Department building, with open doors.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then why condemn it?

Mr. ALLISON. I would not have offered this resolution, as I stated, except for the fact that the Senator from West Virginia, the chairman of this committee had, prematurely as I believed, stated on the floor of the Senate what the testimony would disclose. Now, I want the testimony to speak for itself in order that we may see what it does disclose.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Senator state what the Senator from West Virginia did say in that regard?

Mr. ALLISON. I have not the RECORD before me.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Has not the Senator a remembrance of what the Senator from West Virginia said?

Mr. WINDOM. I can tell the Senator if he wishes to know. The Senator said the day before yesterday, speaking of the committee and the evidence——

Mr. BECK. I made objection to the consideration of the resolution, and I shall adhere to it.

Mr. ANTHONY. It comes too late now.

Mr. SAULSBURY. We want to go home. We do not want to stay here any longer to-day.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from West Virgina said:

> There has been testimony taken, and I will state here in my place as a Senator, and I will state it publicly, and state it to the Senator from Minnesota especially, that I have never uttered a single charge of alterations, discrepancies, or changes of the books that will not be borne out clear and clean, and more too. I do not state this as coming from the committee; I state it upon my own responsibility——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is it.

Mr. WINDOM. Let me go on:

> which was an exception from the rule. We were to keep confidential the proceedings of the committee, but that was an exception; and I state that here now, and I have stated heretofore, that every single sentence and every figure, including the one that the debt of the Government had been largely increased, and in a single year nearly $100,000,000, will be and is true.

And again, in reply to the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER]—the Senator from Wisconsin having asked him when we might expect this report, that "we want to get our nerves steadied; we want to prepare ourselves"—the Senator from West Virginia said:

> The Senator ought to get them prepared, for he will hear something that he has not heard before. I hope he will content himself until the report comes.

That looks very much like an intimation that there is something dreadful coming, and I want to know what it is.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am glad the Senator has read the RECORD. It bears me out in what I intended to state to the Senate. My recollection is that the suggestion came from my republican friends on the committee. It may not be so, but I know that they concurred, and I know that the Department wished that there should be no public investigation. I was much surprised when my friend from Iowa said to me this morning—I thought in a joking way—that he was going to offer such a resolution; but he has offered it, and I accept the issue.

I said yesterday and I repeat that while all testimony was to be confidential, I excepted at the time such statements as I had already made in the Senate, and the record bears me out, and I mean to speak to that now and to nothing else. I have not heretofore referred to what the testimony will be, nor do I wish now to do it. You cannot in a proper way offer such a resolution in the Senate without giving the committee an opportunity to act.

Now, what are the facts? I repeat that all the assertions I made in the Senate as to the increase of the public debt, in some years nearly $100,000,000, are facts, and no Senator on that side, let him belong to the committee or not, can deny it.

Mr. INGALLS. That the public debt has been increased?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir, increased.

Mr. INGALLS. I deny it absolutely on the testimony taken.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I mean statements of the public debt. The figures show it, and here they are. Take the year 1869——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I should like to have the point of order settled. The Senator from Kentucky objected to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Chair distinctly asked if there was objection to the present consideration of the resolution. The Chair distinctly announced that the Chair heard none, and that the resolution was before the Senate. If the Senator from Kentucky objected, the Chair was unfortunate in not hearing the objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to say a word or two. I will give way in a moment. It is hardly fair now that statements should go unanswered, and I ought to answer their statements. I shall give way in five minutes, and I think I ought to have that much time.

I ask either one of the Senators whether or not it is a fact that in the year 1869 the public debt was stated to Congress to have been $2,489,000,000 in round numbers, and when it was restated in 1871 the statement was $2,588,000,000, ninety-nine million difference? That is a fact that stands to-day.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Minnesota ought to take his time.

Mr. McMILLAN. I merely wish to make an inquiry, from what the Senator reads, whether it is from testimony taken or not? I see he is reading from a document.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator knows that I have said more than once that I made no reference to the testimony.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator read from a document before him.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I read figures from the official reports of the Government, the official reports sent to Congress, and what I have stated are facts. I could go on with half a dozen years, and state the same thing as to the public debt, but all this has been stated by me several times in the Senate, and I defy contradiction from any Senator that it is not so. He may make the contradiction, but that is all he can do.

In the report of 1870 the payment of pensions for 1864-'65 was set down at $16,347,621.34; but if you take up the report of each of the years from 1864 to 1870, it is there $9,291,610.48, an increase in the year 1870 of over $7,000,000 in the Pension Bureau. That is a fact, and no Senator on that side will deny it, notwithstanding the assertion of the Senator from Kansas that $250 is the only thing that has been found.

Again, in the naval expenditures there is a difference between the Treasury and Navy Departments of several million dollars. Take the pensions from 1860 to 1870, and the Treasury Department has the Pension Office charged with $13,000,000 more than they say they ever received, and I have official documents to show it.

So I might go on from now until to-morrow morning; and yet the Senator from Kansas says the only thing discovered has been $250. If there has been a warrant for $250 discovered, the Senator from Kansas knows something about a warrant that I know nothing of. I never heard of it before.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator look on page 71 of the printed testimony taken before the committee?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No, sir, I will not.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator says he never heard about it before. I ask him to look on page 71 of the printed testimony of the committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have not got the printed testimony here; I do not carry it in my pocket, and if the Senator observes what he has voted for and agreed to himself, he will not refer to it.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senate will bear me witness that the Senator from West Virginia has always brought this before the Senate first.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator will look to the statement at the head of the printed document he has, the Senator will not refer to it in public because he knows as well as I do——

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will allow me, I shall refer to it in public and in private whenever it is necessary to refute assertions that are not borne out by the testimony.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have said nothing about $250. Now, if the Senator wants a word about the $7,000,000 discrepancy in the Pension Office or the $100,000,000 in the public debt for one year, I will listen to him.

Mr. INGALLS. I should be glad to do it. An explanation has been made in regard to the reason why in that single year the statement of the public debt made by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Register differed so widely.

It will be recollected by the chairman of the committee that the statement has been made, and reference in order to substantiate that has been made also to the books of the Treasury, showing that where the outstanding public debt was reported at $2,489,002,480.58 by one officer, and by the other officer at $2,597,722,983·37, the difference arose from the fact that in one case the debt was reported less the amount of cash in the Treasury, to which was added the amount of cash and sinking fund, and that the amount of Pacific Railroad bonds was also omitted.

The outstanding debt was reported by the Register that year at		$2,489,002,480 58
Which was the amount of the debt less cash and sinking fund in the Treasury, which should be added	$156,167,813 58
Less accrued interest	47,447,310 79
		108,720,502 79
Which added to the Register's report makes		2,597,722,983 37

That is a full explanation of the fact that the statement of one officer differed from that of the other.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then the Senator admits that the facts are as I stated them, and he now undertakes to explain them. I spoke of 1869. No such explanation was made until perhaps very lately. I will say nothing about that, however. Will the Senator now tell me a little about the $75,000,000 difference in 1864? There is a difference in the statements of the Treasury Department in 1864 of $75,000,000.

Mr. INGALLS. There is not a single discrepancy between the statements made by the Secretary in any one year and any other year, or between the Secretary and any other officer of the Government, that is not explicable upon precisely this same basis, that either one officer has made the debt statement less the amount of cash in the Treasury, or has omitted to state as an obligation of the Government some one of the classes of bonds that have been issued to different railroad corporations.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator from West Virginia will give way to me——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will give way to my friend in a moment. I learn that there is an agreement or understanding among Senators to have an early adjournment. I have no wish, of course, to delay the Senate if an adjournment is desired.

Mr. WINDOM. It is so easy to settle the controversy by just publishing the evidence, that I hope the Senator will not object to it.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. For one moment.

WABASH RIVER RAILROAD BRIDGE.

Mr. VOORHEES. In the interest of progress and the development of the country, I desire to have a little bill which has twice passed the House, and which was once reported from the Committee on Commerce of this body favorably, providing for the building of a railroad bridge over the Wabash River at Merom, Indiana, taken up and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Indiana for the purpose indicated by him?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I yield for a moment.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is a local bill.

Mr. FERRY. Does the Senator from Indiana intend to bridge the Senator from West Virginia over this dilemma by the bill which he proposes to take up?

Mr. VOORHEES. To bridge over nobody, nothing except the Wabash River.

Mr. FERRY. Then I do not object.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is to build a little railroad bridge over the Wabash River, which is of a good deal of importance to the local interests there.

Mr. FERRY. Then it is the Wabash River, instead of the dilemma which the Senator from West Virginia has got into that the Senator proposes to bridge over?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes. It has been approved by General Humphreys, the Chief of Engineers, and it is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk calls the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Senator must move to discharge the Committee on Commerce from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none; and the question is, will the Senate discharge the Committee on Commerce from the further consideration of the bill? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WINDOM. The bill contains no political legislation, I suppose?

Mr. CONKLING. Nothing to be used at the polls?

Mr. VOORHEES. Nothing. It was once reported by the Committee on Commerce, or I would not have asked that the committee be discharged. It was once considered by the Senator from New York, as he will remember.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1627) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge across the Wabash River.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Is this intended for a railroad bridge?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Does the bill provide that any company other than the one proposing to build the bridge may upon any terms have the use of the bridge for railroad purposes, for passengers passing over the river?

Mr. VOORHEES. I think it does. The bridge is to be built under the supervision of the War Office and is subject to their exceptions. This bill has been approved by General Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, and emanates to that extent from the War Department, where this subject is placed by law.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The particular point that I wished to arrive at was whether or not the bill provides in terms that any other railroad company desiring to pass the river may use this bridge upon equitable terms to be determined in some way. The reason I make the inquiry is that we have one bridge across the Mississippi River in regard to which there is no such provision, and the result is that no other railroad company can use that bridge, and we shall be compelled to build another bridge beside it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will say to the Senator from Iowa with perfect frankness that this bridge will be built on such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the War Department.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is as to the construction of the bridge, but it does not touch the question whether or not another railroad company may, by contributing to the company who built it equitable compensation, use it for railroad purposes.

Mr. VOORHEES. I would have to read again the bill to answer accurately the Senator, but I will say that from my knowledge of the matter there will be no objection whatever to the use of the bridge by other railroad companies. The river at this point is the dividing line between Illinois and Indiana, and corporations belonging to these two States conjointly are building upon understood terms. This is not a new subject. It has been before the Committee on Commerce of this body and was reported favorably twice. A similar bill passed the House by the concurrent action of Members and Senators from Illinois and Indiana, not during the present session, since the Senator from Illinois immediately before me [Mr. LOGAN] was here; but his predecessors have understood this matter.

Mr. LOGAN. This is a House bill?

Mr. VOORHEES. It is a House bill, but it is the same bill that was before us at the last session. The only apology that I have to make for asking the attention of the Senate to it just now is because they are building a road each way from Illinois and from Indiana, and they want to cross the river, and if we fail here in giving them this privilege it will throw them back until next winter. It is a legitimate public enterprise. The House have sent this bill here. I apologize to the Senate because of these reasons for asking action at this time; otherwise I would not be justified in doing so. I think it ought to be done.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH B. COLLINS—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before entertaining the motion the Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask my friend from Delaware to allow me to say just one word before he submits a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 505, with the following objection to its becoming a law:

Doubts have arisen, upon consideration of the bill, as to whether Major Collins will be required under it to refund to the United States the pay and allowances received by him at the time he was mustered out of the service. Believing that it was not the intention of Congress to require such repayment, the bill is returned without my signature to the House in which it originated.

R. B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
June 27, 1879.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the message of the President, with the bill, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from West Virginia give way until I present some morning business?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 722) granting a pension to Sarah Dayton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 723) granting a pension to H. R. Hershberger; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

TREASURY ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. FERRY. The resolution of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is the pending question, and will be the unfinished business, of course, for to-morrow. Therefore I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say that my objection was entered to the consideration of the resolution, and I did not withdraw it, and have not done so.

Mr. CONKLING. It is too late.

Mr. FERRY. Unless the Senator from West Virginia desires to make a statement, as the resolution will be the unfinished business, I move——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from West Virginia has stated——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan withdraw the motion to adjourn?

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator from West Virginia desires it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from West Virginia has stated that he is obliged to be away to-morrow.

Mr. FERRY. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. Let the resolution be passed to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to be heard upon this question, but there has been an understanding all around to adjourn, and Senators have thought hard of me for taking up as much time as I have. I yield now, and if Senators choose to give it up, let them allow the resolution to come to a vote.

Mr. BUTLER. I now renew my motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 27, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 102) authorizing a survey of the Mississippi River near Lake Concordia, Louisiana, and Cowpen Bend, Mississippi;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 114) donating granite blocks to Mower Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Orleans, Louisiana.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hours begins——

Mr. COBB. I move to dispense with the morning hour to-day.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON. There is a special order assigned for consideration after the morning hour, a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. That is a public bill. This is private-bill day.

Mr. WILSON. Dispensing with the morning hour to-day, I presume, will not interfere with the status of the special order.

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. KENNA. I understand the object of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] in moving to dispense with the morning hour is to proceed with the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's object, the Chair is advised.

The question being put, the morning hour was dispensed with, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

TERMS OF COURT AT FORT WAYNE, INDIANA.

Mr. NEW, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2384) amendatory of and supplementary to the act providing for the holding of terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States at Fort Wayne, Indiana, approved June 18, 1878; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

LANDING OF CATTLE FOR BREEDING PURPOSES.

Mr. FORSYTHE. I ask unanimous consent to report a bill from the Committee on Agriculture. It will not take three minutes to dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to report the bill for consideration?

Mr. TALBOTT. Yes, sir; that is the gentleman's object.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2337) to allow John Merryman and Frank Brown, of Maryland, to import and land cattle for breeding purposes.

Mr. BREWER. It seems to me there has been a bill passed which covers that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unadvised as to that.

Mr. BREWER. If we are to have a law of that kind it should be made to apply to the whole country, and not merely to individuals.

Mr. TALBOTT. I will state that a bill did pass this House which applied generally, but there is some difficulty about getting it through the Senate. This bill is to allow two gentlemen in my congressional district to import cattle from Europe and land them. They cannot land them because there is a proclamation issued by the President prohibiting the landing of cattle. This bill meets the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. I hope no gentleman will object to its passage. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BREWER. I object to the passage of any bill of this kind which is for the benefit merely of two individuals.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the bill is objected to, let us go on with the public business.

Mr. TALBOTT. The other bill to which the gentleman from Michigan refers cannot meet this case because it cannot possibly get through this session.

Mr. BREWER. I object to the reporting of any bill of this kind that is not for the benefit of the country at large.

MRS. MARIA LEAKE.

Mr. KNOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2385) to place the name of Mrs. Maria Leake, widow of Jeremiah Leake, late a private in Company H, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, on the pension-roll; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ACKLEN. I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. I make that motion that it may be voted down, and that we may proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bills.

The question was put, and the motion was not agreed to.

FEES OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

Mr. COBB. I now move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill making appropriations for fees of marshals, &c.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Pending that motion, I desire to submit a proposition which I have reason to believe will meet with acceptance on both sides of the House. It is to the effect that general debate on this bill shall be limited to one hour on each side, after which it shall be agreed that the bill shall be proceeded with under the five-minute rule without the interposition of any dilatory motions.

Mr. FINLEY. As I understand it, the House agreed yesterday to limit general debate to half an hour on each side.

The SPEAKER. This can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] will bear in mind the fact that I do not stop with the motion to limit debate to one hour on each side, but I couple with it two other conditions to be accepted by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. Which the gentleman has no right to make in his motion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask unanimous consent to have it so understood.

Mr. CONGER. I do not think there is any necessity for such conditions. They are a reflection that somebody would make dilatory motions, before there is any evidence of such a disposition.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] if he does not think I had good reason to anticipate something of that kind?

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. ATKINS. I object to the proposition. Let the general debate go on for one hour.

The SPEAKER. There being objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] the question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBB,] to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before that is done, I move to reconsider the vote limiting general debate to one hour; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. COBB was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriation to pay fees of United States marshals and their general deputies.

The bill was then read at length.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate upon the pending bill is limited to one hour. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COBB. I yield to the other side, to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] for a half hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. "To this favor" it has come at last. The great fleet that set out on the 18th of March with all its freightage and armament is so shattered that now all the valuables it carried are embarked in this little craft, to meet whatever fate the sea and the storm may offer. This little bill contains the residuum of almost everything that has been the subject of controversy at the present session. I will not discuss it in detail, but will speak only of its central feature and especially of the opinions which the discussion of that feature has brought to the surface during the present session. The majority in this Congress have adopted what I consider very extreme and dangerous opinions on certain important constitutional questions. They have not only drifted back to their old attitude on the subject of State sovereignty, but they have pushed that doctrine much further than most of their predecessors ever went before, except during the period immediately preceding the late war.

So extreme are some of these utterances that nothing short of actual quotations from the RECORD will do their authors justice. I therefore shall read several extracts from debates at the present session of Congress, and group them in the order of the topics discussed:

Senator WALLACE (RECORD, June 3, pages 3 and 5) says:

The Federal Government has no voters, it can make none, it can constitutionally control none. * * * When it asserts the power to create and hold "national elections" or to regulate the conduct of the voter on election day, or to maintain equal suffrage, it tramples under foot the very basis of the Federal system and seeks to build a consolidated government from a democratic republic. This is the plain purpose of the men now in control of the Federal Government, and to this end the teachings of leading republicans now are shaped.

* * * * * * *

There are no national voters. Voters who vote for national Representatives are qualified by State constitutions and State laws, and national citizenship is not required of a voter of the State by any provision of the Federal Constitution nor in practice.

* * * * * * *

If there be such a thing, then, as a "national election," it wants the first element of an election—a national voter. The Federal Government, or (if it suits our friends on the other side better) the nation, has no voters; it cannot create them, it cannot qualify them.

Representative CLARK, of Missouri, (RECORD, April 26, page 60,) says:

The United States has no voters.

Senator MAXEY, Texas, (RECORD, April 21, page 72,) says:

It follows as surely as "grass grows and water runs," that under our Constitution the entire control of elections must be under the State whose voters assemble; whose right to vote is not drawn from the Constitution of the United States, but existed and was freely exercised long before its adoption.

Senator WILLIAMS, Kentucky (RECORD, April 25, page 8,) says:

The Legislatures of the States and the people of the several districts are the constituency of Senators and Representatives in Congress. They receive their commissions from the governor, and when they resign (which is very seldom) they send their resignations to the governor and not to the President. They are State officers and not Federal officers.

Senator WHYTE (RECORD, May 21, page 14) says:

There are no elections of United States officers and no voters of the United States. The voters are voters of the States, they are the people of the States, and their members of the House of Representatives are chosen by the electors of the States to represent the people of the States, whose agents they are.

Mr. MCLANE. Do I understand him to say that the Government of the United States has the right to keep the peace anywhere within a State? Do I understand him to say that there is any "peace of the United States" at all recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly I do.—Congressional Record, April 4, page 14.

Mr. MCLANE (RECORD, April 4, page 15) says:

I believe that the provision of law which we are about to repeal is unconstitutional; that is to say, that it is unconstitutional for the United States to "keep the peace" anywhere in the States, either at the polls or elsewhere; and if it were constitutional I believe in common with gentlemen on this side of the House that it would be highly inexpedient to exercise that power.

* * * * * * *

When that law used the phrase "to keep the peace" it could only mean the peace of the States.

* * * * * * *

It is not a possible thing to have a breach of the United States peace at the polls.

Senator WHYTE (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 21, page 18) says:

Sovereignty is lodged with the States, where it had its home long before the Constitution was created. The Constitution is the creature of that sovereignty. The Federal Government has no inherent sovereignty. All its sovereign powers are drawn from the States.

The States were in existence long before the Union, and the latter took its birth from their power.

* * * * * * *

The State governments are supreme by inherent power originally conceded to them by the people as to the control of local legislation and administration. The Federal Government has no part or lot in this vast mass of inherent sovereign power, and its interference therewith is utterly unwarrantable.

Senator WALLACE (RECORD, June 3, pages 3 and 4) says:

Thus we have every branch of the Federal Government, House, Senate, the executive and judiciary departments, standing upon the State governments, and all resting finally upon the people of the States, qualified as voters by State constitutions and State laws.

Senator WHYTE (RECORD, May 21, page 15) says:

No, Mr. President, it never was declared that we were a nation.

* * * * * * *

In the formation and adoption of the Constitution the States were the factors.

These are the declarations of seven distinguished members of the present Congress. They set forth what may be fairly regarded as the doctrines of the democracy as represented in this Capitol.

They are, in brief: First, there are no national elections; second, the United States has no voters; third, the States have the exclusive right to control all elections of members of Congress; fourth, the Senators and Representatives in Congress are State officers, or, as they have been called during the present session, "embassadors" or "agents" of the State; fifth, the United States has no authority to keep the peace anywhere within a State, and in fact, has no peace to keep; sixth, the United States is not a nation endowed with sovereign power, but is a confederacy of States; seventh, the States are sovereignties posssessing inherent supreme powers. They are older than the Union, and as independent sovereignties the State governments created the Union and determined and limited the powers of the General Government.

These declarations embody the sum total of the constitutional doctrines which the democracy has avowed during this extra session of Congress. These propositions form a body of doctrines which I do not hesitate to say are more extreme than was ever before held on this subject, except perhaps at the very crisis of secession and rebellion.

And these have not been put forth as abstract theories of government. True to the logic of their convictions the majority have sought to put them in practice by affirmative acts of legislation.

Let me summarize their attempts. First, they have denounced as unconstitutional all attempts of the United States to supervise, regulate, or protect national elections and have tried to repeal all laws on the national statute-book enacted for that purpose. Second, following the advice given by Calhoun in his political testament to his party, they have tried to repeal all those portions of the venerated judiciary act of 1789, the act of 1833 against nullification, and the act of 1861, and the acts amendatory thereof, that provide for carrying to the Supreme Court of the United States all controversies which relate to the duties and authority of any officer acting under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Third. They have attempted to prevent the President from enforcing the laws of the Union, by refusing necessary supplies and by forbidding the use of the Army to suppress violent resistance to the laws, by which, if they had succeeded, they would have left the citizens and the authorities of the States free to obey or disobey the laws of the Union as they might choose.

This, I believe, Mr. Chairman, is a fair summary both of the principles and the attempted practice to which the majority of this House has treated the country during the extra session.

Before quitting this topic, it is worth while to notice the fact that the attempt made in one of the bills now pending in this House to curtail the jurisdiction of the national courts is in the direct line of the teachings of John C. Calhoun. In his Discussion on the Constitution and Government of the United States, published by authority of the Legislature of South Carolina in 1851, he sets forth at great length the doctrine that ours is not a national government, but a confederacy of sovereign States, and then proceeds to point out what he considers the dangerous departures which the Government has made from his theory of the Constitution.

The first and most dangerous of these departures he declares to be the adoption of the twenty-fifth section of the judiciary act of 1789, by which appeals were authorized from the judgments of the supreme courts of the States to the Supreme Court of the United States. He declares that section of the act unconstitutional, because it makes the supreme court of a "sovereign" State subordinate to the judicial power of the United States; and he recommends his followers never to rest until they have repealed not only that section but also what he calls the still more dangerous law of 1833, which forbids the courts of the States to sit in judgment on the acts of an officer of the United States done in pursuance of national law. The present Congress has won the unenviable distinction of making the first attempt since the death of Calhoun to revive and put in practice his disorganizing and destructive theory of government.

Firmly believing that these doctrines and attempted practices of the present Congress are erroneous and pernicious, I will state briefly the counter-propositions:

I affirm, first, that the Constitution of the United States was not created by the governments of the States, but was ordained and established by the only sovereign in this country—the common superior of both the States and the nation—the people themselves; second, that the United States is a nation, having a government whose powers, as defined and limited by the Constitution, operate upon all the States in their corporate capacity and upon all the people; third, that by its legislative, executive, and judicial authority the nation is armed with adequate power to enforce all the provisions of the Constitution against all opposition of individuals or of States at all times and all places within the Union.

These are broad propositions, and I take the few moments left to me to defend them. The constitutional history of this country, or rather the history of sovereignty and government in this country, is comprised in four sharply defined epochs:

First. Prior to the 4th day of July, 1776, sovereignty, so far as it can be affirmed of this country, was lodged in the Crown of Great Britain. Every member of every colony (the colonists were not citizens but subjects) drew his legal rights from the Crown of Great Britain. "Every acre of land in this country was then held mediately or immediately by grants from that Crown," and "all the civil authority then existing or exercised here flowed from the head of the British Empire."

Second. On the 4th day of July, 1776, the people of these colonies, asserting their natural inherent right as sovereigns, withdrew the sovereignty from the Crown of Great Britain and reserved it to themselves. In so far as they delegated this national authority at all, they delegated it to the continental congress assembled at Philadelphia. That congress, by general consent, became the supreme government of this country—executive, judicial, and legislative in one. During the whole of its existence it wielded the supreme power of the new nation.

Third. On the 1st day of March, 1781, the same sovereign power, the people, withdrew the authority from the continental congress and lodged it, so far as they lodged it at all, with the confederation, which was declared to be a perpetual union.

Fourth. When at last our fathers found the confederation too weak and inefficient for the purposes of a great nation, they abolished it and lodged the national authority, enlarged and strengthened by new powers, in the Constitution of the United States, where, in spite of all assaults, it still remains. All these great acts were done by the only sovereigns in this Republic, the people themselves.

That no one may charge that I pervert history to sustain my own theories, I call attention to the fact that not one of the colonies declared itself free and independent. Neither Virginia nor Massachusetts threw off its allegiance to the British Crown as a colony. The great declaration was made not even by all the colonies as colonies, but it was made in the name and by authority of "all the good people of the colonies" as one people.

Let me fortify this position by a great name that will shine forever in the constellation of our southern sky—the name of Charles Coatsworth Pinckney, of South Carolina. He was a leading member of the constitutional convention of 1787, and also a member of the convention of South Carolina which ratified the Constitution. In that latter convention the doctrine of State sovereignty found a few champions; and their attempt to prevent the adoption of the Constitution because it established a supreme National Government was rebuked by him in these memorable words. I quote from his speech as recorded in Elliot's Debates:

This admirable manifesto, which for importance of matter and elegance of composition stands unrivaled, sufficiently confutes the honorable gentleman's doctrine of the individual sovereignty and independence of the several States. In that declaration the several States are not even enumerated, but after reciting, in nervous language and with convincing arguments, our right to independence and the tyranny which compelled us to assert it, the declaration is made in the following words: "We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in general congress assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the name, and by the authority of the good people of these colonies, solemnly publish and declare that these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States."

The separate independence and individual sovereignty of the several States were never thought of by the enlightened band of patriots who framed this declaration. The several States are not even mentioned by name in any part of it, as if it was intended to impress this maxim on America, that our freedom and independence arose from our union, and that without it we could neither be free nor independent. Let us, then, consider all attempts to weaken this union by maintaining that each is separately and individually independent as a species of political heresy, which can never benefit us, but may bring on us the most serious distresses.

For a further and equally powerful vindication of the same view I refer to the Commentaries of Justice Story, vol. 1, p. 197.

In this same connection, and as a pertinent and effective response to the democratic doctrines quoted in the outset, I quote from the first annual message of Abraham Lincoln, than whom no man of our generation studied the origin of the Union more profoundly. He said:

Our States have neither more nor less power than that reserved to them in the Union by the Constitution, no one of them ever having been a State out of the Union. The original ones passed into the Union even before they cast off their British colonial dependence, and the new ones each came into the Union directly from a condition of dependence, excepting Texas. And even Texas, in its temporary independence, was never designated a State. The new ones only took the designation of States on coming into the Union, while that name was first adopted for the old ones by the Declaration of Independence. Therein the "united colonies" were declared to be "free and independent States;" but, even then, the object plainly was not to declare their independence of one another, or of the Union, but directly the contrary, as their mutual pledge and their mutual action before, at the time, and afterward abundantly show.

* * * * * * *

The States have their status in the Union, and they have no other legal status. If they break from this, they can only do so against law and by revolution. The Union, and not themselves separately, procured their independence and their liberty. By conquest or purchase, the Union gave each of them whatever of independence and liberty it has. The Union is older than any of the States, and in fact it created them as States. Originally some dependent colonies made the Union, and in turn the Union threw off their old dependence for them and made them States, such as they are. Not one of them ever had a State constitution independent of the Union. Of course it is not forgotten that all the new States framed their constitutions before they entered the Union; nevertheless, dependent upon and preparatory to coming into the Union.

In further enforcement of the doctrine that the State governments were not the sovereigns who created this Government, I refer to the great decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Chisholm vs. The State of Georgia, reported in 2 Dallas, a decision replete with the most enlightened national spirit, in which the court stamps with its indignant condemnation the notion that the State of Georgia was "sovereign" in any sense that made it independent of or superior to the nation. Mr. Justice Wilson said:

> As a judge of this court I know, and can decide upon the knowledge, that the citizens of Georgia, when they acted upon the large scale of the Union as a part of the "people of the United States," did not surrender the supreme or sovereign power to that State; but, as to the purposes of the Union, retained it to themselves. As to the purposes of the Union, therefore, Georgia is not a sovereign State.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Whoever considers in a combined and comprehensive view the general texture of the Constitution will be satisfied that the people of the United States intended to form themselves into a nation for national purposes. They instituted for such purposes a national government, complete in all its parts, with powers legislative, executive, and judiciary, and in all those powers extending over the whole nation. Is it congruous that, with regard to such purposes, any man or body of men, any person, natural or artificial, should be permitted to claim successfully an entire exemption from the jurisdiction of the National Government?

Mr. Chairman, the dogma of State sovereignty which has reawakened to such vigorous life in this Chamber has borne such bitter fruits and entailed such suffering upon our people that it deserves more particular notice. It should be noticed that the word "sovereignty" cannot be fitly applied to any government in this country. It is not found in our Constitution. It is a feudal word, born of the despotism of the middle ages, and was unknown even in imperial Rome. A "sovereign" is a person, a prince who has subjects that owe him allegiance. There is no one paramount sovereign in the United States. There is no person here who holds any title or authority whatever except the official authority given him by law. Americans are not subjects, but citizens. Our only sovereign is the whole people. To talk about the "inherent sovereignty" of a corporation—an artificial person—is to talk nonsense; and we ought to reform our habit of speech on that subject.

But what do gentlemen mean when they tell us that a State is sovereign? What does sovereignty mean in its accepted use but a political corporation having no superior? Is a State of this Union such a corporation? Let us test it by a few examples drawn from the Constitution. No State of this Union shall make war or conclude a peace. Without the consent of Congress it cannot raise or support an army or a navy. It can make no treaty with a foreign power, nor enter into any agreement or compact with another State. It cannot levy any imposts or duties on imports or exports. It cannot coin money. It cannot regulate commerce. It cannot authorize a single ship to go into commission anywhere on the high seas; if it should that ship would be seized as a pirate or confiscated by the laws of the United States. A State cannot emit bills of credit. It can make no law which makes anything but gold and silver a legal tender. It has no flag except the flag of the Union. And there are many other subjects on which the States are forbidden by the Constitution to legislate. How much inherent sovereignty is left in a corporation which is thus shorn of all these great attributes of sovereignty?

But this is not all. The Supreme Court of the United States may declare null and void any law or any clause of the constitution of a State which happens to be in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States. Again, the States appear as plaintiffs and defendants before the Supreme Court of the United States. They may sue each other; and, until the eleventh amendment was adopted, a citizen might sue a State. These "sovereigns" may all be summoned before their common superior to be judged. And yet they are endowed with supreme, inherent sovereignty?

Again, the government of a State may be absolutely abolished by Congress, in case it is not republican in form. And finally, to cap the climax of this absurd pretension, every right possessed by one of these "sovereign" States, every inherent sovereign right except the single right to equal representation in the Senate, may be taken away without its consent by the vote of two-thirds of Congress and three-fourths of the States. And yet, in spite of all these disabilities, we hear them paraded as independent, sovereign States, the creators of the Union and the dictators of its powers. How inherently "sovereign" must be that State west of the Mississippi which the nation bought and paid for with the public money, and permitted to come into the Union a half century after the Constitution was adopted! And yet we are told that the States are inherently sovereign and created the National Government.

Read a long line of luminous decisions of the Supreme Court. Take the life of Chief-Justice Marshall, that great judge, who found the Constitution paper and made it a power, who found it a skeleton and clothed it with flesh and blood. By his wisdom and genius he made it the potent and beneficent instrument for the government of a great nation. Everywhere he repelled the insidious and dangerous heresy of the sovereignty of the States in the sense in which it has been used in these debates.

Half a century ago this heresy threatened the stability of the nation. The eloquence of Webster and his compeers, and the patriotism and high courage of Andrew Jackson, resisted and for a time destroyed its power; but it continued to live as the evil genius, the incarnate devil of America; and in 1861 it was the fatal phantom that lured eleven millions of our people into rebellion against their Government. Hundreds of thousands of those who took up arms against the Union stubbornly resisted all inducements to that fatal step until they were summoned by the authority of their States.

The dogma of State sovereignty in alliance with chattel slavery finally made its appeal to that court of last resort where the laws are silent and where kings and nations appear in arms for judgment. In that awful court of war two questions were tried. Shall slavery live? And is a State so sovereign that it may nullify the laws and destroy the Union? Those two questions were tried in the thousand battle-fields of the war, and if war ever "legislates," as a leading democrat of Ohio once wisely affirmed, then our war legislated finally upon those subjects and determined beyond all controversy that slavery never should again live in this Republic, and that there is not sovereignty enough in any State to authorize its people either to destroy the Union or nullify its laws.

I am unwilling to believe that any considerable number of Americans will ever again push that doctrine to the same extreme; and yet, in these summer months of 1879, in the Congress of the reunited nation, we find the majority drifting fast and far in the wrong direction by reasserting much of that doctrine which the war ought to have settled forever. And what is more lamentable, such declarations as those which I read at the outset are finding their echoes in many portions of the country which was lately the theater of war. No one can read the proceedings at such recent public celebrations without observing a growing determination to assert that the men who fought against the Union were not engaged in treasonable conspiracy against the nation, but that they did right to fight for their States, and that, in the long run, the lost cause would be victorious. These indications are filling the people with anxiety and indignation; and they are beginning to inquire whether the war has really settled these great questions.

I remind gentlemen on the other side that we have not ourselves revived these issues. We had hoped they were settled beyond recall, and that peace and friendship might be fully restored to our people.

But the truth requires me to say that there is one indispensable ground of agreement on which alone we can stand together, and it is this: The war for the Union was right, everlastingly right, [applause;] and the war against the Union was wrong, forever wrong. However honest and sincere individuals may have been the secession was none the less rebellion and treason. We defend the States in the exercise of their many and important rights, and we defend with equal zeal the rights of the United States. We insist not only that this is a nation but that the power of the Government within its own prescribed sphere operates directly upon the States and upon all the people. We insist that our laws shall be construed by our courts and by our Executive. Any theory which is inconsistent with this doctrine we will resist to the end.

Applying these reflections to the subject of national elections embraced in this bill, I remind gentlemen that this is a national House of Representatives. The people of my congressional district have a right to know that a man elected in New York City is elected honestly and lawfully, for he joins in making laws for forty-five millions of people. Every citizen of the United States has an interest and a right in every election within the Republic where national representatives are chosen. We insist that these laws relating to our national elections shall be enforced, not nullified; shall remain on the statute-books, and not be repealed; and that the just and legal supervision of these elections ought never again to be surrendered by the Government of the United States. By our consent it never shall be surrendered. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill is about to be launched upon its stormy passage. It goes not into unknown waters; for its fellows have been wrecked in the same sea. Its short and disastrous, and I may add ignoble, voyage is likely to be straight to the bottom. [Applause.]

Mr. COBB. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] as much as he desires of the time remaining to me.

Mr. HURD. Mr. Chairman, a session of unusual excitement appears to be drawing to a close. Questions of the greatest interest to the people of the United States have been from the first day until now the subject of discussion, and it seems a proper thing at its termination to inquire into the result of it, and inquire whether or not the action of the majority of this House meets with the approval of the American people.

My colleague from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] who has just taken his seat has seen fit, in answer to the positions which have been maintained by the democratic party in the progress of the argument, to enter upon a disquisition as to the nature of the Federal Government and the relations of the States to that Government under the Constitution which they created. Never in all my studies of the political history of this country, never in all my knowledge of the political debates which have taken place in the Congress of the United States have I heard such views of consolidation advanced as have been suggested to-day by that gentleman.

He advanced the extraordinary proposition that the Union preceded the States, when the seventh article of the Constitution declares:

The ratification of the conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the same.

[Applause on the democratic side of the House.]

But in order that all doubt might be removed upon the subject, that the Constitution and the Union was the creature of the States, it was declared in the tenth amendment of the Constitution:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Nor is the opinion of the highest judicial tribunal in this country wanting upon this proposition. In the case of Lane County vs. Oregon, the following is the decision of Chief-Justice Chase, to be found on page 76 of 7 Wallace:

The people of the United States constitute one nation, under one government, and this government within the scope of the powers with which it is invested is supreme. On the other hand the people of each State compose a State having its own government, and endowed with all the functions essential to separate and independent existence. The States disunited might continue to exist. Without the States in union there could be no such political body as the United States.

But, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of the present discussion it is not necessary to enter into an elaborate consideration of the doctrine of State rights or the powers of the Federal Government. It is sufficient for the bill now under consideration that we should inquire as to whether it is within the scope and the powers of the Federal Government to pass laws to interfere with elections in the States, and only so far as this question is involved do I propose to discuss the doctrine of State rights at all.

At the beginning of this session of Congress the democratic party declared three propositions. We insisted that the Army should be kept away from the polls; that the test oath should be repealed, and that laws should be enacted for the impartial drawing of jurors; and that the Federal Government should not exercise authority over elections held within the States. We insisted and maintained that because of and by virtue of the constitutional provision that the House of Representatives alone shall originate money bills the representatives of the people had the right to insist that the grievances of which they complained should be remedied before appropriations should be made for the support of the Government.

In the discussion which has continued for three months, one of the most earnest and able that has ever occurred in an American Congress, the democratic party has maintained these propositions. It is not necessary to enter into the details of the argument; it is sufficient for my purpose to briefly recapitulate them.

We said that the measures to which we objected were unconstitutional; we said that there was no such person as a voter of the United States as such; that every man who had a right to vote had it because of State authority and under State laws, and that therefore the Federal Government, not creating the voter, had no power to interfere with him in the exercise of his rights of franchise.

We insisted that under the laws, as they now stand, there is no such thing as a national election; that under the provisions of the Constitution in order that there should be a national election it was fundamental that Congress should fix the places, times, and manner of holding such election. In that event there might be a national election, but that is not this case, for in every instance the times, places, and manner of holding elections are fixed by the constitution and the laws of the States, except in a single instance as to the time. The States having exercised power upon the subject there is no occasion for the exercise of power by the United States, and to say that the United States and each State at the same time possess the power of fixing the time, place, and manner of holding elections is to say that two sovereignties possess the power to do the same thing at the same time on the same subject-matter, which is itself an absurdity. We maintain as to the Army that it being a creature of Congress it has no power to be within the limits of the sovereign States except as the Constitution of the United States provides, and then only for the purpose of suppressing domestic insurrection or repelling the armed enemies of the United States, and then only at the request of the Legislature thereof, or the executive of the State if the Legislature be not in session.

More than that. We have referred to decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States approving all these propositions and declaring that the voters were voters of the State and that the Federal Government has nothing to do with them. To these decisions gentlemen on the other side, with one or two exceptions, have absolutely refrained in this debate from referring. In addition to that we urged the argument that the laws we sought to repeal enabled the supervisors to come into the State and interfere with State elections for the selection of State officers, and we also referred to the fact that in the State of New York and other States the greatest outrages had been committed by the arrest of citizens without warrant by officers who had not seen them commit any offense against the laws and who, upon bare suspicion that an offense was intended, had arrested them. We showed from experience how in the South justice had been made a farce; that jurors were drawn in the interests of partisanship and that cases were decided in the interests of partisanship, and that the courts had absolutely failed to administer justice to the people in that great section. We referred to the city of New York, where on an election day more than five thousand American citizens were imprisoned by the authority of supervisors of election and afterward discharged by a judge of the United States court who decided that there was no authority to arrest and that they had been guilty of no crime. More than that, we referred in our argument to the great doctrine of civil liberty and maintained that the measures we sought to repeal were inimical to freedom, un-American in spirit, and in the end would prove subversive of free government.

No more manly, no more dignified, no more logical debate so far as the democratic side of this House is concerned was ever conducted on this floor; but in what way were our arguments treated by gentlemen on the other side of the House? With the exception of half a dozen speeches the pretended answers to our arguments might as well have been made on any other subject as upon the bill now before the House for consideration. When we said that these measures were violative of the Constitution of the United States republican orators replied that on this side of the House the majority were confederate brigadiers who had attempted to overthrow the Constitution of the United States.

When we referred to the fact of the outrages committed on American citizens they replied by citing the outrages committed at Andersonville and other prisons in the South during the war, and when we urged that the powers of the Army should be so limited and qualified that it might not be used to overthrow the liberties of the people, they said, your side was whipped by that Army, and therefore you are opposed to it. Never in all my knowledge has a debate been so honestly conducted as this has been upon our side of the House; never have arguments been more unfairly met than have our arguments by gentlemen on the other side. There are honorable exceptions, of course. It would be invidious to name them, but I will venture to mention the names of two, and I refer to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON.] As the result of this debate bills have been passed and sent to the President of the United States and have been vetoed. The veto power was designed by the Constitution as a power to prevent unconstitutional legislation or hasty or ill-considered legislation or to enable the executive to protect itself against encroachments from other branches of the Government. I defy any gentleman to point me to any argument in the debate upon the adoption of the Constitution which did not give in favor of this provision one or the other of these reasons.

And in the history of this Government, from the day of its foundation until now, the veto power was never before exercised to prevent the repeal of a law or to prevent the enactment of a general appropriation bill. Certainly never before was the veto power exercised to practically take away from one of the two Houses of Congress a power which is conferred upon it separately by the provisions of the Constitution itself. The power to originate bills of revenue is a power which belongs to us, and it is a power which, if the President interferes with it as he has done by this veto, in this case he can absolutely take away from us.

What reasons have been urged for these extraordinary vetoes? Chiefly that the bills we sought to pass took away from the executive authority the power to enforce the law. Because we would not let him use the Army on election day to keep the peace at the polls he said we took away from him the power to enforce the laws.

Sir, the Army is the creature of Congress. The Constitution declares that the Congress may raise an army. The Constitution declares that appropriations for the Army shall not last longer than two years. The Constitution declares that Congress may make rules and regulations for the government of the Army; rules and regulations, "rules" coming first, "regulations" afterward. Therefore the Army is absolutely the creature of Congress. Whether it shall be used to execute the laws or not is for Congress to say and not for the President. [Applause on the democratic side.] He must take the Army as we give it to him, for the purposes which we declare it shall be used for, we being the power to create it.

Strange to say, the President and his advisers and the gentlemen on the other side of the House seem to have lost sight of the constitutional provision which gives the President the power to execute the laws. The language of that instrument is that the President of the United States may call upon the militia of the several States to execute the laws. There is the power given to him for the execution of the laws; not the Army, unless Congress says so, but the militia of the States, because the Constitution so provides.

Never for an instant did our bills interfere with the power of the President over the militia of the States, but only over the Army—this creature of ours. The President has the militia of the States from one end of the United States to the other to aid him in executing the laws on election day or at any other time, at the polls or anywhere else.

What is the result now after the vetoes? Some gentlemen have said that the democratic party has backed down, has surrendered. Sir, when we entered upon this fight we did not expect to gain the victory in a day. When power has for twenty years been intrenching behind all possible legislation, we cannot dislodge it in a moment. We entered upon this contest knowing that many a battle must be fought, many a victory be gained, before the ultimate triumph could be achieved.

In the Forty-fifth Congress we said to the President, your Army—

our Army I mean—our Army shall not be used as a posse comitatus. In the Forty-sixth Congress we have said our Army shall not be used as a part of the police force. And before the Forty-sixth Congress shall have closed its term I say to gentlemen that we will have taken from the statute-book every law which proposes to use this creature of ours at the polls to intimidate American citizens in the exercise of their highest prerogative. [Great applause on the democratic side.]

I would have gentlemen on the other side and the country remember that there has been no surrender of the principle with which we began this contest. We claim that the Representatives of the people, by virtue of their power to originate appropriation bills, can secure redress of their grievances by stopping the supplies for the support of the Government, either of the President or of any other branch of the Government, unless our views on the subjects to which the appropriations relate are carried out. I say to gentlemen on the other side and to the country that so long as the democratic party is in a majority in this House it will never surrender that grand, healthful power which more than any other made England a free nation, and which was put into our Constitution in order that the legislative authority might have a wholesome method of controlling executive power.

Mr. Chairman, this extra session has made up the issue between the two parties. The democratic party declare that the Army shall be kept from the polls; that juries shall be impartially drawn; that the test oath shall be repealed, and that the Federal authority shall not interfere in elections within the States. Upon that question the republican party takes issue with us. Confidently appealing only to the patriotism of the country, the democratic party goes into this contest. Never in all the history of this land have more important questions been submitted to the American people for their determination. They relate to the pure administration of justice; they concern the gravest questions of constitutional law; they affect the fundamental principles of civil liberty. Every man who runs for any office in any State and every citizen who goes to the polls to deposit his ballot is interested. The whole method of ascertaining the popular will in the Republic is involved in the issue.

So far-reaching are these principles that if upon this issue the republican party shall be succesful, then all the power over elections in States would be drawn to the central government. The States would lose their places in the federative system, and whether the Army shall be used at the polls or not would be a question not of right and of constitutional law but of executive discretion. Such a result means the end of the republic and the uplifting of the empire. Can there be any doubt as to a controversy like this? In Russia where absolute despotism silences individual opinion, it might be doubtful. In Germany where imperial power sustains itself by an immense standing army, it might be doubtful. In France where the people under monarchs and emperors for ages have slumbered, it might be doubtful. But here in free America, with the traditions of our English ancestors, and with the sacrifices and triumphs of our American forefathers in behalf of civil liberty, it cannot be doubtful. [Applause.] Shall civil liberty perish upon its own threshhold and by its own fireside? Shall the beacon-light which has shown from our shores for the encouragement of struggling freemen everywhere flicker in its socket and go out even as they are gazing upon it? Shall the sun of free government in this continent ere it reaches the meridian sink into night? Shall the shadow and the cloud of the Army darken our free fields and free rivers and free lakes and free prairies, and pollute the air so that a freeman can not breathe it? The century of triumph just ended protests; the bright prospects of our future protest; the hopes of the world protest; and what is practically of more value, the democratic party, with its majority of half a million of American people, protests.

Gentlemen, the contest will soon begin. Ay, it has already begun. I hear the whispering of American inquiry; I hear the mutterings of Anglo-Saxon resolve. I hear the tread of the legions forming, with the banner of civil liberty above them. The contest has already begun; and God give victory to freedom and the right! [Loud applause.]

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes of the time allowed by the House for general debate remains unexpired.

Mr. COBB. I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS.]

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not care to occupy it. Let us have a vote.

Mr. COBB. I yield, then, to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire for a moment only to call attention to the suggestion made by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] that the Union is older than the States. Within five minutes I cannot, of course, enter into any elaborate argument. I desire only to call attention to a few expressions in the Declaration of Independence, the articles of confederation, and the Constitution of the United States.

I have no issue with the gentleman from Ohio on the question where sovereignty resides. I agree with him that it resides in the people of the United States. But certain attributes of sovereignty are by the people, through their constitutions, conferred upon the States and upon the Federal Government. The powers not conferred upon the Federal Government by the Constitution of the United States were reserved to the States respectively or to the people, while the powers not conferred upon the State governments by the respective State constitutions are reserved to the people themselves.

But that is a little apart from the point I wish to make. I confess that once before some years ago I was a good deal surprised by the annunciation of a great statesman that the Union was older than the States. That this declaration should now be made again surprises me once more, especially when made by a gentleman of such distinguished ability and learning as the gentleman from Ohio. The Declaration of Independence contains this language:

> We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America in general congress assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do in the name and by the authority of the good people of these colonies, solemnly publish and declare that the United Colonies are and of a right ought to be free and independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connections between them and the State of Great Britain is and ought to be totally dissolved, and that as free and independent States they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do.

Here, sir, the colonies were converted into States. These States are declared to be "independent States," with all the powers and rights and sovereignty of independent States.

I refer next to the articles of confederation. These are entitled "Articles of confederation and perpetual union between the States." Articles of union! Union of what? Union of the States which existed, to form the United States, created through the agency of these States. What other intelligent conclusion can be reached?

Mr. STEPHENS. Read the clause in which the States are named.

Mr. REAGAN. I read the opening paragraph of these articles of confederation.

> To all to whom these presents shall come, we the undersigned delegates of the States affixed to our names, send greeting. Whereas, the delegates of the United States of America in Congress assembled did on the 15th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1777, and in the second year of the Independence of America, agree to certain articles of confederation and perpetual union between the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, in the words following.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the House to give me about five minutes more. I want to refer to two or three passages in the articles of confederation and the Constitution of the United States. I shall not enter into any argument.

Mr. GARFIELD. If agreeable to the gentleman from Texas, the five minutes debate can now begin. I will move to strike out the last word of the first section, and yield the floor to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not yet been read.

Mr. GARFIELD. That arrangement might be made by common agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that will be the understanding. The Clerk will read the first paragraph of the bill, after which the gentleman from Texas will be regarded as entitled to the floor.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $600,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, of the fees of United States marshals and their general deputies. And no part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any compensation, fees, or expenses under any of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment, employment, or payment of general or special deputy marshals for services in connection with registration or elections on election day.

Mr. REAGAN. The preamble to the articles of confederation and the whole of the articles or those parts of them which it may be necessary to refer to in this connection, show that they were articles entered into by the representatives of the different States, as States, for the purpose of enabling them to conduct the common defense and preserve the welfare of these States lately colonies of Great Britain. The second of the articles of confederation may be referred to with profit:

> Each State retains its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right which is not by this confederation expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled.

Retain what? Retain from the powers to be delegated to the Congress of the United States, the States united, because the pre-existing States were combined together in union for this purpose. How, then, can the thing created, the Union, be older than the elements, the States, which combined, united together form that Union?

But, sir, the third article of confederation is as follows:

> The said States hereby severally enter into a firm league of friendship with each other—

That was before the Union had been proclaimed in the articles of confederation, in the very articles which created the first Union—> for their common defense, the security of their liberties, and their mutual and general welfare, binding themselves to assist each other, against all force offered to, or attacks made upon them, or any of them, on account of religion, sovereignty, trade, or any other pretense whatever.

I have not time, sir, to comment on this. The fourth article goes with the same general idea indicating the same existence of the States which had formed the confederation.

I cannot comment in the five minutes allowed me, but I call attention to the first section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States:

All legislative powers herein granted—

Granted by whom? By the States that sent their representatives to the convention which formed this Constitution.

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Why, sir, the Constitution was being formed, which was the bond of union, which was the forming of the Union itself by the representatives from the pre-existing free and independent States, so declared by the Declaration of Independence, with the declaration repeatedly reiterated in the articles of confederation. I regret I have no time to comment. I will call attention to another paragraph or two. Article 7 of the Constitution provides:

The ratification of the conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the same.

Showing that the agency of pre-existing States was invoked to secure the establishment of the Union and to form what is called the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD rose.

Mr. REAGAN. Just one moment more. Before the gentleman from Ohio proceeds I desire to call attention to another article of the Constitution of the United States. In the tenth article of amendment to the Constitution it is provided:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Mr. GARFIELD. Two points were made by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. HURD] to which I desire to call attention. To strengthen his position, that the United States has no voters, he has quoted, as other gentlemen have quoted, the case of Minor vs. Happersett, 21 Wallace, page 170.

The question before the court in that case was whether a provision in the State constitution which confines the right of voting to male citizens of the United States is a violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution. The court decided that it was not, and in delivering his opinion the chief-justice took occasion to say that "the United States has no voters in the States, of its own creation." Now, all the gentlemen on the other side who have quoted this decision have left out the words "of its own creation," which makes a very essential difference. The Constitution of the United States declares who shall vote for members of Congress, and it adopts the great body of voters whose qualifications may be or have been prescribed by the laws of the States. The power of adoption is no less a great governmental power than the power of creation.

But the second point to which I wish to refer, and which has been made by several gentlemen, and very markedly by my colleague, [Mr. HURD,] is this: He says that the contemporaneous construction of that clause of the Constitution which provides that Congress may at any time make or alter the regulations in regard to the time, place, and manner of holding elections has determined that Congress can never exercise that right so long as the States make provisions for it. So long as the States do not neglect or refuse to act, or are not prevented by rebellion or war from acting, it was their exclusive right to control the subject. That is what my colleague says. That is what is said in the RECORD of June 3 by a distinguished member of the Senate.

Now, mark how plain a tale shall put that down.

On the 21st day of August, 1789, in the first House of Representatives that ever met, Mr. Burke, a member from South Carolina, offered the following as one of the amendments to the Constitution. I will read it:

Congress shall not alter, modify, or interfere in the times, places, or manner of holding elections of Senators or Representatives, except when any State shall refuse or neglect, or be unable by invasion or rebellion to make such elections.

That was the very proposition which my colleague says is the meaning of the Constitution as it now stands. This amendment was offered in a House of Representatives nearly one-half of whose membership was made up of men who were in the convention that framed the Constitution. That amendment was debated; and I hold in my hand the brief record of the debate, Fisher Ames, of Massachusetts, approving of the clause as it now stands:

He thought this one of the most justifiable of all of the powers of Congress. It was essential to a body representing the whole community that they should have power to regulate their own elections, in order to secure a representation from every part, and prevent any improper regulations, calculated to answer party purposes only. It is a solecism in politics to let others judge for them, and is a departure from the principles upon which the Constitution was founded. * * * He thought no Legislature was without the power to determine the mode of its own appointment; * * * that such an amendment as was now proposed would alter the Constitution; it would vest the supreme authority in places where it was never contemplated.

Mr. Madison was willing to make every amendment that was required by the States which did not tend to destroy the principles and efficacy of the Constitution; he conceived that the proposed amendment would have that tendency, he was therefore opposed to it.

Mr. Sherman observed that the convention was very unanimous in passing this clause; that it was an important provision, and if it was resigned it would tend to subvert the Government.

Mr. Goodhue hoped the amendment never would obtain. * * * Now, rather than this amendment should take effect, he would vote against all that had been agreed to. His greatest apprehensions were that the State governments would oppose and thwart the general one to such a degree as finally to overturn it. Now, to guard against this evil, he wished the Federal Government to possess every power necessary to its existence.

After a full debate, in which the doctrine of State rights was completely overwhelmed so far as this subject was concerned, the vote was taken and 23 voted in favor of the amendment, and 28 voted against it. It did not get even a majority, much less a two-thirds vote in the House; and it never was called up in the Senate at all.

Now who were the men that voted against it? Let me read some of their honored names; Fisher Ames, of Massachusetts; Charles Carroll, of Carrollton; Clymer, of Pennsylvania, whose distinguished descendant is a member of this House; Fitzsimmons, of Pennsylvania; Muhlenberg, of Pennsylvania, who was the Speaker of the first House of Representatives; Lee and Madison, of Virginia; Trumbull and Sherman, of Connecticut—all those great names are recorded against the very construction of the Constitution which my colleague defends as the correct interpretation of the existing clause on that subject. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. COX. The gentleman quotes from some of the old records on matters as to the abstract nature of the Constitution. I propose to quote something more fresh, something more recent.

In March, 1876, we had a vote upon some resolutions here, on which the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] however, did not vote, but some gentlemen on the other side of the House did—some one way, and some the other.

I propose to show, in answer to this discussion on abstract politics, what the gentlemen on the other side of the House since the civil war voted to be the nature of our Constitution, and on the question as to whether we were a nation or not. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read some resolutions offered by myself in March, 1876. I wanted the House to agree to those resolutions, and many republican members and all the confederate brigadiers voted for them.

Mr. GARFIELD. How many of them were there in 1867?

Mr. COX. I said in 1876.

Mr. GARFIELD. I misunderstood the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the people of the United States constitute a nation in the sense, to the extent, and for the purposes defined in the Federal Constitution.

Resolved, That the Government of the United States is a Federal Union, and was formed by the people of the several States in their sovereign capacity; that the rights and powers of the United States Government are defined and limited by the Federal Constitution, and these rights and powers cannot be enlarged nor diminished except by an amendment to the Constitution.

Resolved, That the rights of the States have the same sanction and security in the Constitution as the rights and powers of the Federal Government, and that local domestic government by the several States within the limits of the Constitution is absolutely necessary for the preservation of the liberties of the citizen and the continuance of our republican system of government.

Resolved, That the doctrine that a State has a right to secede from the Union is in conflict with the idea of a "perpetual union" as contemplated by the Constitution and should be regarded as being forever extinguished by the results of the recent civil conflict.

Mr. COX. Now, why do not the gentlemen on the other side take that as an honorable thing?

Mr. CONGER. What was the date on which these resolutions were adopted?

Mr. COX. On March 13, 1876; and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] voted against them.

The following are the names of those who voted for and against the resolutions, and also those who did not vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Bass, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Cutler, Davy, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durand, Eden, Ellis, Faulkner, Felton, Forney, Fort, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hendee, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Hunton, Hurd, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Kelley, Knott, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Luttrell, Lynde, L. A. Mackey, Maish, McDill, McFarland, Meade, Milliken, Morgan, Morrison, Neal, New, O'Brien, O'Dell, Parsons, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Piper, Poppleton, Potter, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Throckmorton, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Wike, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, James Wilson, Woodburn, Yeates, and Young—150.

NAYS—Messrs. John H. Baker, Blaine, Bradley, Horatio C. Burchard, Conger, Denison, Dunnell, Egbert, Evans, Farwell, Foster, Hoar, Hubbell, Hyman, Lapham, Lawrence, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, Monroe, Nash, Norton, Oliver, Packer, Page, Plaisted, Platt, Purman, Robinson, Rusk, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, Thornburgh, Van Vorhes, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, White, Andrew Williams, Alan Wood, jr., and Woodworth—42.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Bagby, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Barnum, Bell, Blair, Bliss, Bradford, William R. Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Candler, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Crapo, Crounse, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Dobbins, Durham, Eames, Ely, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Gunter, Hale, Haralson, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Henderson, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoge, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurlbut, Frank Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Ketcham, Kimball, King, Lamar, Lane, Edmund W. M. Mackey, McMahon, Metcalfe, Miller, Mills, Money, Morey, Mutchler, O'Neill, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Sobieski Ross, Schumaker, Siemons, A. Herr Smith, Springer, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Waldron, Gilbert C. Walker, Walls, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, and Fernando Wood—97.

I find that there are but a half dozen republican gentlemen who voted for these resolutions, and the whole body of the democratic party in the House in the Forty-fourth Congress voted for them, including the confederate brigadiers, who said that the war was ended and secession was done, perpetual Union wiped it all out, now then and forever.

Who voted "no?" Not the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] for he did not cast his vote. The gentleman from Maine, Mr. Hale, then a member of the House, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] voted "no." He held that we were not a nation in that sense. He held that secession was still extant, and that the Union was not perpetual.

I ask every man on both sides of the House to see what a position the other side of the House is in, when they undertake now to define what is the abstract nature of the Federal system.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "six," in line 2 of the bill, and insert "seven;" so that it will read "$700,000." I make the motion pro forma in order to reply to some remarks just made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] have not replied.

I must be brief, for I have only five minutes. I intend only to correct some errors of fact in history into which the distinguished gentleman fell in the remarks he made.

First, as to the Declaration of Independence. He said it was made by the sovereign people, as I understood him, of the colonies, through their delegates appointed for that purpose, and thus in effect made by the mass of the people of the colonies in one political body. Now, the record is in these words:

> In Congress, July 4, 1776, the unanimous declaration of the thirteen United States of America.

How could he say the Union was older than the States. The truth is they were twin-born. The States united in forming the Union. The declaration of the independence of each was jointly made by the whole of the original thirteen, and the articles of confederation made soon after, as quoted by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] affirmed the sovereignty of each. Can those records be ignored or forgotten?

Again, the gentleman from Ohio referred to a case decided in the Supreme Court—the case of Chisholm vs. the State of Georgia—as settling the point of his assumption that the States were never sovereign. The sequel of that decision was the eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which is in these words:

> The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State or by citizens or subjects of any foreign State.

Since that amendment of the Constitution the decisions of the Supreme Court have been in conformity to it, and in accordance with the views of Webster in his letter to the Barings, that a State of this Union is no more amenable to a suit in court than the United States or Great Britain, or any other sovereign power.

Again, slavery was not abolished by the General or Federal Government, or nation so called, but by the States acting severally or separately. The thirteenth amendment of the Constitution was not proclaimed as part of the Constitution until it was held to have been duly ratified by three-fourths of the States, as provided by that instrument. Nor have the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution changed the nature or character of the Federal Government. This has been distinctly asserted by the Supreme Court. It was so decided in the celebrated Louisiana Slaughter-house cases. Additional restraints have been put upon the States by their own assumed action. Whether these amendments were sanctioned by the voluntary action of three-fourths of the States or not, yet the proclamation of the validity of these amendments was based upon the assumption that they were so ratified. The federative character of the Government has not been changed by them. This is the whole of it.

Again, the gentleman alluded to what Mr. Pinckney said in the South Carolina convention. The gentleman quoted correctly the remarks of Mr. Pinckney, but the South Carolina convention did not sustain his position. In their ratification of the Constitution of the United States they expressly affirmed the contrary, as the protocol of their ratification, which I have here, expressly declares. In that protocol they declare that the right to control their State elections should ever be maintained as all sovereign States have a right to control them.

Again, the gentleman went on to say that the several States cannot coin money. This was asserted as evidence that they were never sovereign. Sir, they could coin money until 1787, when they entered into a covenant with each other that the United States should alone coin money. They voluntarily put this restriction in the Constitution upon their sovereignty in this particular. During the revolutionary struggle, under the first articles of confederation, the States could coin money.

So in regard to the regulation of commerce under the first articles of union, the States each separately did regulate commerce. What was the first impulse to changing and remodeling these first articles of confederation entered into soon after the Declaration of Independence? It sprang from the fact that each State, as a sovereign power, did regulate commerce for itself. New York had her regulations of commerce; Virginia had her regulations, Maryland, and all the States had their several and different regulations. The first convention at Annapolis at the instance of Virginia was for the purpose of getting rid of these different regulations of commerce, and so remodeling the articles of union as to give the regulation of foreign commerce to all the States in Congress assembled.

Again, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] quoted Judge Marshall as authority for his doctrine that the States were never sovereign. Now, Judge Marshall expressly said, in the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, that the States under the articles of confederation were completely sovereign and independent.

Another thing. The gentleman spoke of our being a nation. Mr. Chairman, we are a nation, the grandest nation that ever existed. We are a nation of States; we present a government the like of which never was conceived by statesmen or philosophers in past ages. It is a wonderful system, a complex nation; one in which members are not subjects, but each is an integral and equal part of the whole.

Lord Brougham said of our matchless system that "it is the very greatest refinement in social policy to which any state of circumstances has ever given rise or to which any age has ever given birth."

We are indeed, Mr. Chairman, a nation, and have ever been since the first articles of union were entered into by the States. Our Union is one of States, and our nation is a nation, not of individuals, but a nation of States, or, if you please, a nation of nations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. On the 13th of March, 1876, the very same day that the resolutions referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] were introduced, and but a few minutes before those resolutions were presented, and when the gentleman from New York was present, this resolution was offered in this House:

> Resolved, That the people of the United States constitute one nation and not a mere confederacy of States or nations; that the Constitution was formed by the people acting in their primary and individual capacity through their delegates thereto duly constituted; that the Government under the Constitution is one of the people, by the people, and for the people; that in its appropriate sphere the Government of this nation is sovereign and supreme; that in its nature it is permanent and indissoluble except by the act and consent of the whole people; that no State has the right or authority to judge of the constitutionality of the laws enacted by it, and to nullify or resist the execution of the same; and that all overt acts by any State or the people thereof of secession therefrom, or of rebellion against the same, constitute treason; and that the late war of the rebellion for the dismemberment of the Union was causeless and indefensible on any theory of right or constitutional law.

Now, sir, let gentlemen say what they will about how southern gentlemen and democrats voted, there is a proposition which they to-day admit in theory and say they never denied. Yet on the record of the yeas and nays upon that resolution every democrat who then voted in this House voted against the adoption of that resolution. My friend from New York [Mr. COX] immediately after the resolution was read said:

> I hope this resolution will be referred. It may be very good; but it will take up a good deal of time.

The gentleman was there at the very moment the reading of the resolution was completed. Just before the yeas and nays were called upon the resolution, and after they were ordered, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] said:

> I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is this motion divisible?

But when the representatives of the people were called upon to vote for or against a proposition which was intended to define and settle the powers of this Government and the States of this Government and people as a nation, the gentleman from New York did not vote. Of the gentlemen alluded to just now by the gentleman from New York, very uncourteously I thought, as brigadiers, as confederate brigadiers, reviving the old passions of the war, [laughter,] seventy-five voted against that resolution, and are so recorded. One hundred and seventeen, including the gentleman from New York, who made the last remark before the vote was taken and almost the first remark after the vote, and therefore he was here, did not vote upon that proposition. The gentleman from New York voted neither yea nor nay. But seventy-five gentlemen then in this House, many of whom are now before me, voted "no" on that plain, clear, distinct proposition. I shall ask to have printed with my remarks the vote upon that resolution.

The vote is as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, John H. Baker, Ballou, Bass, Blaine, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Danford, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durand, Eames, Evans, Farwell, Fort, Foster, Frost, Goodin, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Haymond, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hyman, Jenks, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Nash, New, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, James B. Reilly, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stevenson, Teese, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, White, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Woodburn, and Woodworth—97.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bright, John Young Brown, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Cook, Cowan, Culberson, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Ellis, Faulkner, Felton, Forney, Franklin, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, Hartridge, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hooker, House, Hunton, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Meade, Milliken, Mutchler, Odell, Parsons, Payne, John F. Philips, Piper, Rea, Reagan, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, William E. Smith, Stone, Terry, Throckmorton, Tucker, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Ward, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Yeates, and Young—75.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Banks, Banning, Barnum, Bell, Blair, Bliss, Bradford, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cox, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Darrall, Davis, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Ely, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartzell, Hatcher, Hays, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoge, Holman, Hopkins, Hurlbut, Frank Jones, Ketchum, Kimball, King, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lane, Luttrell, Lynde, Edmund W. M. Mackey, L. A. Mackey, Maish, McFarland, McMahon, Metcalfe, Mills, Money, Morey, Morgan, Morrison, Neal, O'Brien, Poppleton, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Randall, John Reilly, Roberts, Sobieski Ross, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Slemons, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stenger, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Thompson, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Turney, Waldron, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walls, Walsh, Warren, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, James Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, and Fernando Wood—117.

Now, what is the difference between that resolution and the one for which gentlemen on the democratic side did vote, and for which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] untruly—unintentionally perhaps—said that I voted? I find my name recorded in the negative on a proposition which that gentleman introduced a few moments after the vote which I have referred to.

Mr. COX. How was it untrue, if I quoted you right? You voted "no."

Mr. CONGER. I understood the gentleman to say I voted for the proposition.

Mr. COX. I said you voted against it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has expired, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. STEPHENS withdrew his formal amendment.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My colleague from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is troubled about recent utterances on this floor, he says, and he thinks he sees the same danger that threatened us in 1860 in the dogmas of State rights, State sovereignty, nullification, &c.

Mr. Chairman, my colleague is unnecessarily alarmed. There have been two extreme parties in this country on the doctrine of State rights, one denying that the States have any rights worth mentioning and the other pushing the rights of the States to the extremes of nullification and secession. Nullification has been taught and practiced in all sections of the country and by most if not all parties; but it has never met with much practical success, and was long ago abandoned as an abstraction even by those who believed in it. It consisted in the claim made that a Federal law could be abrogated or nullified by the action of a State Legislature or a State convention. Nobody claims or urges this doctrine now. I know that my colleague uses the term "nullifier" as a term of reproach to us because we do not appropriate money for what we believe to be unconstitutional purposes. But it is our right and our duty as legislators to refuse money, which is under our legislative control, to these improper uses.

Secession, which was the second resort of the extreme State-rights men, had a long, severe, and bloody trial. It was not successful. It, too, had been taught in all sections and by nearly all parties. But only the South had the courage of its convictions on this point, and after four years of fearful war it was vanquished. As my colleague says, war legislated, and many of the Southern States in their new constitutions have declared for an indissoluble Union and against secession and nullification. They have repeatedly done so by their Representatives upon this floor.

Now, stripped of secession and nullification, its only dangerous extremes, the doctrine of State rights cannot but be valuable to this country. It will be particularly so to great States like Ohio, New York, and Pennsylvania. We want to attend to our own domestic affairs. We do not want constant Federal interference. Too much will lead to trouble.

My colleague takes exception to the use of the term "sovereignty" as applied to the States, and even to the Federal Government. I do not see why. But he is specially opposed to its use as applied to the States. Now, I have great respect for my colleague. But there are other republican statesmen beside himself. Some of them have found their way upon the Supreme Bench of the United States. And these questions have come before them. What have they decided? My colleague from Ohio [Mr. HURD] has already alluded to one of their decisions. Let me give the committee an extract from several others. I quote from Collector vs. Day, 11 Wallace, page 124:

> It is a familiar rule of construction of the Constitution of the Union that the sovereign powers vested in the State governments by their respective constitutions remained unaltered and unimpaired, except so far as they were granted to the Government of the United States.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The General Government and the States, although both exist within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other within their respective spheres.

A MEMBER. What decision is that?

Mr. MCMAHON. It is a decision in the case of the Collector vs. Day, in which it was held that the United States Government cannot levy a tax upon the salary of a State officer, because such officer is the representative of a sovereign government, and if such taxation were admissible, the General Government might tax the State government out of existence.

Let me quote now from a decision by Chief-Justice Waite in the Supreme Court of the United States in the recent case of the United States vs. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. Rpts., page 553:

> The rights of life and personal liberty are natural rights of man. "To secure these rights," says the Declaration of Independence, "governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." The very highest duty of the States, when they entered into the Union under the Constitution, was to protect all persons within their boundaries in the enjoyment of these "inalienable rights with which they were endowed by their Creator." Sovereignty, for this purpose, rests alone with the States. It is no more the duty or within the power of the United States to punish for a conspiracy to falsely imprison or murder within a State, than it would be to punish for false imprisonment or murder itself.

In both of the above decisions the sovereignty of the States in their respective spheres is most clearly announced. Such utterances upon this floor my colleague considers dangerous; yet it is the settled law of the land.

Now, whom am I to follow, Mr. Chairman? My training as a lawyer compels me to give great weight to the repeated declarations of the Supreme Court of the United States in precisely the language I have quoted. In all the fluctuations of party upon that bench, from the beginning of the Government to the present time, there has been no other doctrine. Shall the people surrender this at the bidding of my colleague? What have they to gain in so doing? Nothing whatever. Nullification and secession are dead and buried. No resurrection exists for either doctrine. Hence we have the simple and pure doctrine of the fathers, that each government is supreme within its sphere; and the real rights of the one will be as sacred to the true patriot as those of the other.

My colleague makes special application of his denunciation of the doctrine of State rights to our denial of the right of Congress to interfere in elections. We have argued that there are no United States voters. This is a heresy, says my colleague—and a dangerous one. Now, this question has been before the Supreme Court of the United States in several cases. After the late amendments to the Constitution were adopted, there was a respectable lady in Missouri, by name Mrs. Virginia Minor, who reasoned as my colleague does. She thought that the right to vote was one of the rights of a United States citizen—she was a citizen, and therefore entitled to vote. The law of Missouri did not permit her. She took her case to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the decision is reported in 21 Wallace, against her claim. The following extract will throw down the argument of my colleague:

> If the right of suffrage is one of the necessary privileges of a citizen of the United States, then the constitution and laws of Missouri confining it to men are in violation of the Constitution of the United States, as amended, and consequently void. The direct question is therefore presented whether all citizens are necessarily voters. The Constitution does not define the privileges and immunities of citizens. For that definition we must look elsewhere. In this case we need not determine what they are, but only whether suffrage is necessarily one of them. It certainly is nowhere made so in express terms. The United States has no voters in the States of its own creation. The elective officers of the United States are all elected directly or indirectly by State voters.

Can language be more explicit? "There are no United States voters," says the Court, "and all officers of the United States are elected by State voters." This decision of the court has been several times confirmed recently; and I think my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] carried this doctrine to a very great extreme himself, as a member of the electoral commission, when he joined in numerous decisions refusing to go behind the certificates of State officers and to open up on any charge the election for electors.

Mr. Chairman, the republican party must find some other tack upon which to attempt their usual game of presuming upon the ignorance of the voters. Gentlemen, you may cry nullification, secession, revolution, but the points in this controversy are few and simple and easily understood.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBB. I do not want to cut off this debate; but I desire to say to gentlemen on the other side that we are very anxious to have this bill passed as speedily as possible. I am informed by Senators that if the bill be sent to that body within an hour, it can be passed there to-day, so as to go to the President this evening. I make this announcement so that gentlemen may bring this discussion to a close as soon as possible.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to make one correction. I find that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NEW] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. STEVENSON,] members of the present House, voted for the resolution which I read. I think I inadvertently said that no gentleman on the democratic side voted in the affirmative. I wish to be fair; and I make this correction.

Mr. HAWLEY. The fate of this bill depends upon the difference of opinion among us as to the right of the National Government to protect the people in their right to elect national representatives. It is denied on that side of the House that there are any national voters, and it is affirmed on this side there are such. It is denied there that the National Government is under any obligations whatever to take care that the people are protected in their right of electing representatives. That is emphatically denied there; it is emphatically asserted here.

Many gentlemen on the other side have said that the National Government has made no voters and makes none. I am well aware of the bearing of a decision of the Supreme Court in that direction. Nevertheless as a legislator I claim the right to believe that the National Government has made voters. The Constitution of the United States says that electors of this House of Representatives in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. Now simply because the State Legislature defines the qualifications of those who vote for its most numerous branch those gentlemen affirm that the States give those men the right to elect members of the national House of Representatives. Let me illustrate.

There are numbers of persons holding high offices in the country who have a right to the privileges of this Hall. We say that the governors of the several States while in office shall have the right to come in here and enjoy the privileges of the floor. Who gives them that right? Those who elect them governors or this House in making its rules? I claim that to be a precisely analogous case. Who gives the members of the Supreme Court of the United States the right to come in upon this floor? This House of Representatives and nobody else. The President and the Senate of the United States by making judges bring them within the reach of our rules. So the State Legislatures in defining the qualifications of those who may elect the most numerous branch, bring those citizens within the reach of this grander power of the National Government. A State Legislature can prevent nobody from voting for Representatives in Congress who has a right to vote for the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. Nor can a State Legislature make the list of electors of Congressmen greater than the list of electors of the lower house of the Legislature. It would be utterly in vain for a State Legislature to say that a certain portion of these men who may vote for the most numerous branch of the State Legislature shall not have a right to vote for members of Congress. Their right to say this is cut off by this constitutional provision. No State constitution, no State statute pretends to say who may vote for members of this House.

It seems to me, then, absolutely unquestionable that the right to vote for members of this House is given by the national Constitution, and cannot be taken away by any inferior power. But the right and the duty of protecting all citizens in the exercise of that right is absolutely indispensable to a national existence. Gentlemen freely acknowledge that this is a nation. Gentlemen upon both sides acknowledge it. Nobody can deny, whatever we may say about some minor differences, that as a nation the United States Government has all the chief elements of sovereignty. But having that national power, that national sovereignty, if it be a sovereignty worth naming, it must have the right to defend and protect itself, in order to continue its national existence. The name of national sovereignty is utterly useless and idle unless it can protect those people who elect this national House of Representatives. That I understand to be substantially the republican doctrine; not that in the failure of a State to make proper regulations for holding an election we can come in and protect the people in voting. We say it is not only the privilege, but emphatically the constitutional duty of the National Government to protect the people in their right to vote at national elections. Otherwise, as Madison, Hamilton, and others have argued, a condition of the public sentiment unfavorable to the National Government might prevent the people from electing Representatives. The people of a whole State might fail to elect; those of many States—of a section—might fail to do so. Those holding the power in a State, though in a small minority, might prevent the people from electing national Representatives. Those citizens, few or many, who desire to vote for Representatives in the National Government, should be guided and protected in so doing by the whole power of the nation though the State government might fail to provide the means or even forbid the voting.

I want to speak for a moment, before my five minutes expire, of the bearing of this bill on depriving the United States Government of the power of employing these officers in the enforcement of its laws. If this bill shall fail—it has been tried before, and we have no reason to expect it will become a law—if it shall fail to become a law and you fail to appropriate for marshals, you do what is analogous to depriving a State of every sheriff and deputy sheriff and constable and render it practically impossible to enforce the collection of duties or internal revenue, save through the charity of marshals and deputies working upon faith.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBB. I move the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. GILLETTE. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion just now. I believe there are only two or three other gentlemen who desire to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is mistaken. The Chair has a long list of gentlemen who desire to speak.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. FINLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriations to pay the fees of United States marshals and their general deputies, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. COBB. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriations to pay the fees of United States marshals and their general deputies. Pending that motion, I move that all debate on the pending section and amendments thereto be limited to one minute.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriations to pay the fees of United States marshals and their general deputies.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the first section from the end of the seventh line, and insert:

That title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment, employment, or payment of general or special deputy marshals be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. NICHOLLS. This question has been so thoroughly discussed that I do not now desire to say anything.

The question was taken; and on a division there were ayes 4, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the whole of the section after line 7, as follows:

And no part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any compensation, fees, or expenses under any of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment, employment, or payment of general or special deputy marshals for services in connection with registration or elections on election day.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 40, noes 62.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the second section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sums appropriated in this act for the persons and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service for the year ending June 30, 1880; and no Department or officer of the Government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money under any of the provisions of title 26 mentioned in section 1 of this act until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law; and that any officer of the Government or any other person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or of sections 3678, 3679, 3680, 3681, 3682, 3683, and 3690 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, to come in at the end of the second section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nothing herein contained shall exempt any of said officers from punishment by impeachment as now provided by law.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GILLETTE. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] has just intimated that this session was about drawing to a close, and we have already voted upon one resolution to adjourn at once. If it closes now it will close just as the last Congress closed, just as this Congress opened, with these walls echoing back speeches calculated to inflame anew the prejudices and sectional issues of the war, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] says plainly that this contest is to continue indefinitely, and the retorts on this side give force to his prediction. I wish to protest against the immediate adjournment of this House. This session has lasted over three months, and from its earliest hour our ears have tingled with ceaseless demands from leading metropolitan papers and prominent republicans on this floor that we adjourn. One would think the salvation of the country, the restoration of business, the long-promised return of prosperity, which like an ignis fatuus we have followed desperately for six years, would come to the country if this Congress would only adjourn. The most disrespectful language has been heaped upon us by the organs and agents of Wall street rings, national-bank and other monopolies.

In 1876 we were advised that prosperity never came during presidential campaigns, but always followed them. With outstretched hands and upturned faces the people waited until after election, when told that the returns were not satisfactory, and all would be well after the presidential commission had done its work. With bated breath the people waited until the most notorious count of all time was made, but prosperity did not follow. We were then assured that resumption was the one thing needful; if we could only hold out until the Almighty wheeled in January 1, 1879, and John Sherman wheeled in a mountain of gold and silver coin in return for a mountain of new coin bonds the commercial millenium would surely come. But January 1, 1879, has come and gone, the piles of gold and silver have arrived, the people's interest-bearing bonds are safely in the hands of the determined advocates of bond inflation and money contraction, but the good time promised does not come, and the prophets now try to make it appear that this session of Congress is the lion in the way.

The majority of these two Houses, for the first time in eighteen years, is democratic, and as the people had been promised by this party a change of policy and the repeal of the ruinous financial legislation of the republican party, the monopolies and privileged classes were alarmed, and hence the cry of their organs against this session and for immediate adjournment. If we now adjourn, all their fears are shown to be groundless, and all the hopes of the wronged, robbed laborers and producers of the land are shown to be equally groundless. By no act of this democratic Congress have we ever cried "hands off!" to the corporations and privileged classes whose hands are elbow-deep in the pockets of the people.

Bills have been introduced in profusion that would, if passed, at once relieve our country and bring hope and courage to forty millions of people by reviving our depressed industries. All but one of them have been quietly buried in that sepulcher of American hopes, the committees of this House. That one, the silver bill, after being shorn of its virtues, and ruined as a free coinage measure, leaving the gold standard practically undisturbed, was quietly laid in its little bed by the Senate Finance Committee, with the consent of the democratic Senate, a complete surrender to Wall street! Never in the history of the country did our Republic require more careful, nursing legislation than now. Our very civilization is in jeopardy. No prior Congress ever met having more solemn, more necessary work to do.

I appeal to the majority. Are you determined to adjourn this Congress with the record you have made? Without the passage of a single measure of relief for the people? Can you face the just indignation of your wronged constituents, after all your pledges, when all that they demand could be done in a few hours? As a member of the national party I insist that Congress remain in continuous session until measures of relief are adopted, and we can return to the people to find them imbued with new hope and new courage. For one, I will vote against every motion to adjourn so long as I occupy a seat in this House, or until Congress obeys the demands of the country and lifts the burdens that have been heaped without mercy upon a long-suffering people. Then our land will become free and prosperous, a veritable Eden, which it would be now but for misgovernment.

If this resolution shall be adopted and we go home without further action, the men and the organizations that are fastened like leeches on the people by republican legislation may well cheer in Bacchanalian revels over the result, may well conclude that their immunities and grants are as safe in the hands of a democratic as of a republican Congress, may well shout their triumph in all their purchased organs; but the toiling millions will sink almost in despair and conclude justly that they are as likely to obtain relief from the Czar of Russia as from a democratic Congress.

The indifference of this Congress thus far to the wrongs under which the people are sinking is as impudent and as treacherous as was that of the court of French monarchs who reveled in their positions in the calm preceding the revolution. They were wise enough to foresee the future, but lulled their fears with the heartless, "After us, the deluge!" The deluge came, and come it will in this country if this indifference is long continued. Infatuated men may imagine that because they do not hear the thunder of the cataract they are safe. They may hope this old serio-comic play of the "Red-shirt," or section against section, which they have revised and put upon this congressional stage, will draw so well as to make the people forget the wrongs under which our common country is suffering. Never was there a greater mistake. The people realize the emergency of the age, and will look forward, not backward. It is the cries of the living present rather than the sorrows of the past that now absorb their attention. Once more I demand in the name of a party that knows no North, no South, but pleads for just laws for all, that this Congress before adjourning shall take a few hours at least to enact laws for the benefit of the sinking industries of the country. If you refuse, before God and man I arraign you as decreeing that industry shall still languish; that labor shall still rot in idleness; that want and destitution shall prevail.

Mr. COBB. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman from Indiana if he wishes the committee to rise without some gentleman on the other side answering these last remarks? [Laughter.]

The question was taken on Mr. COBB'S motion, and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriations to pay fees of United States marshals and their general deputies, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. COBB. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the second section of the bill now pending in the committee and on the amendments thereto shall be closed in one minute.

The question was taken upon the motion to close debate, and it was agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriations to pay fees of United States marshals and their general deputies.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out all of the second section after the word "eighty" in line 4; as follows:

And no Department or officer of the Government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money under any of the provisions of title 26 mentioned in section 1 of this act until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract or pay such liability shall have first been made by law; and that any officer of the Government or any other person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or of sections 3678, 3679, 3680, 3681, 3682, 3683, and 3690 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 62, noes 71.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriations to pay fees of United States marshals and their general deputies, and had directed him to report the same to the House without amendment and with the recommendation that it be passed.

Mr. COBB. I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded, and I desire to speak upon that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized as being the member in charge of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I have made a motion on which I desire to speak.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is submitting a motion and cannot be interrupted.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair has helped the gentleman from Indiana to get the bill through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has nothing to do with the bill. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] is in charge of it, and according to all parliamentary practice was entitled to be recognized by the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the Chair will not prevent me from voting on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes the gentleman from Michigan would vote on bills oftener than he does. [Laughter and applause.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. COBB. I ask for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered, being upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 89, nays 69, not voting 128; as follows:

YEAS—89.

Acklen,	Deuster,	Kimmel,	Shelley,
Aiken,	Dibrell,	King,	Slemons,
Armfield,	Dickey,	Le Fevre,	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Atkins,	Elam,	Lounsbery,	Springer,
Beale,	Ellis,	Manning,	Stephens,
Bicknell,	Evins,	Martin, Benj. F.	Stevenson,
Blackburn,	Felton,	McKenzie,	Talbott,
Bouck,	Finley,	McMahon,	Taylor,
Bright,	Forney,	McMillin,	Thompson,
Caldwell,	Gibson,	Mills,	Tillman,
Clardy,	Goode,	Morrison,	Townshend, R. W.
Clark, John B.	Gunter,	Myers,	Turner, Oscar
Clymer,	Hammond, N. J.	New,	Upson,
Cobb,	Hatch,	Persons,	Waddill,
Coffroth,	Henkle,	Phelps,	Wellborn,
Converse,	Herbert,	Phister,	Whiteaker,
Cook,	Herndon,	Reagan,	Williams, Thomas
Covert,	Hill,	Richardson, J. S.	Willis,
Cravens,	Hooker,	Rothwell,	Wilson,
Culberson,	House,	Ryon, John W.	Wise.
Davidson,	Hull,	Samford,
Davis, Joseph J.	Hunton,	Sawyer,
Davis, Lowndes H.	Johnston,	Scales,

NAYS—69.

Aldrich, William	Carpenter,	Ford,	Jorgensen,
Anderson,	Caswell,	Fort,	Joyce,
Baker,	Conger,	Garfield,	Keifer,
Barber,	Cowgill,	Godshalk,	Lapham,
Bayne,	Crowley,	Hammond, John	Marsh,
Blake,	Daggett,	Harmer,	Mason,
Bowman,	Davis, George R.	Haskell,	McCoid,
Brewer,	Deering,	Hawk,	McGowan,
Briggs,	Dunnell,	Hawley,	Mitchell,
Browne,	Errett,	Henderson,	Monroe,
Burrows,	Farr,	Hiscock,	Neal,
Butterworth,	Field,	Horr,	O'Neill,
Cannon,	Fisher,	Hubbell,	Orth,

Osmer,	Shallenberger,	Valentine,	White,
Pound,	Sherwin,	Van Aernam,	Willits.
Russell, W. A.	Thomas,	Voorhis,
Ryan, Thomas	Tyler,	Wait,
Sapp,	Updegraff, J. T.	Ward,

NOT VOTING—128.

Aldrich, N. W.	Ewing,	Lowe,	Ross,
Atherton,	Ferdon,	Martin, Edward L.	Russell, Daniel L.
Bachman,	Forsythe,	Martin Joseph J.	Simonton,
Bailey,	Frost,	McCook,	Singleton, J. W.
Ballou,	Frye,	McKinley,	Singleton, O. R.
Barlow,	Geddes,	McLane,	Smith, A. Herr
Belford,	Gillette,	Miles,	Smith, William E.
Beltzhoover,	Hall,	Miller,	Sparks,
Bingham,	Harris, Benj. W.	Money,	Speer,
Bland,	Harris, John T.	Morse,	Starin,
Bliss,	Hayes,	Morton,	Steele,
Blount,	Hazelton	Muldrow,	Stone,
Boyd,	Heilman	Muller,	Townsend, Amos
Bragg,	Henry,	Murch,	Tucker,
Brigham,	Hostetler,	Newberry,	Turner, Thomas,
Buckner,	Houk,	Nicholls,	Updegraff, Thomas
Cabell,	Humphrey,	Norcross,	Urner,
Calkins,	Hurd,	O'Brien,	Vance,
Camp,	James,	O'Connor,	Van Voorhis,
Carlisle,	Jones,	O'Reilly,	Warner,
Chalmers,	Kelley,	Overton,	Washburn,
Chittenden,	Kenna,	Pierce,	Weaver,
Claflin,	Ketcham,	Poehler,	Wells,
Clark, Alvah A.	Killinger,	Prescott,	Whitthorne,
Colerick,	Kitchin,	Price,	Wilber,
Cox,	Klotz,	Reed,	Williams, C. G.
Crapo,	Knott,	Rice,	Wood, Fernando
De La Matyr,	Ladd,	Richardson, D. P.	Wood, Walter A.
Dick,	Lay,	Richmond,	Wright,
Dunn,	Lewis,	Robertson,	Yocum,
Dwight,	Lindsey,	Robeson,	Young, Casey,
Einstein,	Loring,	Robinson,	Young, Thomas L.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. NICHOLLS. I decline to vote for this bill because it does not repeal the deputy-marshals election law.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. WILBER. If he were here, he would vote in the negative and I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LORING. If at liberty to vote, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. ROBINSON. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. BEALE. My colleague, Mr. RICHMOND, is absent on account of sickness, and is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. PRESCOTT. Mr. RICHMOND, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. ROBESON.

Mr. BACHMAN. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. OVERTON. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. MANNING. My colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. VAN VOORHIS; my colleague, Mr. MONEY, with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. STONE; my colleague, Mr. MULDROW, with the gentleman from New York, Mr. DWIGHT; and my colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, who is detained at home to-day by sickness, is paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. CALKINS. All my colleagues, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. STEELE. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. NORCROSS. If present, he would, I presume, vote "no." I should vote "ay." My colleague, Mr. KITCHIN, is paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. RICE.

Mr. POEHLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WASHBURN. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. SCALES. My colleague from North Carolina, Mr. VANCE, is paired with my colleague, Mr. MARTIN. Mr. VANCE, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. McLANE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. URNER, who is absent on account of sickness. If present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague from Illinois, Mr. SINGLETON, who is paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. MILES, would, if present, vote "ay."

Mr. HUNTON. My colleague, Mr. CABELL, is paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BOYD, and my colleague, Mr. TUCKER, with the gentleman from New York, Mr. RICHARDSON. My colleague, Mr. RICHMOND, is detained from the House by severe indisposition, and is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. PRESCOTT.

Mr. HURD. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CLAFLIN. If at liberty to vote, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. CALDWELL. My colleague, Mr. CARLISLE, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. MILLER. My colleague, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. DICKEY. My colleague, Mr. GEDDES, who is absent on account of sickness, is paired with the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. BARLOW.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman from Maine, Mr. LADD, who is paired with his colleague, Mr. LINDSEY, would, if present, vote "ay."

Mr. KNOTT. I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. FRYE.

Mr. DUNN. I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HAYES.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. KETCHAM. If present, he would vote in the negative and I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. COBB. My colleague, Mr. COLERICK, is paired with the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. HUMPHREY, and my colleague, Mr. HOSTETLER, with the gentleman from New York, Mr. MCCOOK.

Mr. BOUCK. My colleague, Mr. BRAGG, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. JAMES. Mr. BRAGG, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. MULLER. I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HEILMAN. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My colleague from Virginia, Mr. HARRIS, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. BAILEY. My colleague, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. WARNER. I am paired with the gentleman from Rhode Island, Mr. ALDRICH. If he were present, I should vote "ay" and I presume he would vote "no."

Mr. POUND. My colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY, is paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. COLERICK. Mr. HUMPHREY, if present, would vote "no."

Mr. LAPHAM. My colleague, from New York, Mr. RICHARDSON, is paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. WARD. My colleague, Mr. KELLEY, is paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MORSE.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. RICHMOND. If present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleague, Mr. WASHBURN, is paired with my colleague, Mr. POEHLER.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. YOUNG. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. WHITTHORNE, who is confined to his room by sickness. If present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no." The gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. WILLIAMS, is paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. LEWIS. Mr. LEWIS, if present, would vote "ay" and Mr. WILLIAMS "no."

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. My colleague, Mr. BUCKNER, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. BUCKNER, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. HAZELTON. I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BLOUNT. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. SAPP. My colleague, Mr. PRICE, is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. PRICE, if present, would vote "no."

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. EWING. If he were present, I should vote "no." My colleague, Mr. MCKINLEY, is paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPARKS. If present, Mr. MCKINLEY would vote "no."

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED, is paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. WELLS. Mr. REED would vote "no" and Mr. WELLS "ay."

Mr. COWGILL. My colleague, Mr. CALKINS, who is paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. SINGLETON, would, if present, vote "no." My colleague, Mr. HEILMAN, who is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. MULLER, would, if present, vote "no."

Mr. BLAKE. My colleagues, Mr. ROBESON and Mr. BRIGHAM, would, if present, vote "no." Mr. ROBESON is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, and Mr. BRIGHAM with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. FROST.

Mr. BREWER. My colleague, Mr. STONE, who is paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MONEY, would, if present, vote "no." My colleague, Mr. NEWBERRY, is paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. ATHERTON, and would, if present, vote "no." The gentleman from New York, Mr. STARIN, who is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. CLARK, would, if present, vote "no."

Mr. HAMMOND, of New York. My colleague, Mr. DWIGHT, is paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MULDROW.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with the gentleman from Delaware, Mr. MARTIN. If he were present, I presume he would vote "ay;" I should vote "no."

Mr. FIELD. My colleague, Mr. ROBINSON, is paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. ROBINSON would vote "no."

Mr. BAYNE. My colleague, Mr. DICK, is paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. LAY; and the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. BRIGHAM, with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. FROST. Mr. DICK and Mr. BRIGHAM, if present, would vote "no."

Mr. FORD. Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina, is paired with my colleague, Mr. BLAND. Mr. RUSSELL, if present, would vote "no."

Mr. HARMER. My colleague, Mr. BINGHAM, is paired with my colleague, Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. BINGHAM would vote "no," and Mr. BELTZHOOVER "ay."

Mr. TALBOTT. My colleague, Mr. HENRY, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired—I do not know with whom. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. HAWK. My colleague, Mr. HAYES, who is absent by leave of the House, is paired with the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. DUNN. Mr. HAYES, if present, would vote "no."

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. THOMAS TURNER, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. FERDON.

Mr. ROSS. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CRAPO.

Mr. WAIT. My colleague, Mr. MILES, is paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SINGLETON; the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. ROBINSON, with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ROBERTSON; the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLEY, with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MORSE. Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. MILES, if present, would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. There are some bills upon the Calendar which should be disposed of, and which will take but a little time.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will do so.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Two days ago a bill of the Senate, No. 696, authorizing the President to restore to the Naval Academy a young man by the name of King, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. It was understood that the committee should report the bill back immediately; and I ask consent to do so now and that it be considered at this time.

Mr. MILLS. How long will it take?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Not more than five minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Hardly that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. WHITTHORNE] desired me to interpose an objection to that bill until he could be here; and I must do so.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I had a consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs last night, and he assured me that he would make no objection to this bill. He is sick this morning, and sent word to me to pair with him to day; but no message was sent in reference to this bill.

Mr. TALBOTT. I will state to the House that the chairman of the committee came to me yesterday and stated this matter was in charge of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and that the report was a proper one to make.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Upon that statement I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. At any rate the committee has the right to report at any time upon this bill.

WILLIAM NEPHEW KING, JR.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Objection having been withdrawn, I now report from the Committee on Naval Affairs the bill (S. No. 696) for the relief of William Nephew King, jr.

The bill was read. It authorizes and empowers the President of the United States to let William Nephew King, jr., withdraw his resignation and to restore him to the Naval Academy at Annapolis as a cadet midshipman in the Navy of the United States.

The bill in its second section provides that upon the withdrawal of the said resignation and the restoration of the said William Nephew King, jr., to the Naval Academy of the United States, he shall be placed in such class as the Secretary of the Navy may deem expedient and designate; and that the position and pay of said William Nephew King, jr., shall forever hereafter be as if no such resignation had ever been accepted. The third section repeals, for this particular case, all laws or parts of laws conflicting with this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration and passage at this time a joint resolution of the Senate for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate what changes are necessary in the revenue laws.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to report from the Committee on Appropriations a bill to correct the Army appropriation act.

Mr. MILLS. It is a matter of great importance that the joint resolution should pass. It is desired that the joint committee shall be authorized to sit during the vacation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] has been recognized for a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. Does he yield?

Mr. BRIGHT. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair then will recognize both the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Texas. But he can only recognize one at a time. The Chair first recognizes the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

GUARDING AND COLLECTING THE REVENUE.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the joint resolution (S. R. No. 44) appointing a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress to take into consideration what changes, if any, ought to be made in the mode of guarding or collecting the revenue and appropriating the money so collected.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The joint resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. GARFIELD. I object.

Mr. MILLS. The joint resolution was reported by the Senate Finance Committee and passed the Senate unanimously.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. WHITE also objected.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the resolution go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLS. Objection having been made to the present consideration of the joint resolution, I ask that it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles, namely:

An act (H. R. No. 2327) to authorize the renewal of a loan therein named by a joint-stock company to the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) fixing the date on which the pay of the committee clerks, pages, and laborers of the House of Representatives who are paid during the session only shall begin for this session, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the concurrent resolution to print and bind 2,000 copies of the report of the United States Commission on Fish and Fisheries, under the direction of the Commission.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (S. No. 39) in relation to committee clerks, pages, and other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, and for other purposes; in both of which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

CORRECTION OF ARMY APPROPRIATION ACT.

Mr. CLYMER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2386) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1879, by correcting two clerical errors therein; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It amends the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880," approved June 23, 1879, as follows:

Strike out the word "purchase" where it last occurs in the last proviso relating to the sum appropriated for the construction of a storehouse and depot building at Omaha, Nebraska, and insert the word "purpose" in lieu thereof.

And strike out the word "charge" where it occurs in the clause relating to the regulation stone to be used by the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Soldiers, and insert the word "change" in lieu thereof.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does this change the law in any way?

Mr. CLYMER. These are mere clerical errors. The bill only corrects two words.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLYMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MORRISON. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at four o'clock p. m., on Monday, the 30th June, instant.

Mr. MORRISON. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question being put on agreeing to the resolution,

The SPEAKER stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" had it.

Mr. CONGER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 45.

Mr. VALENTINE. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 93, nays 73, not voting 120; as follows:

YEAS—93.

Aiken,	Dibrell,	Le Fevre,	Simonton,
Armfield,	Dickey,	Lounsbery,	Slemons,
Atkins,	Elam,	Manning,	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Beale,	Ellis,	Martin, Benj. F.	Smith, William E.
Bicknell,	Evins,	McKenzie,	Springer,
Blackburn,	Felton,	McMahon,	Stephens,
Bliss,	Finley,	McMillin,	Talbott,
Bouck,	Forney,	Mills,	Taylor,
Bright,	Gibson,	Morrison,	Thompson,
Caldwell,	Goode,	Myers,	Tillman,
Clardy,	Gunter,	New,	Townshend, R. W.
Clark, John B.	Hammond, N. J.	Nicholls,	Turner, Oscar
Clymer,	Hatch,	O'Connor,	Upson,
Cobb,	Henkle,	Persons,	Waddill,
Coffroth,	Herbert,	Phelps,	Warner,
Converse,	Herndon,	Phister,	Wellborn,
Cook,	Hill,	Reagan,	Whiteaker,
Covert,	Hooker,	Richardson, J. S.	Williams, Thomas
Cravens,	House,	Rothwell,	Willis,
Culberson,	Hull,	Ryon, John W.	Wilson,
Davidson,	Hunton,	Samford,	Wise.
Davis, Joseph J.	Johnston,	Sawyer,
Davis, Loundes H.	King,	Scales,
Deuster,	Klotz,	Shelley,

NAYS—73.

Acklen,	Daggett,	Henderson,	Sapp,
Aldrich, William	Davis, George R.	Jones,	Shallenberger,
Anderson,	Deering,	Jorgensen,	Sherwin,
Baker,	Dunnell,	Joyce,	Stevenson,
Barber,	Errett,	Keifer,	Thomas,
Bayne,	Farr,	Lapham,	Tyler,
Blake,	Field,	Lowe,	Updegraff, J. T.
Bowman,	Fisher,	Marsh,	Updegraff, Thomas
Brewer,	Ford,	Mason,	Valentine,
Briggs,	Forsythe,	McCoid,	Van Aernam,
Browne,	Fort,	McGowan,	Wait,
Burrows,	Garfield,	Monroe,	Ward,
Butterworth,	Gillette,	Murch,	Weaver,
Cannon,	Godshalk,	Neal,	White,
Carpenter,	Hammond, John	O'Neill,	Willits,
Caswell,	Harmer,	Orth,	Yocum.
Conger,	Haskell,	Osmer,
Cowgill,	Hawk,	Russell, W. A.
Crowley,	Hawley,	Ryan, Thomas

NOT VOTING—120.

Aldrich, N. W.	Einstein,	Lewis,	Robertson,
Atherton,	Ewing,	Lindsey,	Robeson,
Bachman,	Ferdon,	Loring,	Robinson,
Bailey,	Frost,	Martin, Edward L.	Ross.
Ballou,	Frye,	Martin, Joseph J.	Russell, Daniel L.
Barlow,	Geddes,	McCook,	Singleton, J. W.
Belford,	Hall,	McKinley,	Singleton, O. R.
Beltzhoover,	Harris, Benj. W.	McLane,	Smith, A. Herr
Bingham,	Harris, John T.	Miles,	Sparks,
Bland,	Hayes,	Miller,	Speer,
Blount,	Hazelton,	Mitchell,	Starin,
Boyd,	Heilman,	Money,	Steele,
Bragg,	Henry,	Morse,	Stone,
Brigham,	Hiscock,	Morton,	Townsend, Amos
Buckner,	Horr,	Muldrow,	Tucker,
Cabell,	Hostetler,	Muller,	Turner, Thomas
Calkins,	Houk,	Newberry,	Urner,
Camp,	Hubbell,	Norcross,	Vance,
Carlisle,	Humphrey,	O'Brien	Van Voorhis,
Chalmers,	Hurd,	O'Reilly,	Voorhis,
Chittenden,	James,	Overton,	Washburn,
Claflin,	Kelley,	Pierce,	Wells,
Clark, Alvah A.	Kenna,	Poehler,	Whitthorne,
Colerick,	Ketcham,	Pound,	Wilber,
Cox,	Killinger,	Prescott,	Williams, C. G.
Crapo,	Kimmel,	Price	Wood, Fernando
De La Matyr,	Kitchin,	Reed,	Wood, Walter A.
Dick,	Knott,	Rice,	Wright,
Dunn,	Ladd,	Richardson, D. P.	Young, Casey
Dwight,	Lay,	Richmond,	Young, Thomas L.

So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. MANNING. My colleague, Mr. MULDROW, is paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York. My colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, is paired with Mr. CALKINS, of Indiana. My colleague, Mr. MONEY, is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan, and my colleague, Mr. CHALMERS, is paired with Mr. VAN VOORHIS, of New York. All of my colleagues are absent by leave of the House, and, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. TALBOTT. My colleague, Mr. MCLANE, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. URNER. If present, Mr. MCLANE would vote "ay." My colleague, Mr. HENRY, is paired with some gentleman on the other side, I do not know who it is, but if Mr. HENRY were present, he would vote "ay." Both of my colleagues are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. ROBINSON. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. VANCE, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with my other colleague, Mr. MARTIN. If Mr. VANCE were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. DICKEY. My colleague, Mr. GEDDES, is paired with Mr. BARLOW, of Vermont.

Mr. POEHLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WASHBURN.

Mr. STEELE. I am paired on all political questions with Mr. NORCROSS, of Massachusetts. If he were present, I should vote "ay;" and if my vote is needed to make a quorum, I will vote "ay" any way.

Mr. HILL. My colleague, Mr. ATHERTON, is paired with Mr. NEWBERRY, of Michigan.

Mr. COX. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. MORTON.

Mr. HURD. I am paired with Mr. CLAFLIN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. HUNTON. My colleague, Mr. CABELL, is paired with Mr. BOYD, of Illinois; my colleague, Mr. TUCKER, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York; and my colleague, Mr. RICHMOND, who is detained from the House by severe sickness, is paired with Mr. PRESCOTT, of New York.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. My colleague, Mr. MULLER, is paired with Mr. HEILMAN, of Indiana. If present, my colleague would vote "ay."

Mr. GUNTER. My colleague, Mr. DUNN, is paired with Mr. HAYES, of Illinois. If present, Mr. DUNN would vote "ay."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, is paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My colleague, Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, is paired with Mr. BAILEY, of New York.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. As I have before announced to-day, I am paired with Mr. WHITTHORNE, of Tennessee. If he were present, I should vote "no" and he would vote "ay." I desire also to announce that Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama. If these gentlemen were present, Mr. LEWIS would vote "ay" and Mr. WILLIAMS would vote "no."

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. KNOTT. I am paired with Mr. FRYE, of Maine. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. PRESCOTT. I am paired with Mr. RICHMOND, of Virginia.

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. EWING. If he were here, I should vote "no." My colleague, Mr. MCKINLEY, is paired with Mr. SPARKS, of Illinois.

Mr. HARMER. My colleagues, Mr. BINGHAM and Mr. BELTZHOOVER, are paired.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. If he were here, I should vote "no." I desire to announce also that my colleagues, Mr. OVERTON and Mr. BACHMAN, are absent and paired.

Mr. BRIGGS. My colleague, Mr. HALL, is paired with Mr. SPEER.

Mr. HAZELTON. I am paired with Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia. If he were here, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no." My colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, is paired with Mr. LEWIS, of Alabama.

Mr. FIELD. My colleague, Mr. ROBINSON, is paired with Mr. ROBERTSON, of Louisiana.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. THOMAS TURNER, of Kentucky, is paired with my colleague, Mr. OVERTON, instead of with myself as for some time past.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now renew my motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was not agreed to, upon a division, ayes 28, noes not counted.

Mr. FINLEY. I move to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I move that the House now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted, by unanimous consent, as follows:

To Mr. BRIGHAM, indefinitely, on account of the sickness of his wife; and

To Mr. SAPP, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Unanimous consent was given for the withdrawal of papers as follows:

To Mr. WILLIS, in the case of Krantz & Co.; no adverse report.

To Mr. SPRINGER, papers filed by the parties in interest or their attorney, to accompany House bill No. 2370, Forty-fifth Congress, to authorize the United States to secure a title to certain military and timber reservations; no adverse report.

NEGRO EXODUS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] to ask consent of the House that he have leave to print in the RECORD, as a portion of the debates, some remarks prepared by him "on the causes of the negro exodus, so called."

Mr. KEIFER. What bill would those remarks apply to?

The SPEAKER. They could be considered as made in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KEIFER. I must object unless they relate to some bill pending in the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRENTZ. I ask consent to introduce a bill for reference. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. McKENZIE,] that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. O'CONNOR: The petition of Rudolph Lobsiger, a citizen of the Swiss Confederation, for compensation for property taken by the United States Army—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SHELLEY: Papers relating to the war claim of John T. Armstrong—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee: The petition of R. L. McElwee, for compensation for property destroyed during the late war by the United States Army—to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 28, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions, which had previously received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A bill (H. R. No. 2002) making additional appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, and for other purposes:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 102) authorizing a survey of the Mississippi River near Lake Concordia, Louisiana, and Cowpen Bend, Mississippi; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 114) donating granite blocks to Mower Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Orleans, Louisiana.

AUTOMATIC SIGNAL TELEGRAPH SYSTEMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioner of Patents, and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, submitting a statement on the subject of automatic signal telegraph systems as a supplement to their report on that subject of May 16, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of J. W. Goltra and others, citizens of Anderson County, Kansas, praying for the passage of a law granting a pension to Thomas J. Rumbly, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment Kansas Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 498) changing the time of holding the November term of the United States district court in the district of Connecticut; and

A bill (S. No. 719) to change the name of the ferry-boat James Fisk, jr., to Passaic.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2386) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1879, by correcting two clerical errors therein; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 506) to change the name of the steam-propeller Nuhpa to Metropolitan;

A bill (S. No. 696) for the relief of William Nephew King, jr.; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2381) making appropriations for certain judicial expenses for the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

AUSTIN-TOPOLOVAMPO SURVEY.

Mr. VEST. By request, I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to the Senate any correspondence the State Department may have had with the Republic of Mexico in regard to the proposed Austin-Topolovampo Railroad survey across the northern states of that country.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. FERRY. Ought not "directed" to be used instead of "requested?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair it ought to read "directed." The President is "requested."

Mr. FERRY. It is addressed to the head of a Department, and should read "directed."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let it be changed so as to read "the President" instead of "the Secretary of State."

Mr. MAXEY. "That the President be requested" is the usual form.

Mr. VEST. Very well; let it be so modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified if there be no objection. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

REFRIGERATING-VESSEL FOR DISINFECTION.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 46) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to construct at the Washington and Norfolk navy-yards the steam-vessel and refrigerating-machine recommended by the National Board of Health, and for other purposes; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the joint resolution be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and hereby is, authorized to construct at the Washington and Norfolk navy-yards the steam-vessel and refrigerating-machine which the National Board of Health recommended to the Secretary of the Treasury to be used in the disinfection of vessels engaged in commerce, and that the same be constructed under the supervision and according to the plans of the inventor, Professor John Gamgee, and his engineers; and that the said John Gamgee be allowed the actual cost of said plans and specifications, not to exceed $5,000, and a reasonable compensation for his services and that of his engineers while superintending the construction of said vessel and machine. And that the appropriation of $200,000 made by act approved 18th April, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to contract for the purchase or construction of a refrigerating-ship for the disinfection of vessels and cargoes, and for other purposes," or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby applied to the construction of said vessel and machine by the Navy Deprrtment.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senate will indulge me a single moment in explanation of the resolution, I shall hope that there will be no objection to its adoption. By the act approved the 18th of April, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to contract for the construction of such vessel and refrigerating-machine as the National Board of Health should recommend. Under that act some eighteen plans were submitted to the National Board of Health. The board asked the Secretary of the Navy to detail a board of naval engineers and constructors to sit in conference with the Board of Health for the purpose of thoroughly investigating the various plans that had been submitted. After a careful examination, running through about three weeks of constant labor, these naval experts and the Board of Health decided against all the plans submitted, except the plan of Professor John Gamgee. That plan they approve and recommend. But the plan of Professor Gamgee is based in part upon some two or three patents that he claims to own, and to a large extent based upon inventions of his own not yet patented. Hence he submitted his plans to the Board of Health for the information of the board, but with the express condition that they should not be copied, should not be published, should not be used by any person other than himself. Owing to these restrictions the Secretary of the Treasury cannot advertise, and he declines to let this contract in any other than the ordinary way of advertising for bids and letting the contract to the lowest responsible bidder.

In view of that fact Professor Gamgee addressed me a note on yesterday authorizing me to make this proposition; that is, that the vessel and refrigerating-machine recommended by the Board of Health and these naval experts shall be constructed by the Government itself, at its own navy-yards, for the smallest amount of money that the Government can construct it, requiring only that it shall be constructed according to the plans so recommended, and under the supervision of himself and his engineers, and that he is to be paid the actual cost of his plans and specifications, and paid a reasonable compensation for his own time and that of his engineers while engaged in superintending the construction of the vessel and machine.

This is the only mode by which this refrigerating ship and machine can be constructed under the circumstances which now confront us. It is impossible for the Secretary of the Treasury to advertise, because Professor Gamgee cannot afford to allow his invention, which has cost him years of scientific research, and which he has not yet patented, to be published or to be used by others than himself. He does not seek to make money out of it. He is willing to allow the Government to use his invention and his patents free of charge so far as this one vessel is concerned. All that he asks is that the Government shall build the vessel and machine, he cares not at how little cost, so they are perfectly constructed, allowing him only the actual cost of producing these plans and specifications, and a reasonable compensation for his time while actually engaged in superintending the construction of the vessel.

Mr. HEREFORD. Did we not pass an act making provision for all this?

Mr. HARRIS. The bill that was passed and approved on the 18th of April appropriated $200,000 for the purpose of constructing this vessel, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to contract for its construction. The Secretary of the Treasury cannot contract for its construction in the ordinary method, by advertising and letting the contract to the lowest bidder, because of the fact that the plan is based to a large extent upon an invention of Professor Gamgee not yet patented. Professor Gamgee submitted his plans, requiring that they should not be published, should not be copied, and should not be used by any person other than himself; these restrictions being imposed, not only to protect his right to patent his invention, but because he was not willing for his invention to be experimented upon by any contractor unless absolutely controlled by himself. Therefore the vessel cannot be built under the act of April 18 at all unless the Secretary of the Treasury would contract with the inventor without advertising, or unless we pass this resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to build it at the Government navy-yards under the supervision of the inventor, his supervision being necessary to the perfect success of the plan. That is the whole case, and in view of it I ask that the letter from Professor Gamgee authorizing me to make this proposition may be read, and I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RIGGS HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., June 27, 1879.

SIR: Whatever may be the obstacles in the way of the prompt construction of my refrigerating ship, they shall not be increased or encouraged by any act of mine.

To prove to the world how the mercantile marine of the Atlantic seaboard of this entire continent may be maintained free from yellow-fever infection, and hence cease to be a standing menace to the fair cities of the Southern States, I am prepared for my full share of responsibility.

You have therefore my authority to announce as and when you think best from your seat in the Senate that I forego all profit under the contract for construction, which I have fairly earned, and present the right to my patents, plans, and specifications for the building of this first experimental ship to the United States of America

But, sir, I must stipulate, as follows:

First, for the construction under my supervision at the navy-yards of Washington and Norfolk of the steam-vessel and refrigerating-machinery in accordance with my plans and specifications as already recommended by the National Board of Health.

Second, for the employment of my superintending engineer, Mr. William Eli Ludlow, and the competent staff which has been engaged on our plans up to this time.

Third, that I be protected from actual money loss by the payment of all expenses incurred by me since the commencement of this work on the 20th of last December and by a reasonable allowance, with necessary traveling expenses, until the construction of the ship is completed.

Leaving myself entirely in your hands, I trust that the spontaneity and heartiness of my resolve may induce Congress to accede to any reasonable request you may make for the speedy fruition of this enterprise.

I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN GAMGEE.

Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. VOORHEES. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana objects, and the resolution goes on the Calendar.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire, out of respect to the Senator from Tennessee, from whom I have not differed on any subject heretofore that I know of since we have met in the Senate, to state my reasons for objecting to the resolution. At this late hour of the session, I think this question is too complicated for a full understanding of it. I desire to say that I have had about as much of this Gamgee business as will do me during this session. He may be a very wise man, a very wonderful man, but he has had a refrigerating influence upon me that I think will bring me to a standstill even in this hot weather until I can look into the matter a little further than I could on such an occasion as this. I therefore feel impelled from a sense of public duty to object to the consideration of the resolution at this time; and I wish to say to the Senator from Tennessee that the only regret I have on the subject of objecting is because it compels me to differ from him.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to be allowed to say one word in answer to my friend from Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This discussion proceeds by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. All I desire to say is that I have no prejudices against or partialities for any individual connected with any of these plans. There were eighteen plans submitted to the hardest test to which they could be subjected, to the rigid scrutiny of a board of naval experts, engineers, and constructors, and the National Board of Health consisting of eleven scientists. They have carefully examined all of these plans, and one by one every plan submitted went down under the condemnation of these scientists, there being fatal objections to each and every one of them. Gamgee's plan alone met their approval. I do not look to Gamgee or any other individual in connection with this matter; I look to that plan which has met the approval of all scientists who have examined it, and which promises the great benefit, the great security, that I confidently believe will be found in its perfection and execution. I regret exceedingly that my friend from Indiana feels called upon to object, because this has been subjected to the severest test that it was possible to subject it, and stands approved by the highest scientific authority. I give notice that I will to-morrow morning, the next legislative day, ask the Senate to consider the resolution. I move that the resolution be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on the 25th instant, which will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the complete remonetization of silver, its full restoration as a money metal, and its free coinage by the mints of the United States are demanded alike by the dictates of justice and wise statesmanship.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. VEST. Let the substitute be read.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think that the resolution as read is not the one before the Senate. The Senator from Missouri I think substituted for that another resolution.

Mr. VEST. I have just asked the Secretary to read it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to know which is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the substitute was not admitted because the yeas and nays had been ordered on the original resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. But there was no objection, I think.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No objection was made to the proposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was no objection; it was agreed that the substitute should be taken for the original resolution.

Mr. FERRY. There was no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was no objection, the Chair understands. Then the substitute will be reported, the resolution having been modified by the Senator from Missouri by unanimous consent, as the Chair is informed.

The Chief Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the complete remonetization of silver and its restoration to a perfect equality with gold, both as coin and bullion, are demanded alike by the dictates of justice and wise statesmanship.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the phraseology of this substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator suspend one moment? On reflection there is some little difficulty about this being substituted by unanimous consent after the yeas and nays have been ordered. What is to become then of the ordering of the yeas and nays? On what are they ordered?

Mr. GARLAND. The question is whether the substitute shall be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was a motion made to refer the original resolution. Non constat that the mover of the reference of the original resolution would want to refer the substitute.

Mr. GARLAND. The mover of the resolution adopted the substitute as his own, and by unanimous consent, after the yeas and nays were ordered, he was permitted to do that, as the RECORD will show. Now I suppose the question will be on the motion to refer the substitute.

Mr. FERRY. As I understand, the Senator from Missouri modified the resolution himself. Although the rule states that a proposition cannot be changed after the yeas and nays have been ordered, still by unanimous consent the Senate permitted the change to be made. The change was made by the Senator who offered the original resolution and accepted as such, and the yeas and nays would apply upon it just as upon the resolution if it had been amended in regular form.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Vermont will yield to me a moment I think that the question of substituting was not finally decided yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present incumbent of the chair was not here at the time.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say that it is a fact that I withheld my assent to making the change. I do not now desire to present any objections to the modification, if it is the unanimous wish of the Senate; but at the moment after the modification was proposed it will be noticed that I observed that I withheld my assent from the proposition. But I do not now object to the modification if the Senate so desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the statements made on this subject by Senators experienced in the rules of the Senate, the Chair will consider the substitute as before the Senate and the motion to refer as applying to that as well as to the original resolution, and also the order for the yeas and nays. The question is, Shall the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance? on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. Now, Mr. President, as I began before to say, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the phraseology of the proposition as modified by the Senator from Missouri, which is:

That the complete remonetization of silver and its restoration to a perfect equality with gold, both as coin and bullion, are demanded alike by the dictates of justice and wise statesmanship.

The Senator undoubtedly intends by these words to have a change made in relation to silver so that its coinage shall be just as free as that of gold, and that the charge made therefor shall be only ½ of 1 per cent. Under the existing laws anybody can take gold to the mints for coinage, and the only charge made is ½ of 1 per cent. Therefore it is a direct proposition for a free coinage, and that all profits arising thereon shall accrue to the owner of silver bullion. There is no doubt but what the present law in relation to gold bullion is just what I have stated, and I therefore refrain from reading the sections to be found in the Revised Statutes. A Senator suggests that I read them:

SEC. 3519. Any owner of gold bullion may deposit the same at any mint, to be formed into coin or bars for his benefit.

Then section 3524 reads as follows:

The charge for converting standard gold bullion into coin shall be ½ of 1 per cent.

It is therefore manifestly clear that under the terms of this resolution as it is proposed to be modified it will provide that silver shall be placed precisely upon the same level with gold, and that if there is any difference between the price of silver bullion and standard legal-tender silver coin it shall entirely accrue to the owner of silver bullion, whether he be an American with domestic productions or whether he be a speculator dealing in foreign gold from Germany or any other country.

Mr. CONKLING. What, if the Senator pleases, does the resolution imply as to the number of grains the coinage is to contain?

Mr. MORRILL. It does not say anything about it.

Mr. CONKLING. I know it does not say anything about it, but what does it imply?

Mr. MORRILL. Many constructions might be put on a resolution of this character. I deem it unfortunate that any discussion of this subject should arise at this time, when the truth is that time is settling this question to the satisfaction of us all. I take it that there is no one here who does not desire the speedy return of silver to its ancient value. It seems that already the trade-dollar, about which we were agitated only a day or two ago, has risen in consequence of the foreign demand, so that it is worth to-day in New York ninety-nine and one-eighth cents; and the last sale in San Francisco was at par for the purpose of exportation. Nearly all of the silver of that stamp, of the trade-dollar, has already been exhausted by the present demand for its export to China. It is even supposed that there will spring up a demand for a further coinage of the trade-dollar for exportation in order to compete with the Mexican dollar. Therefore that question seems to have settled itself; and now the agitation of the silver question in France, among all the nations of the Latin union, in Germany and in England, tends in the direction of a more complete and extended use of silver throughout all commercial nations. All we have to do is to wait, and the good time will come.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUTLER. One word of explanation, Mr. President. Does the effect of this motion carry the substitute to the Committee on Finance?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute is all that is before the Senate, having been accepted by the mover of the resolution, and it is the resolution now.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall vote for the substitute.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to state that I was at the moment unmindful of an act passed since the revision of the statutes by which we have even repealed the charge of ½ of 1 per cent. on the coinage of gold. There is no charge at all upon the coinage of gold at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "bullion" it is proposed to insert:

At as early a day as these objects can be accomplished consistently with the public welfare.

Mr. VEST. I hope the amendment will be voted down. It is entirely unnecessary. I just ask for an expression of opinion in regard to the abstract proposition without regard to conditions at all—the full remonetization of silver.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator want it done before it can be consistently with the public welfare?

Mr. VEST. That is simply "leather and prunella." It amounts to nothing. Nobody wants to do what is inconsistent with the public welfare.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am sorry the mover of the resolution does not agree to the amendment offered by myself. I think that the resolution as offered by him, amended as I propose, will receive perhaps a majority of the votes of the Senate.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask if this amendment is in order, the yeas and nays having been ordered, and this resolution being a substitute for what preceded it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was having the rules looked over. The first impression of the Chair was in respect to the substitute yesterday that after the yeas and nays were ordered it was not amendable; but the Chair was informed by more experienced Senators that by unanimous consent it could be done. The Chair will take a moment to look into the rules to see whether this amendment is in order after the yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to refer. In the mean time, the Chair will allow the Senator from Iowa to proceed.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I was about to say that I have found this to be true as a rule. There is a great deal of sound philosophy in some old maxims about not being in too much of a hurry to accomplish any desired end. One of them is that "the greater hurry, the less speed;" another is "to hasten slowly;" and beyond the Mississippi we have condensed them both into two words: "go slow." There is a great deal of sound philosophy in it, I think. If our democratic friends had acted upon that philosophy during this extra session, they would have been happier to-day, I apprehend, than they are.

Mr. COCKRELL. We are perfectly happy as we are.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. HEREFORD. A very happy family.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. They would not have demonstrated the incorrectness of a saying of a somewhat celebrated person that there is but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous. They have proven that there are several steps between the two; they have made the journey, and the final goal is on our table and to be acted on when this resolution is disposed of. I am afraid their anxiety in regard to the subject of silver will lead to the same result. We passed in the last Congress the silver bill, the Allison bill, so called, and I desire to say—I wish my colleague was not present when I say it—that I think the country owes a great deal to him, as the author of that bill, for his sound sense and practical sagacity and good statesmanship. The country has awarded him credit already for that act, and will award him more in the future.

Now, what is the condition of things? The predictions of those who opposed that bill have failed as many other predictions in regard to financial affairs have failed. It was predicted to us at the last long session that if resumption were persisted in the country would be ruined. It was persisted in, and the country is to-day more prosperous than it has been for years. All signs show that the business of the country is improving. We get that word from all over the country. Even in the far West we find it to be so. Everything is moving in the right direction. Is not that a time, in western phrase, to go slow—to hasten slowly? If things were as they were a year ago, at the lowest, instead of improving, we might try the experiment; but as things are improving to-day contrary to the predictions of many men upon both sides of the Chamber, as signs of that improvement are before the country in every direction, is it not the part of wisdom to wait and see what shall be the outcome? As has been said by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] the signs indicate the restoration of silver by slow and sure processes. Germany has taken no backward step as I believe toward a gold basis, but has stopped going forward. In England there are decided indications that their policy is about to be modified in regard to the use of silver as money. The price of silver bullion is rising. Everything appears to tend, all the signs look in the direction of the accomplishment by gradual, slow, safe modes of that which a large majority of this Chamber desire to accomplish. I repeat, is it not then under these circumstances the part of wisdom to wait?

Six months hence we shall know more about this matter than we know to-day; six months hence we shall know more what is the disposition of foreign governments to move in the direction we desire to move than we know to-day. May we not embarrass that movement by hasty action here? May we not retard instead of expediting that which we desire to have accomplished? I am as strongly in favor of the equalization of silver with gold as any man who hears me. I supported as earnestly in my quiet way the bill named from my colleague as any Senator who hears me. I am as firmly to-day in favor of all that is intended to be accomplished by those who are in favor of the restoration of silver as coin as any Senator who hears me. But I do not believe that the accomplishment of that can be hastened at all by the passage of the resolution now pending before the Senate, especially if there shall not be added to it the amendment that I have offered.

In regard to that amendment, let me say a word. It proposes that the restoration to an equality of gold and silver both as coin and bullion shall take place as rapidly as the public welfare will permit. Does any one want it to come sooner than that at the expense of the public welfare? It is known that the silver men, so called, differ as to the best means to accomplish this end. Some men are in favor of the free coinage of silver, so called, letting the men who hold silver bullion or the men who may choose to speculate in it reap all the profit from its coinage. Other silver men are opposed to that. Some are in favor of issuing certificates for silver bullion deposited in the mint, giving to the holder of such a certificate the legal value of the coined silver instead of the bullion value of it, and others are opposed to that. Is it wise for the men who favor silver, in the present condition of affairs, when nothing practical is suggested, to divide their forces? It seems to me not to be so. It seems to me the best thing is to wait and do nothing until we come together in regular session again; and if that should not be the conclusion, it seems perfectly clear to me that we ought to say that while we desire the restoration of silver and gold to their proper relations to each other, we should not in endeavoring to bring it about jeopardize in any way the public welfare for its accomplishment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In reference to the question of order made by the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD,] the Chair has carefully examined the rules and finds nothing in them to prevent the motion to amend being made. It is a wholly different question from the right of the mover of a resolution to modify it after the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. If it is necessary in order to take a vote on the amendment of my colleague, if I can do so, I should be glad to withdraw the motion to refer, so that a vote may be taken on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has overruled the point of order. Is the Senate ready for the question? The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD.]

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "bullion" it is proposed to insert:

At as early a date as those objects can be accomplished consistently with the public welfare.

Mr. BECK. Will not the Senator from Iowa make it a little more distinct by saying "as soon as the present Secretary of the Treasury chooses to allow it to be done?" Would not that make it more distinct?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not think so. I think we are the judges of what the public welfare requires to be done.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY, (when his name was called.) As I have announced that I was paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] on political questions, I now say, in justice to myself, that financial questions were excepted from the pair. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

Mr. MCPHERSON, (when his name was called.) Upon this subject I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (when the name of Mr. THURMAN was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] on all questions except what are commonly called silver questions. On this I believe he obtained a pair with some other Senator; but whether or not I reserve my vote.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand that the other pair only extended to the Warner bill; therefore I supposed the Senator from Ohio was paired with my colleague on all other questions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state that I paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] on the Warner bill just before he left. I announced the pair when motions affecting that bill were before the Senate. I do not consider that the pair has anything to do with this question or the trade-dollar bill or any other question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] left with the impression that I had only reserved the Warner bill, of course I withhold my vote. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] would have voted "nay," if present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is paired on this vote, and on all votes that may be taken on the silver question, with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If the Senator from Virginia were here and the Senator from Colorado were present and at liberty to vote, the Senator from Colorado would vote in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I announced yesterday that I was paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,
Anthony,	Chandler,	Kernan,	Platt,
Blair,	Conkling,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Burnside,	Eaton,	Logan,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Saunders.

NAYS—21.

Bailey,	Garland,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Beck,	Hampton,	Pendleton,	Walker,
Call,	Hereford,	Ransom,	Williams.
Cockrell,	Houston,	Slater,
Coke,	Jonas,	Vance,
Davis of Illinois,	Maxey,	Vest,

ABSENT—35.

Bayard,	Farley,	Johnston,	Randolph,
Blaine,	Gordon,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,
Booth,	Groome,	Jones of Florida,	Teller,
Bruce,	Grover,	Kellogg,	Thurman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Lamar,	Wallace,
Carpenter,	Harris,	McDonald,	Whyte,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill of Georgia,	McPherson,	Windom,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Paddock,	Withers.
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

So the amendment was rejected.

ERRORS IN ARMY APPROPRIATION ACT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and the unfinished business is a resolution submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that all the testimony taken by the select committee investigating Treasury accounts be reported to the Senate and printed for the use of the Senate. Pending that question the Chair asks leave to present to the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. No. 2386) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1879, by correcting two clerical errors therein, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BECK. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that bill now without a reference. The Committee on Appropriations have looked at it, and it only changes two words, restoring the amendments inserted by the committee originally, changing the word "purpose" for "purchase," on page 9 of the Army bill, and the word "change" for "charge," on page 10, as we failed to amend the bill at all in the Senate for reasons known to everybody.

Mr. CONKLING. What are they?

Mr. BECK. The bill has been approved, and now it is better that these two words should be changed.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he did not object when the bill was on its passage to the correction of these very errors?

Mr. BECK. I do not remember whether I did or not, but objection was made because it was thought by those in charge of the bill that it was better to pass it without sending it back to the House. I do not think there can be any objection to this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope there will be no objection. This is to correct some manifest errors in a bill that was pushed through here by a party vote a few days ago.

Mr. BECK. That is so.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we ought to consent to having the errors corrected in order that the Army bill may in all its parts agree with what it was intended to express.

Mr. BECK. I think so. That is all there is of it.

Mr. CONKLING. Seeking arduously, as I do, to follow wherever I should the lead of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, I feel a little embarrassed at the present moment. My recollection is that both these amendments were reported from the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky himself, I believe, being the organ of the committee.

Mr. BECK. No, that is a mistake. I think the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] had charge of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator is right; it was the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

Mr. BECK. He is now absent, and that is the reason I urge this bill.

Mr. CONKLING. But the honorable Senator from Kentucky gave him the force and effect of his influence and counsel so emphatically that for the moment it was my impression that the honorable Senator from Kentucky was himself in the lead, and not merely the coadjutor of the Senator who had charge of the bill. At all events the Committee on Appropriations reported in favor of both these amendments. The Senator from Kentucky indorses them now as to their propriety, but he indorsed them then, and a majority of the Senate under his advice voted in Committee of the Whole in favor of both these amendments. Up to that time I could not doubt that they were proper amendments; the advice and judgment of the Senator from Kentucky alone would have convinced me on that point; but when we came into the Senate, under the tuition, not only with the consent but by the advice of the honorable Senator from Kentucky, on the yeas and nays, these two amendments, both of them specifically, were voted down as improper amendments to be made to the bill. Now, the honorable Senator from Kentucky comes in and says, as he said at first the other day, that these amendments are proper; but in the mean time, on a call of the yeas and nays, the Senator from Kentucky—that is what weighs with me—declared that these amendments ought not to be made; that they were not proper amendments. Now, the Senator from Kentucky has said somewhat vaguely, somewhat in the nature of an enigma, which may be understood by other Senators, but I do not understand it,—that there were reasons for this which all knew. If the honorable Senator from Kentucky would indulge me and the few who know no better than I do what those reasons were and tell us why these very amendments were voted down on the yeas and nays in the Senate and yet he holds them proper amendments, I should feel entirely relieved; but as it is I am mystified; I am groping trying to follow my leader; and he leads in one direction and then in the other direction, and I do not know from day to day which direction I am to go in order to observe his advice, which I wish to do.

Mr. BECK. One word——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky will suspend for a moment. It has always been the opinion of the Chair that on a question, Will the Senate unanimously consent to proceed to the consideration of a bill? no debate is in order; but the Chair allows debate to go on by unanimous consent. On a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill, a motion that does not require unanimous consent, debate is admissible under the rules, but not in regard to the merits of the measure. The Chair thinks that debate is not in order where unanimous consent is asked for to proceed to the consideration of a bill; and, unless the Senator from Kentucky desires to speak, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say a word. This is a very small matter. I believe the law can be executed very well just as it is. I believed these were proper amendments when they came before the Senate originally; I believe they are proper amendments now. The House has sent them over to us. When the Army bill was up before, in charge of the Senator from Virginia, I understood that as there was barely a quorum of the House, and an adjournment was being pressed, it was thought better to pass it even with these slight imperfections rather than send it back to the House and run the risk of not having a quorum and of having filibustering and more trouble. The result was that we sent it to the President; he signed it; it is now the law; but there are two words wrong that we knew were wrong at the time, but we let them go, believing that de minimis, an old maxim in our profession, would apply. But the House seems to have thought they were of sufficient importance to send us over a bill to correct them, and I think we ought to pass it at once. No hurt will be done if we do not pass the bill, because these words do not seriously affect the bill; but it is better to correct the errors. If we did wrong before, that is no reason why we should persist now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 712) providing for filling vacancies in the office of Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2337) to allow John Merryman and Frank Brown, of Maryland, to import and land cattle for breeding purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1627) authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the Wabash River; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

REPORT OF FISH COMMISSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that a message be sent to the House of Representatives asking for the return of a concurrent resolution passed yesterday, ordering the printing of the report of the Commission on Fish and Fisheries. There was an error in the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 697) to establish post-roads in certain States therein named;

An act (S. No. 674) for the benefit of the widow and children of General James Shields, and to increase the pension of Caroline S. Webster; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 5) relative to certain accepted drafts and other papers in the Department of State.

TREASURY ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the resolution submitted by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] which will be reported:

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution submitted by Mr. ALLISON on the 27th instant:

Resolved, That all the testimony taken by the select committee investigating Treasury accounts be reported to the Senate and printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I hope that in the absence of the chairman of the committee, who is necessarily absent, the Senator from Iowa will allow this resolution to go over, as we have one more appropriation bill that we can consider to-day. I wish to ask the Senate to consider an appropriation bill, which the Committee on Appropriations have ordered me to lay before the Senate, making appropriations to pay the fees of the United States marshals and their general deputies. Of course if objection is made the bill must go over; but if none is made, it can be considered now. I should like to be allowed to have it presented before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. On the request of the Senator from Kentucky, and in the absence of the Senator from West Virginia, the chairman of the committee having charge of this subject, and inasmuch as considerable opposition was developed yesterday to the passage of the resolution on the democratic side of the Chamber, I am quite willing it shall go over for the present.

Mr. BECK. That being the case, I desire to make a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves to postpone the resolution which has been read.

The motion was agreed to.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR MARSHALS.

Mr. BECK. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 2382) making appropriations to pay fees of United States marshals and their general deputies. The recommendation of the committee is that the bill be passed without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator from Kentucky to state to us—for one I have not the bill before me—what are the sections of the statutes on which denunciations of felony and imprisonment and so on are founded?

Mr. BECK. They are as follows:

SEC. 3678. All sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others.

Section 3679 provides:

No Department of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

Section 3680 provides:

No part of the appropriations which may be at any time made for the contingent expenses of either House of Congress shall be applied as extra allowance to any clerk, messenger, or attendant of the two Houses, or either of them, or as payment or compensation to any clerk, messenger, or other attendant of the two Houses, or either of them, unless such clerk, messenger, or other attendant be so employed by a resolution of one of the Houses; or to any other than the ordinary expenditures of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 3681 provides:

No accounting or disbursing officer of the Government shall allow or pay any account or charge whatever, growing out of, or in any way connected with, any commission or inquiry, except courts-martial or courts of inquiry in the military or naval service of the United States, until special appropriations shall have been made by law to pay such accounts and charges. This section, however, shall not extend to the contingent fund connected with the foreign intercourse of the Government, placed at the disposal of the President.

Section 3682 provides:

No moneys appropriated for contingent, incidental, or miscellaneous purposes shall be expended or paid for official or clerical compensation.

Section 3683 provides:

No part of the contingent fund appropriated to any Department, bureau, or office, shall be applied to the purchase of any articles except such as the head of the Department shall deem necessary and proper to carry on the business of the Department, bureau, or office, and shall, by written order, direct to be procured.

Section 3690 provides:

All balances of appropriations contained in the annual appropriation bills and made specifically for the service of any fiscal year, and remaining unexpended at the expiration of such fiscal year, shall only be applied to the payment of expenses properly incurred during that year, or to the fulfillment of contracts properly made within that year; and balances not needed for such purposes shall be carried to the surplus fund. This section, however, shall not apply to appropriations known as permanent or indefinite appropriations.

These are all, I believe, as the Senator from New York will observe, to which the bill refers.

Mr. CONKLING. Has the Senator title 26 before him?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir; title 26 will be found on page 352.

Mr. CONKLING. Now I should like to make an inquiry about that. If the Senator will turn to page 354 of the Revised Statutes he will see section 2012 and I call his attention to that and to the two or three succeeding sections as the foundation of my inquiry. I find in this bill:

And no part of the money hereby appropriated is appropriated to pay any compensation, fees, or expenses under any of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing—

And so on. The Senator will observe by the sections to which I have referred him that they direct court to be opened, to remain open from day to day, and one of them directs that—

Whenever, from any cause, the judge of the circuit court in any judicial circuit is unable to perform and discharge the duties herein imposed, he is required to select and assign to the performance thereof, in his place, such one of the judges of the district courts within his circuit as he may deem best; and upon such selection and assignment being made, the district judge so designated shall perform and discharge, in the place of the circuit judge, all the duties, powers, and obligations imposed and conferred upon the circuit judge by the provisions hereof.

And the next section provides:

The preceding section shall be construed to authorize each of the judges of the circuit courts of the United States to designate one or more of the judges of the district courts within his circuit to discharge the duties arising under this title.

So that provision is made covering every contingency for keeping open the court from day to day and from time to time. I wish to inquire of the Senator whether his understanding of the pending bill is that it forbids the expenditure of money to pay marshals, deputy marshals, officials, clerks, in the language of these various sections to which the Senator has called attention to enable this portion of the statute to be executed. I do not know that I make my question plain.

Mr. BECK. Perfectly so to my mind.

Mr. CONKLING. I will thank the Senator to give me his view upon that.

Mr. BECK. My view of it is worth no more than that of any other Senator, and not so much as that of some who have examined it more carefully. It is by mere accident that I have charge of the bill to-day, owing to the absence of the chairman and senior members of the committee.

My understanding of this bill is that it does not in any way interfere or seek to interfere with the duties imposed upon the courts by sections 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, and so on, referred to by the Senator from New York, and all appropriations for the pay of supervisors are made in the permanent annual appropriations, and therefore there is no money appropriated by this bill for the payment of the officers appointed by the courts under the sections referred to.

I understand that this means that the money hereby appropriated shall not be applied—

To pay any compensation, fees, or expenses under any of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment, employment, or payment of general or special deputy marshals for services in connection with registration or elections on election day.

The provisions for the payment of general and special deputy marshals for such services seem to me to begin at section 2030 of title 26. All that this bill seeks to do is to prohibit the payment of the money hereby appropriated as compensation or as expenses for general and special deputy marshals whose services are provided for from section 2021 on to and including perhaps section 2031. All the other clauses in the statutes, so far as the courts are concerned, for the appointment of supervisors and the other machinery directed by that title, I understand this bill does not in any regard interfere with. The true meaning of it is not to repeal everything in title 26, nor to repeal any part of it, and not to fail to make appropriations for all that is provided for in title 26, but only distinctly to say that no part of the money appropriated by this bill shall be applied to the payment of general and special deputy marshals who may be appointed under certain sections of that title in connection with registration and election. That is the class of marshals referred to. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. CONKLING. I thought of this question and looked at it some days ago when another bill was before the Senate; and when I asked the Senator from Kentucky my question, I did not anticipate the answer he has given. I think if he will review these sections for a moment he will reverse his opinion. A section of the Revised Statutes to be found on page 729 contains these words:

Fees of supervisors of elections:

To pay supervisors of elections compensation apart from and in excess of all fees allowed by law for the performance of any duty as circuit court commissioner.

That is the permanent appropriation to which the honorable Senator referred as existing in respect of supervisors. That section of the statutes reveals an accident or an error by which in the statute an arbitrary distinction was made, not made at all in the act from which it was codified, between supervisors and deputy marshals. If the honorable Senator will look at page 438 of volume 16 of the Statutes at Large, which I will send him in a moment, he will find a section which is the foundation of this permanent appropriation section, the latter half of which I will read:

And there shall be allowed and paid to each and every supervisor of election, and each and every special deputy marshal who shall be appointed and shall perform his duty under the provisions of this act, compensation at the rate of $5 per day for each and every day he shall have actually been on duty, not exceeding ten days.

The Senator will see that that is the act of Congress which is codified at page 729 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BECK. What is the date of that law?

